

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. COURT RULES.

COURT OF APPEALS OF MISSOURI.

Rules of Practice in the Springfield Court of Appeals.

Adopted August 19, 1909.

Rule 1.—PRESIDING JUDGE. The Presiding Judge shall superintend all matters of order in the court room.

Rule 2.—WORDS APPELLANT AND RESPONDENT, WHAT THEY INCLUDE. Whenever the word appellant or respondent appear in these rules it shall be taken to mean and include plaintiff or defendant in error, or other parties occupying like positions in a cause, and when the term appeal is used it shall be held to include writs of error, unless the contrary appears.

Rule 3.—MOTIONS. All motions shall be in writing, signed by counsel, and filed with the clerk of the court. No paper shall be received or filed by the clerk in any cause pending in this court, unless indorsed with the names of one or more of the parties, appellant or respondent, the general nature of the motion, and the name of the counsel tendering it. The clerk will enter on the clerk's motion docket, and also on the motion docket of the court, all motions filed, as well as the date of filing, immediately on filing thereof. No motion shall be argued orally, unless by leave of court.

Rule 4.—HEARING OF CAUSES. Except in causes whereof this court has original jurisdiction, no cause shall be heard before it is reached in its regular order on the docket, unless, in the opinion of the court, circumstances exist which entitle it to precedence; and any motion to advance a cause on the docket shall be accompanied by affidavits showing particularly the facts on which such motion is based. When a cause is advanced, the record, as well as the briefs, shall be printed, unless the court shall otherwise order.

Rule 5.—DIMINUTION OF RECORD. No suggestion of diminution of record in civil cases will be entertained by the court after joinder in error, except by consent of parties.

Rule 6.—CERTIORARI TO PERFECT RECORD. Whenever a writ of certiorari to perfect record is applied for, the motion shall state the defect in the transcript which it is designed to supply, and shall be verified by affidavit. At least twenty-four hours' notice shall be given to the adverse party, or his attorney, previous to making the application. The court may of its own motion, at any time, require the clerk of the trial court to send up a complete transcript.

Rule 7.—NOTICE OF WRITS OF ERROR. All notices of writs of error, with the acceptance, waiver or return of service indorsed thereon, shall be filed with the clerk of this court, and by him attached to the transcript in the cause, and shall be the only evidence that such notice has been given.

Rule 8.—REVIEWING INSTRUCTIONS. For the purpose of reviewing the action of the trial court in giving and refusing instructions, it shall not be necessary to set out the evidence in the bill of exceptions; but it shall be sufficient to state that there was evidence tending to prove the particular fact or facts. If the parties disagree as to what fact or facts the evidence tends to prove, then the evidence of the witnesses may be stated in a narrative form, avoiding repetition and omitting all immaterial matter.

Rule 9.—BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS IN EQUITY CASES. In cases of equitable jurisdiction, the whole of the evidence shall be embodied in the bill of exceptions; provided that it shall be sufficient to state the legal effect of documentary evidence where there is no dispute as to the admissibility or legal effect thereof; and provided, further, that parol evidence, whether given orally in court or by deposition, may be reduced to a narrative form where this can be done, and at the same time preserve the full force and effect of the evidence.

Rule 10.—DUTY OF THE CLERK IN MAKING UP TRANSCRIPTS. The clerks of the several circuit courts and other courts of first instance, before which a trial of any cause is had in which an appeal is taken (unless exception is saved to the regularity of the process or its execution, or to the acquiring by the court of jurisdiction of the cause), in making out transcripts of the record for this court, shall not set out the original or any subsequent writ, or the return thereof; but in lieu thereof shall say (e. g.): "Summons issued on the — day of —, 190—, executed on the — day of —, 190—;" and if any pleading be amended, the clerk in making out transcripts, will treat the last amended pleading as the only one of that class in the cause, and shall not set out any abandoned pleading nor caption or notices or certificates to depositions, nor insert in the transcript any matter touching the organization of the court, or any order of continuance, or any motion, or affidavit in the cause, unless the same be specially called for by bill of exceptions.

Rule 11.—PRESUMPTION THAT BILL OF EXCEPTIONS CONTAINS ALL THE EVIDENCE. The only purpose of a statement in a bill of exceptions, that it sets out all the evidence in a cause, being that this court may have before it the same matter which was decided by the trial court, it shall be presumed as a matter of fact, in all bills of exceptions, that they contain all the evidence applicable to any particular ruling to which exception is saved.

Rule 12.—ABSTRACTS IN LIEU OF TRANSCRIPTS WHEN FILED AND SERVED. In those cases where the appellant shall, under the provisions of section 813, Revised Statutes of 1899, file in this court a copy of the judgment, order or decree, in lieu of a complete transcript, he shall deliver to the respondent a copy of his abstract at least thirty days before the cause is set for hearing, and shall in like time file six copies thereof with the clerk of this court. If the respondent is not satisfied with such abstract, he shall deliver to the appellant a complete or additional abstract at least fifteen days before the cause is set for hearing, and within like time file six copies thereof with the clerk of this court. Objections to such complete or additional abstracts shall be filed with the clerk of this court within ten days after service of such abstract upon the appellant, and a copy of such objections shall be served upon the appellant in like time.

Rule 13.—PRINTED TRANSCRIPTS. A printed and indexed transcript duly certified by the clerk of the trial court may be filed instead of a manuscript record, and in all cases six printed and indexed uncertified copies of the entire record filed and served within the time prescribed by these rules for serving abstracts, shall be deemed a full compliance with this rule, and dispense with the necessity of any further transcript.

Rule 14.—ABSTRACTS, WHEN FILED AND SERVED. In all cases where a complete written or printed transcript is brought to this court in the first instance, the appellant shall make and deliver to respondent a copy of his abstract of the record at least twenty days before the day on which the cause is set for hearing, and file six copies thereof with the clerk of this court not later than the day preceding the one on which the cause is set for hearing. If the respondent desires to file a further or additional abstract, he shall deliver to the appellant a copy thereof at least five days before the cause is set for hearing, and file six copies thereof with the clerk of this court on the day preceding that on which the cause is to be heard.

Rule 15.—ABSTRACTS, WHAT THEY SHALL CONTAIN. Abstracts shall be printed in not less than ten point (long primer) type, and shall be paged and have a complete index at the end thereof, and shall set forth so much of the record as is necessary to a full and complete understanding of all the questions presented to this court for decision. Where there is no question made over the pleadings, or over deeds or other documentary evidence, it shall be sufficient to set out the substance of such pleadings or documentary evidence. The evidence of witnesses shall be stated in a narrative form, except when the questions and answers are necessary to a complete understanding of the evidence. When there is any question made concerning the pleadings, or the admissibility or legal effect of any documentary evidence, the pleadings and such documentary evidence must be set out in full with the indorsements thereon; and in all other matters the abstract must set forth a copy of so much of the record as is necessary to be consulted in the disposition of the errors assigned.

Rule 16.—WHEN APPEAL IS RETURNABLE; CERTIFICATE OF JUDGMENT; TRANSCRIPT. In all cases where appeals shall have been taken or writs of error sued out to this court after October 1, 1909, the appellant shall file with the clerk of this court a full transcript, or in lieu thereof, a certificate of the judgment as provided by section 813, Revised Statutes, 1899, within the time designated in said section, and the date of the allowance of the appeal, and not the time of filing the bill of exceptions after the appeal is granted, shall determine the term of this court to which such appeal is returnable. When the appellant, for any reason, cannot or does not file a complete transcript, he shall file, within the time allowed by said section, a certificate of the judgment, and shall thereafter file a complete transcript and abstract of the record, or simply an abstract of the record.

Rule 17.—COSTS, WHEN ALLOWED FOR PRINTING ABSTRACTS AND RECORDS. Costs will not be allowed either party for any abstracts filed in lieu of a full transcript under section 813, Revised Statutes, 1899, which fails to make a full presentation of all the record necessary to be considered in disposing of all the questions arising in the cause. In those cases brought to this court by a copy of the judgment, order or decree, instead of on a full transcript, and in which the appellant shall file in this court a printed copy of the entire record, as and for an abstract, costs may be allowed for printing the same.

In any case in which a manuscript record has been or may hereafter be filed in this court, a reasonable fee for printing an abstract of the record, or the entire record, may be taxed as costs upon the written stipulation of both parties to that effect. The affidavit of the printer shall be received in every case, where costs may properly be taxed for printing, as prima facie evidence of the reasonableness thereof; and if the adverse party objects thereto, such objection shall be filed within ten days after service of notice of the amount of such charge. Not exceeding sixty-five cents a printed page will be allowed in any case for printing abstracts or transcripts.

Rule 18.—BRIEFS, WHAT TO CONTAIN AND WHEN SERVED. The appellant shall deliver to the opposing party a copy of his brief thirty days before the day on which the cause is set for hearing, and the respondent shall deliver a copy of his brief to the opposing party at least ten days before the last named date, and the appellant shall deliver a copy of his brief in reply to the opposing party not later than the day preceding that on which the cause is set for hearing, and six copies of each brief shall be filed with the clerk on or before the last named date.

All briefs shall be printed in not less than ten point (long primer) type, and shall contain, separate and apart from the argument or discussion of authorities, a statement, in numerical order, of the points relied on, together with a citation of authorities appropriate under each point. Any brief failing to comply with this rule may be disregarded by the court.

The brief filed by appellant shall distinctly and separately allege the errors committed by the trial court, and no reference will be permitted at the argument to the errors not thus specified, unless for good cause shown this court shall otherwise direct.

Delivery of an abstract or brief to the attorney of record of the opposing party shall be deemed a delivery to such party under the foregoing rules, and the evidence of such delivery must be by the written acknowledgment of such opposing party or his attorney, or by the affidavit of the person making the service; and such evidence of service must be filed in this court with the abstract or brief.

Rule 19.—CITING AUTHORITIES IN BRIEFS. In citing authorities in support of any proposition, it shall be the duty of counsel to give names of the principal parties to any case cited from any report of adjudged cases, as well as the number of the volume and the page where the same will be found; and when reference is made to a passage in any elementary work or treatise, the number of the edition, the volume, the section, the paging or side paging shall be set forth.

Rule 20.—EXTENSION OF TIME. In no case will extension of time for filing statements, abstracts or briefs be granted, except upon affidavit showing satisfactory cause.

Rule 21.—PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH RULES 12, 14, 15, 16 AND 18. If any appellant in any civil cause shall fail to comply with the provisions of rules 12, 14, 15, 16 or 18, the court, when the cause is called for hearing, will dismiss the appeal, or writ of error, or, at the option of the respondent, continue the cause at the cost of the party in default. No oral argument will be heard from any counsel failing to comply with the provisions of rule 18, unless said counsel is prevented from doing so by failure of opposing counsel.

Rule 22.—AGREED STATEMENT OR CAUSE OF ACTION. Parties may, in the courts of first instance, agree upon any statement of the cause of action, the defense and the evidence, together with the rulings of the court thereupon, and the exceptions saved to any rulings, which intelligibly present to this court the matters intended to be reviewed; and this statement, with a certificate by the judge before whom the cause was tried, that the same is a substantial history of what occurred, at the trial of the cause, shall be treated as the record in this court.

Rule 23.—MOTIONS FOR REHEARING. Motions for rehearing must be accompanied by a brief, printed or typewritten, statement of the reasons for a reconsideration of the cause, and must be founded on papers showing clearly that some question decisive of the case, and duly submitted by counsel, has been overlooked by the court, or that the decision is in conflict with an express statute, or with a controlling decision of the Supreme Court, or with a decision of one of the other Courts of Appeals; and the question so submitted by the counsel and overlooked by the court, or the statute with which the decision conflicts, or the controlling or conflicting decision, as the case may be, must be distinctly and particularly set forth in the motion, otherwise the motion will be disregarded. Such motion must be filed within ten days after the opinion of the court shall be filed, and notice of the filing thereof must be served on the opposite counsel. After a cause has been once reheard, and the motion for rehearing overruled, no further motion for rehearing or motion to set aside the order overruling the motion for rehearing, by the same party, will be entertained by the court or filed by the clerk, nor will any motions to certify the case to the Supreme Court be filed or entertained. At the time of filing of such motion for rehearing, three copies thereof shall be deposited with the clerk for the use of the judges.

Rule 24.—ORAL ARGUMENTS. When a cause is called for argument, the appellant will state the cause and proceed with his argument; the respondent will thereupon make his statement of the cause and proceed with his argument, the appellant in error replying, if he desires, provided he has not consumed all of his time in opening. The whole time consumed by either party in the statement and argument shall not exceed sixty minutes, unless the court, for cause shown, and on application made before the commencement of the argument in the case, shall otherwise order.

Cross appeals shall be treated as one cause, and the plaintiff in the trial court shall be entitled to open and close the argument.

Rule 25.—NOTICE ON MOTION TO DISMISS OR AFFIRM. A party in any cause, desiring to present a motion either to dismiss an appeal or writ of error, or to affirm the judgment of the trial court, shall notify the adverse party, or his attorney of record, in writing, of his intention to file said motion at least five days before the same is filed, and shall accompany said notice with a copy of said motion, and in all cases the court will require satisfactory proof that proper notice has been given.

Rule 26.—MOTION FOR AFFIRMANCE. On motion for affirmance under section 812, Revised Statutes, 1890, the mere fact that the appellant has on file, or presents a copy of the transcript, at the time such motion is made, shall not, of itself, be deemed good cause within the meaning of said law.

Rule 27.—APPEARANCE OF COUNSEL. The counsel who represent the parties in the trial court, in any cause coming to this court, will be held to represent the same parties, respectively, in this court; but should other counsel be engaged or retained in the cause, they must enter their appearance in writing, the counsel for the appellant ten days, and the counsel for the respondent five days before the first day of the term to which the appeal or writ of error is returnable; and if counsel are employed after said time, their appearance must be entered as soon as they are retained. Counsel failing to comply with this rule will not be recognized in a cause, unless the consent, in writing, of the counsel of the opposite party to such appearance be filed with the clerk ten days before the day on which the cause is set for hearing. Appearance may be entered by written notice to the clerk of this court, giving the name and address of the counsel. Additional counsel may enter their appearance at any time before the cause is called for hearing.

Rule 28.—ALLOWANCE TO GARNISHEES. Garnishees claiming any allowance in this court must do so on or before a final submission of the cause on briefs. They shall accompany the claim for allowance with a sworn statement of expenditures paid or incurred upon the appeal.

Rule 29.—SERVICE OF ABSTRACTS AND BRIEFS IN CRIMINAL CASES. The attorneys for appellants, in criminal cases in which transcripts have been filed in the office of the clerk of this court sixty days before the day the cause is docketed for hearing, shall, at least thirty days before the day of hearing, file in the office of the clerk of this court a printed statement, containing apt references to the pages of the transcript, assignment of errors and brief of points and argument, and serve a copy thereof upon the attorney acting as prosecuting officer in the trial court or his successor in office, and thereupon, such attorney shall, fifteen days before the day of trial, serve defendant or his counsel with a copy of his statement and brief.

When a criminal case shall be advanced on the docket, the court shall designate the time for filing statements and briefs.

When appellants have been allowed to prosecute their appeals as poor persons, by the trial court, counsel will be permitted to file typewritten briefs and statements. In cases in which the transcript has been filed thirty days before the day on which the cause is docketed, counsel for appellant shall file their statements, briefs and assignments of error fifteen days before the hearing, and the prosecuting officer, his brief and statement five days before the hearing.

Rule 30.—RETURN OF ORIGINAL WRITS. Original writs or other process issued by the court, or by any judge in vacation, may be made returnable to the court as such judge in vacation may order.

Rule 31.—WITHDRAWING RECORDS. No record or any of the files in any cause shall be taken from the clerk's office, but any party interested may make a copy of any record in the clerk's presence.

SCHROEDER v. TURPIN.

(Springfield Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

COURTS (§ 231*)—JURISDICTION—ISSUES—TITLE TO REALTY.

A suit to set aside a deed for fraud directly involves title to real estate, within the Constitution, defining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and when appealed to the Court of Appeals will be transferred to the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 657; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Howell County; W. N. Evans, Judge.

Action by William G. Schroeder, revived in name of Anna Kendall, against Aurelius C. Turpin. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Cause transferred to the Supreme Court.

J. N. Burroughs, for appellant. O. L. Haydon and W. P. Campbell, for respondent.

GRAY, J. This is an action in equity to set aside certain deeds to lands situated in Howell county, on the alleged ground of fraud in their procurement. Under the decisions of the courts of this state, the title to real estate is directly involved, within the meaning of the Constitution, defining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Overton v. Overton, 131 Mo. 559, 33 S. W. 1; Lappin v. Crawford, 92 Mo. App. 453; Reed v. Colp, 213 Mo. 577, 112 S. W. 255.

This court, therefore, has no jurisdiction of the case, for the reason that the jurisdiction of such matter is, by the Constitution of the state, vested solely in the Supreme Court, and accordingly the cause is transferred to that court. All concur.

FREEMAN et al. v. ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO.
(Springfield Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1151*)—DISPOSITION OF CASE ON APPEAL—REMITTITUR OF EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

Where the court erroneously confined the jury to one element of damages and plaintiff did not complain thereof, the verdict, excessive under the instructions, though not excessive under the evidence, will be reduced by the amount of the excess.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4498-4506; Dec. Dig. § 1151.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 163*)—SHIPPING CONTRACTS—RECITALS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A recital in a shipping contract, limiting the carrier's liability, that it has two rates for shipment, and that the rate named in the contract is a special rate and is less than the rate charged for shipments at carrier's risk, in consequence of which reduced rate the agreement limiting the carrier's liability is made, is prima facie evidence that the rate named is a reduced rate, and the burden of proving the contrary is on the shipper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 724; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 156*)—SHIPPING CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A shipping contract stipulating that in consideration of a reduced rate the shipper releases the carrier for breach of any contract to furnish cars at any particular time releases a claim of the shipper for damages for failure to furnish cars at a time agreed on, which damages had accrued at the time of the signing of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

4. RELEASE (§ 50*)—PLEADING IN AVOIDANCE—NECESSITY.

A plaintiff claiming that the release pleaded by defendant was fraudulently procured must tender the issue by proper replication, as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 654 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 670), or the issue is not raised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 90; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Phelps County; L. B. Woodside, Judge.

Action by L. L. Freeman and another against the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. F. Evans, J. T. Woodruff, Edgar P. Mann, and Joseph B. Todd, for appellant. Lorts & Breuer and C. C. Bland, for respondents.

COX, J. This is an action for damages for failure of defendant to furnish cars for a shipment of cattle at the time agreed upon by plaintiffs and agent of the defendant. The petition declares upon a contract to furnish two cars at Rolla August 4, 1908, and alleges that they were not furnished until August 5th, and in consequence thereof plaintiffs' cattle were required to be kept in the stock pens of defendant and suffered shrinkage. Damages are also claimed by reason of expenses for feeding and for decline in the market. The answer is a general denial and a plea of release under the shipping contract executed when the cattle were shipped on the 5th. Replication is a general denial. There was a trial by jury and verdict for plaintiffs for $174.25. Afterward plaintiffs remitted $74.25, and judgment was entered for $100. Defendant appealed.

Appellant contends that the verdict is excessive after the remittitur was entered, and that error was committed by the court in giving and refusing instructions. The verdict is not excessive under the testimony, but is excessive under the issue submitted to the jury by the instructions. The jury were by the instructions restricted to one element of damages—that of shrinkage in the weight of the cattle—and, if it is to be confined to that element alone, the contention of appellant is right that under the evidence the highest amount that could be recovered was $92.94. Why the jury were restricted to that one element of damages under the evidence in this case does not appear, but plaintiffs are not complaining and the judgment could be released of its excessiveness by a remittitur here if that were its only defect.

The evidence shows that on August 2d plaintiffs ordered two cars for August 4th, and were notified by defendant's agent on August 4th that the cars would be there ready to load at 7 p. m. that day. Plaintiffs then drove their cattle to Rolla, and placed them in defendant's stock pens ready to load. The cars did not come until late August 5th, and the cattle were loaded about 8 p. m. that day, and started to their destination—East St. Louis, Ill. A shipper's contract was signed by plaintiff Lennox, in whose name the shipment was made, and the agent of the defendant. This contract was upon a blank furnished by the company, and recited that the company has two rates for shipment of freight, and that the rate named in this contract, to wit, $26.88 per car, is a special rate, and is less than the rate charged for shipments at carrier's risk, in consideration of which reduced rate "it is mutually agreed between the parties hereto as follows:" Then follow 16 provisions, among which we find the following: "(7) For the consideration aforesaid the shipper agrees to waive and release, and does hereby release the company from any and all liability * * * for breach of any alleged contract to furnish cars at any particular time, and the shipper hereby releases, and does waive and bar any and all causes of action for any damage whatsoever that has accrued to the shipper by any written or verbal contract prior to the execution hereof, concerning said stock, or any of them." It is contended by appellant that this contract is an absolute defense, and that by it plaintiffs released any claim they may have had for damages on account of failure of defendant to furnish cars on the day it agreed to, and the refusal of the court to so instruct the jury is now urged for a reversal. It is conceded that one holding a claim like this for damages against a railroad may release it for a valuable consideration, and, that if, as recited in this contract, plaintiffs were given a reduced rate on this shipment in consideration for this release, that would be a sufficient consideration to support it.

The real question at issue here is as to the effect of the recitals in this contract that the rate there charged—$26.88 per car—is a special and reduced rate. Appellant contends that this recital must be taken as prima facie evidence of its truth, and therefore casts the burden of proving that it was not a reduced rate upon the plaintiffs, and, to support this contention, cites McFadden v. Railroad, 92 Mo. 343, 4 S. W. 689, 1 Am. St. Rep. 721, Wyrick v. Railroad, 74 Mo. App. 406, Shelton and Childress v. Railroad, 131 Mo. App. 560, 110 S. W. 627, and Mires v. Railroad, 134 Mo. App. 379, 114 S. W. 1052, which are squarely in point, and sustain appellant's position. To controvert this we are cited by respondent's counsel to the case of George v. Railroad, 214 Mo. 551, 113 S. W. 1099, 127 Am. St. Rep. 690, which, it is contended, establishes a different doctrine; but a close examination of that case convinces us that, instead of promulgating a different doctrine, it in reality supports the other cases. In the George case the contract recited: "Said rate being less than the rate charged for shipments transported at carrier's risk, for which reduced rate and other considerations, it is mutually agreed between the parties hereto as follows:" No special rate was mentioned, so that it could not be ascertained by an examination of the contract what rate was charged. The court held in that case that the failure to specify the rate rendered the recital that the rate charged was a reduced rate nugatory, and, by placing it upon that ground, held inferentially that if the rate charged had been inserted, as it was in this case, then the recital in the contract would have been prima facie evidence that the shipment was made at a reduced rate.

We appreciate the force of the suggestion by respondent's counsel that the logic of requiring the rate charged to be inserted would also require the regular rate to be inserted, so the court and jury might determine whether there was a substantial reduction, or whether the whole matter was a mere pretense to enable the carrier to escape its common-law liability, but as the Supreme Court has squarely held in McFadden v. Railroad, 92 Mo. 343, 4 S. W. 689, 1 Am. St.

Rep. 721, to the contrary, and has practically held the same thing in the George Case, supra, we are bound by these decisions, and must, therefore, hold that in this case the contract in evidence was prima facie evidence that the rate charged—$26.88 per car—was a reduced rate, and, there being no other evidence on the question, the instruction asked by defendant upon that question should have been given.

It is contended by respondents that the damages for failure to furnish the cars at the time agreed upon had already accrued at the time the shipping contract was signed, and therefore could not have been contemplated by the parties in executing this contract. The contract itself precludes us from adopting this theory. A mere reading of paragraph 7 of the contract, above set out, will show that it was prepared for the very purpose of covering cases like this, and that it does cover it. If this matter was not contemplated, and was not, in fact, a part of the consideration for the reduced rate, yet, if there was no fraud, imposition, or coercion used in securing the signature of plaintiff Lennox to the contract, he must, after having signed it, be conclusively presumed to have known its contents at the time he signed it. If plaintiffs contend that the signature of Lennox to this contract which includes the release pleaded by defendant was fraudulently or wrongfully procured, they should tender that issue by proper allegations in the replication as provided in section 654, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 670). In the absence of such pleading, that issue is not in the case. If it be true that the rate charged was not a reduced rate, this may be shown upon a retrial of the case.

Holding, as we do, that under the evidence as preserved in this record the court erred in refusing defendant's instruction as to the effect of the shipping contract, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. All concur.

LONG et al. v. GREENE COUNTY ABSTRACT & LOAN CO. et al.

COURTS (§ 231*)—JURISDICTION—ACTIONS INVOLVING REAL ESTATE.

An action which has for its object, in part, the setting aside of a deed of trust of real estate as without consideration and fraudulently procured, involves title to real estate, and an appeal therein to the Court of Appeals must be certified to the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 657; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greene County; Alfred Page, Judge.

Action by Oscar Long and another against the Greene County Abstract & Loan Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed to the Court of Appeals. Cause certified to the Supreme Court.

W. R. Self and T. J. Murray, for appellants.
Henry C. Young, for respondents.

COX, J. This is an action which has for its object, in part, the setting aside of a deed of trust covering certain real estate in the city of Springfield, on the ground that it was without consideration and fraudulently procured. Under the authority of the case of Overton v. Overton, 131 Mo. 559, 33 S. W. 1, this action involves the title to real estate, and must, therefore, be certified to the Supreme Court, which is accordingly done. All concur.

O'DAY et al. v. SANFORD et al.

(Springfield Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. PLEADING (§ 350*)—JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS—NATURE OF MOTION.

While a motion for judgment on the pleadings is in the nature of a demurrer, in that it admits all facts well pleaded, it differs therefrom, in that, if the motion is sustained, judgment goes at once for the moving party, while on demurrer the judgment is not final if the other party pleads over; but, in both cases, the motion raises only an issue of law.

2. WILLS (§ 748*)—ACTION BY LEGATEE—PROMISSORY NOTE.

A legatee to whom the executors have assigned, as part of his share under the will, a negotiable note executed to testator, occupies the same position as testator would have occupied in suing thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1923; Dec. Dig. § 748.*]

3. COURTS (§ 91*)—RULE OF DECISION—DECISION OF SUPREME COURT.

The Court of Appeals is bound by a decision of the Supreme Court in a case where the question decided was in issue.

4. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 443*)—RIGHT OF ACTION—ACTION BY MAKER.

That the payee of a note was also one of the makers would not prevent his maintaining an action at law thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1405; Dec. Dig. § 443.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greene County; James T. Neville, Judge.

Action by John O'Day and another against E. L. Sanford and another. From a judgment for defendants on the pleadings, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions for trial on the merits.

W. D. Tatlow, for appellants. J. T. White, for respondents.

GRAY, J. On August 27, 1908, the appellants filed in the circuit court of Greene county, Mo., the following petition: "Plaintiffs state that, for value received, the de-defendants executed and delivered to John O'Day the following note and obligation, to wit: 'Springfield, Mo., Dec. 30, 1898. Three months after date we promise to pay to the order of John O'Day at Exchange Bank of Springfield, Mo., five hundred dollars, for value received, without defalcation or discount, with eight per cent. interest after due until paid. For newspaper mail. John O'Day. E. L. Sanford. H. S. Jewell.' Plaintiffs further state that on or about the day of August, 1901, the said John O'Day, the ancestor of the plaintiffs, departed this life testate and appointed by his last will and testament E. W. Bannister and Sue I. B. O'Day, the executors thereof, who, after his said will was duly probated in the probate court of this county, duly qualified as said executors. Plaintiffs further state that afterwards, and under the terms of said will and the orders of said court, the said note was duly assigned and transferred to these plaintiffs by said executors as a part of their distributive share of the said estate of John O'Day, deceased. Wherefore plaintiffs pray judgment against defendants on said note for $500, with interest from maturity at 8 per cent. per annum, and for cost of suit, and for such other relief as the plaintiffs may be entitled to thereon." In proper time the respondents answered, admitting the signing of the note, and alleging that the payee in said note, John O'Day, ancestor of the plaintiffs, signed said note as maker and as principal therein, and the respondents signed as sureties for him, and that O'Day retained said note in his possession until his death, and did not at any time negotiate or transfer the same to any person. The answer further alleged that no consideration was received by the respondents for signing said note. Appellants replied denying the allegations of the answer, except it was admitted that John O'Day, the payee, was also one of the signers, and expressly denied that respondents signed said note for the accommodation of O'Day, and alleged said note was signed by all the signers thereof in furtherance of a joint enterprise in which they were all interested, and that said O'Day did not receive anything from such joint enterprise, which was the purchase of a newspaper afterwards turned over to defendant Jewell, and whatever, if anything, was received from the sale of such paper, was received by the defendant Jewell. After the filing of this reply, the respondents filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which was sustained, and judgment entered.

A motion for judgment on the pleadings partakes of the nature of a demurrer, in that, it admits all facts that are well pleaded, but, if sustained, judgment goes at once, and in this it differs from a demurrer. If the demurrer is sustained, the order is not a final judgment. The party has a right to plead over. Sternberg v. Levy, 159 Mo. 617, 60 S. W. 1114, 53 L. R. A. 438. The motion, like the demurrer, raises an issue of law only. State ex rel. v. Simmons Hardware Co., 109 Mo. 118, 18 S. W. 1125, 15 L. R. A. 676. The motion for judgment is based upon the fact that John O'Day, the payee in the note, was also one of the makers thereof, and it is claimed that an action at law cannot be maintained on a note by the payee, if he is one of the makers, and this is the only question to be decided, as, from our view, the appellants stand in the same position that John O'Day would occupy, if alive and suing on the note in his own name.

In passing upon a question of law, it is the first duty of this court to examine the decisions of the Supreme Court of this state and ascertain if that court has decided the question, and, if it has, to follow its decision. Of course, this means that the question decided by the Supreme Court was one of the issues to be decided in the case. We believe that this question was before the Supreme Court in Willis v. Barron, 143 Mo. 450, 45 S. W. 239, 65 Am. St. Rep. 673. In that case the executrix of R. T. Willis, deceased, brought an action to recover one-half of the amount of two notes executed by the firm of Willis & Barron, composed of R. T. Willis and P. J. Barron, to R. T. Willis in his lifetime. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the circuit court, from which defendant appealed to the Kansas City Court of Appeals, and that court, upon a division of opinion, certified the cause to the Supreme Court. Judge Gantt states the point before the court as follows: "Appellant insists upon two propositions to reverse the judgment: First, that an action at law cannot be maintained by one partner upon a promissory note executed to him individually by the partnership of which he is a member." The authorities are reviewed at length, and the conclusion is reached that the action was properly brought and could be maintained. It will not be necessary to review the authorities cited by Judge Gantt, or to review his opinion, but simply to state that upon that authority we decide the question against the respondents.

The respondents have called our attention to the following cases from this state: Young v. Chew, 9 Mo. App. 387; Knaus v. Givens, 110 Mo. 58, 19 S. W. 535; First National Bank v. Payne, 111 Mo. 291, 20 S. W. 41, 33 Am. St. Rep. 520; Lowrie v. Zunkel, 49 Mo. App. 153. In Young v. Chew the action was by an indorsee against the makers of a note given by a firm to one of its members, and while the court said in that case, "It is not questioned that the payee himself could not have maintained a suit at law on account of the insuperable objection that he would have been both plaintiff and defendant in the same action," it was not necessary for the court to decide that question, and it was therefore dictum. In Knaus v. Givens the Supreme Court cites the case of Young v. Chew, and says of it the following: "The case asserts the correct doctrine that, notwithstanding no action of law can be maintained on a negotiable promissory note, executed by a firm to one of its members, yet it is well settled that this incapacity to sue does not attend the indorsee of such paper." But that case, like the Young Case, was an action by the indorsee. In Bank v. Payne a suit was brought upon the indorsement of the defendants of a note given by Robert H. Payne to himself, and he was one of the indorsers. Payne indorsed the note to the bank, and the action was brought in the name of the bank, and the only point really in the case was whether the bank, as indorsee, could maintain an action on the note, and the court held it could. And the same may be said of the case of Lowrie v. Zunkel. In that case one Zunkel made a note payable to himself and indorsed it, and the suit was brought by the indorsee.

If the cases cited by respondents were all of the Missouri authorities on the question, we would affirm the judgment; but the case of Willis v. Barron, above cited, is the last decision of the Supreme Court "upon the question." In that case the identical issue was presented that is presented here, while in the cases cited by respondents the question presented here was not an issue, and it was not necessary for the court to decide the same.

Taking this view of the cause, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to try the case on its merits. All concur.

WERTHEIMER-SWARTS SHOE CO. v. McDONALD.

1. PLEADING (§§ 354, 367*)—MOTIONS—INDEFINITENESS.

A motion to strike out an answer setting up breach of warranty because too indefinite and uncertain does not lie; the proper practice being by motion to make more definite and certain.

2. PLEADING (§ 352*)—STRIKING OUT—GROUNDS.

An answer to a complaint for the price of goods, which sets up a general denial and special pleas of breach of warranty, cannot be stricken as an entirety because the special pleas state no defense, since the general denial would be sufficient defense to the action.

3. PLEADING (§ 93*)—INCONSISTENT DEFENSES—SPECIAL PLEA.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 605 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 635), providing that a defendant may set forth in his answer as many defenses as he may have, provided they are not inconsistent with each other, a defendant in an action for price of goods may not set up a general denial and special pleas alleging a breach of warranty.

4. PLEADING (§§ 93, 352*)—SPECIAL PLEAS—WAIVER OF GENERAL ISSUE.

Where, in an action for the price of goods, the answer sets up a general denial and also special pleas alleging breach of warranty, the pleas, being inconsistent with the general denial, waived it, and a motion to strike out the entire answer for inconsistent defenses will not lie.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 189, 1086-1088½; Dec. Dig. §§ 93, 352.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 350*)—JUDGMENT ON PLEADING—NATURE.

A motion for judgment on pleadings partakes of the nature of a demurrer, in that it admits all the facts well pleaded, and, if sustained, judgment goes at once; while, if a demurrer is sustained, the party may plead over.

6. SALES (§ 435*)—ACTIONS FOR PRICE—BREACH OF WARRANTY—SUFFICIENCY OF SPECIAL PLEAS.

In an action for price of goods, special pleas setting up breach of warranty held to be sufficiently certain and definite to state a good defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 435.*]

7. SALES (§ 261*)—"EXPRESS WARRANTY"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

The sale of a chattel with any representation or positive affirmation of its quality and condition made with the intention of being relied on, and, in fact, relied upon, is an express warranty for the breach of which an action will lie; no special form of words being necessary to create such warranty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 727-735; Dec. Dig. § 261.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2613-2614; vol. 8, p. 7658.]

8. SALES (§ 261*)—EXPRESS WARRANTY—QUALITY.

A statement by the seller of chattels that his goods are equal in quality to other well-known articles similar in kind is an express warranty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 727-735; Dec. Dig. § 261.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greene County; James T. Neville, Judge.

Action by the Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Company against E. W. McDonald for the price of goods. From a judgment for plaintiff after a motion striking out the amended answer, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. T. White and R. H. Davis, for appellant.
O. R. Puckett and Hamlin & Seawell, for respondent.

NIXON, P. J. The petition in this case is as follows: "In the Circuit Court, January Term, 1908. State of Missouri, County of McDonald—ss.: Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Company, Plaintiff, v. E. W. McDonald, Defendant. Plaintiff states: That it is and at all times hereinafter mentioned was a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri. That defendant is justly and truly indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of two hundred and sixty-four dollars ($264.00), being the reasonable and agreed price of goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered by said plaintiff to the defendant during the month of May, 1907, at his special instance and request, full particulars of which will appear in the account herewith filed and marked 'Exhibit A.' That the annexed itemized account is just, true and correct and the same is due and remains payable; that all just and lawful offsets, payments and credits have been thereon allowed and that there is now unpaid and owing on said account, after allowing all just credits, deductions and offsets, the said sum of two hundred and sixty-four dollars, which accrued and became payable October 1, 1907. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against defendant for the sum of $264.00 with interest thereon at the legal rate of six per cent., from the first day of October, 1907, for costs herein to be taxed and all proper relief. O. R. Puckett, Attorney for Plaintiff." "Exhibit A," attached to the foregoing petition, is an itemized account of the goods alleged to have been purchased by the defendant. To the petition the defendant filed the following amended answer: "In the Circuit Court of Greene County, Missouri, January Term, 1909. Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Company, Plaintiff, v. E. W. McDonald, Defendant. Comes now the defendant, and for amended answer to plaintiff's petition denies each and every allegation in said petition contained, and, further, answering, this defendant says that on or about the _____ day of _____, 1907, defendant gave a verbal order to J. W. Sheppard, traveling salesman for plaintiff, for a bill of shoes amounting in price to $360, which shoes were to be shipped to defendant by plaintiff, and the bill therefor was by the terms of the agreement of purchase to be dated July 1, 1907, and due in 90 days thereafter; that Sheppard representing the plaintiff, in order to induce the defendant to make such order and purchase such shoes, on behalf of the plaintiff, represented, warranted, and stated to the defendant that the shoes handled by him for plaintiff and sold by plaintiff, and the shoes to be shipped to defendant on such order were of first-class quality, made of good leather for the style and price, were well put together, would wear well; that a guaranty of good quality went with every shoe to be delivered on the order; that the shoes were as good as or better than the shoes of the same and similar style and price sold by the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, whose shoes were well and favorably known in the community where defendant had his store, and as good as or better than other shoes of the same style and price sold in that community, and said Sheppard, on behalf of the plaintiff, at said time, further agreed as part of the contract of sale that plaintiff would warrant all of the shoes shipped on said order to be as above represented, and, in order to introduce the line of shoes mentioned in the order into that community, the plaintiff would at the next trip of the said Sheppard, which was to be about six months from the date above mentioned, take up all the shoes ordered and received by the defendant from the plaintiff and remaining unsold, provided the said shoes were not as above warranted, or were not of the quality as above represented by said Sheppard, or were not such as to give satisfaction to defendant and defendant's customers. Defendant further says that he relied upon said statements, warranties, and agreements and was induced thereby to give the order as above stated, and paid plaintiff $100 on account thereof, but that the plaintiff did not ship to the defendant shoes of the kind or quality ordered, but did ship a bill of shoes similar in number, size, and price, which shoes so shipped and delivered to the defendant were of inferior quality, made of poor and rotten leather, or imitation leather, were not well put together, but would tear and rip and go to pieces with ordinary wear of a few hours, and at most a few days, were not as good as the shoes of similar price and style sold in that community by Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, but were, in fact, worthless and unmerchantable. Defendant further says that neither said traveling salesman nor any one else representing plaintiff came to defendant's place of business in about six months or at any other time; that defendant, on discovering the kind and quality of the shoes shipped to him as aforesaid, notified the plaintiff and offered to return to plaintiff all the shoes shipped to him as aforesaid and remaining unsold, and plaintiff refused to accept the same; that defendant now has on hand ready to deliver to the plaintiff a quantity of shoes shipped to him as aforesaid, amounting in price, by the invoice thereof, to $268, and is ready and willing at all times to deliver same to the plaintiff. (2) Defendant for further answer and defense herein says that on or about the _____ day of _____, 1907, defendant gave a verbal order to J. W. Sheppard, traveling salesman for plaintiff, for a bill of shoes amounting in price to $360, which shoes were to be shipped to defendant by plaintiff and the bill therefor was, by the terms of the agreement to purchase, to be dated July 1, 1907, and due in 90 days thereafter; that said Sheppard, who was agent and traveling salesman for plaintiff, in order to induce the defendant to make such order and purchase such shoes, on behalf of plaintiff, represented, warranted, and stated to the defendant that the shoes handled by him for plaintiff, and sold by plaintiff, and the shoes to be shipped to defendant on such order, were of first-class quality, made of good leather for the style and price, were well put together, would wear well; that a warranty of quality went with every shoe to be delivered on the order; that said shoes were as good as or better than the shoes of the same and similar style and price sold by the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, whose shoes were well and favorably known in the community where the defendant had his store, and as good as or better than other shoes of the same style and price sold in that community. Defendant further says that he relied upon said statements, warranties, and agreements, and was induced thereby to give the order as above stated, but that plaintiff did not ship to the defendant shoes of the kind or quality ordered, but did ship to the defendant a bill of shoes similar in number, size, and price, which shoes so shipped and delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff were of inferior quality, made of poor and rotten leather, or imitation leather, and were not well put together, but would tear and rip and go to pieces with ordinary wear of a few hours and at most a few days, were not as good as the shoes of similar price and style sold in that community by Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, but were in fact worthless and unmerchantable. Wherefore defendant says that by reason of the premises there has been a failure of the consideration for the account sued on, and that defendant owes plaintiff nothing by reason thereof, and asks to be discharged with its costs. (3) Defendant, further answering and for further defense herein, says that on the — day of —, 1907, he agreed to purchase of the plaintiff a certain bill of shoes, the style and numbers of which, and the price of which, are given in the itemized statement attached to plaintiff's petition and marked 'Exhibit A,' for the price and sum of $360; that plaintiff shipped to defendant an invoice of shoes amounting to the said sum of $360 of the same style, numbers, and sizes as mentioned in said 'Exhibit A,' but that said shoes so shipped as aforesaid and received by defendant were made of poor and rotten leather, or imitation leather, and were not well put together, but would tear and rip and go to pieces with ordinary wear of a few days, and were in fact worthless and unmerchantable. Wherefore defendant says that by reason of the premises the consideration for the account sued on has wholly failed, and defendant asks to be discharged with his costs. (4) Defendant for further answer and counterclaim says that he in the month of —, 1907, ordered from plaintiff a bill of shoes amounting to $360 in price, as set forth in the first paragraph of this answer, and at the same time and as a part of the same transaction defendant ordered of and from the plaintiff another bill of shoes, to be shipped to defendant at an earlier date than the order first above mentioned, which other order was for shoes amounting to $150, which said sum defendant paid to plaintiff; that plaintiff accordingly shipped to defendant before the shipment of the larger order, to wit, in the month of —, 1907, shoes amounting in price to $150; that, when the defendant ordered the said last mentioned bill of shoes, the plaintiff represented, stated, and warranted the shoes to be shipped in pursuance to the order were of the best quality, made of good leather for the style and price, would wear well, were as good as or better in quality than the shoes of similar style and price sold in the community of defendant's store by the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company; that defendant relied upon said statements and warranties, and was induced thereby to make said order and said payment; that in truth and in fact the shoes shipped as aforesaid were of inferior quality, were made of poor leather, were not well put together, were not as good in quality as shoes of similar style and price sold by Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company in the community of defendant's store; that said shoes would rip, tear, and wear out with a few hours of ordinary use and wear and were and are in fact worthless and unmerchantable. Wherefore defendant says he has been damaged in the sum of $150, for which he prays judgment. (5) Defendant for another and further counterclaim herein says that on or about the — day of —, 1907, he gave a verbal order to plaintiff for a bill of shoes amounting in price to $360, the styles, numbers, and prices of which are stated in the itemized statement attached to plaintiff's petition and marked 'Exhibit A'; that plaintiff warranted, represented, and stated to defendant that the shoes ordered of plaintiff and to be shipped to defendant under said order were of first-class quality, made of good leather for the style and price, were well sewed and well put together, and would wear well; that the shoes shipped by plaintiff and received by defendant were of inferior quality, made of poor and rotten leather, or imitation leather, were not sewed and well put together, but would tear and rip and go to pieces with ordinary wear of a few days and were in fact worthless and unmerchantable. Defendant further says that, in making said contract of purchase, he relied upon the representation, warranties, and agreements so made as aforesaid, and that he paid to plaintiff on said order the sum of $100 before he discovered the worthless and unmerchantable condition of said shoes. Wherefore defendant says that by reason of the premises he has been damaged in the sum of $100, for which he prays judgment. R. H. Davis and J. T. White, Attorneys for Defendant."

Thereafter the plaintiff filed a motion to strike out the amended answer of the defendant, which motion is as follows: "Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Company, Plaintiff, v. E. W. McDonald, Defendant. Motion to Strike Out Defendant's Answer. Comes now the plaintiff, and moves the court to strike out each and every count in defendant's amended answer, viz., one, two, three, four, and five, for the reason that the facts as stated in each and every one of said counts constitutes no defense to plaintiff's cause of action as stated in the petition herein. And because the pretended representations and warranties therein stated are too indefinite and uncertain, in fact amounts to no warranty whatever. O. T. Hamlin, O. R. Puckett, Attorneys for Plaintiff."

Upon hearing this motion was by the trial court sustained, and, the defendant refusing to plead further, judgment was entered for the plaintiff in the sum of $262, the amount sued for, and costs. The defendant in due time and mode perfected his appeal. The question presented to this court is as to the propriety of the trial court's action in sustaining the above motion, striking out the defendant's amended answer, and in entering judgment for the plaintiff.

This question is one solely as to the law under the rules of pleading and practice in our state. The most cursory examination of the answer in this case shows, first, a general denial of each and every allegation in the petition, and, following the general denial, five other separate defenses are attempted to be set out by the pleader in his answer. In effect and logically all the special pleas, considered together, confess the plaintiff's cause of action, and then attempt to set up warranties growing out of the sale of the goods mentioned in plaintiff's petition. These warranties, the pleader alleges, were broken by the plaintiff, which he claims should entitle him either to defeat the action in toto or reduce the amount of plaintiff's recovery. By section 605 of the Revised Statutes of 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 635) it is provided: "Sec. 605.—* * * The defendant may set forth by answer as many defenses and counterclaims as he may have, whether they be such as have been heretofore denominated legal or equitable, or both. They must each be separately stated in such manner that they may be intelligibly distinguished, or refer to the cause of action which they are intended to answer." These several causes of defense—No. 1 to No. 5, inclusive—set out in this answer, grow out of the plaintiff's cause of action if its statements are to be accepted. They are separately stated and in such a manner that they may be intelligibly distinguished. The motion of the plaintiff upon which the trial court struck out the entire answer and entered judgment for the plaintiff sets out two reasons which are intended to show why it should be granted, and why each and every count in the defendant's answer—namely, one, two, three, four, and five—should be stricken out. One of these grounds is, "Because the pretended representations and warranties therein stated are too indefinite and uncertain." As to this objection—that the answer is indefinite and uncertain—it is sufficient to say that, if the fact were true as stated, it could not be reached under our practice act by a motion to strike out, but the proper practice would be by motion to make the pleading more definite and certain.

MacAdam v. Scudder, 127 Mo. 345, 30 S. W. 168; State ex rel. v. Edmundson et al., 71 Mo. App. 172, and cases therein cited. The other reason for striking out the entire answer is that the counts constituted no defense to the plaintiff's action. It is enough to say in reply that on the very face of the record there stands a general denial, which, if well pleaded, and without further answer, would certainly constitute an absolute and complete defense to the plaintiff's petition. This legal proposition is primer law and no authorities are needed to support it. The real fault with the answer, if any, is not that its counts do not state a defense, but that the defenses stated are inconsistent with each other. The section of the statute cited does not limit the number of defenses that may be pleaded, but, as construed by the courts, it does inhibit inconsistent defenses. That the general denial and the plea of warranty in this case are inconsistent is patent on the face of the answer. The pleading first denies the allegations of the petition. It then confesses and seeks to avoid them by setting up warranties. There is no question but that such an answer is in violation of the common-law rules of pleading, and is flatly at variance with our Code regulations on the subject. As a question of pleading, the law in this state has been long established that a party cannot traverse and at the same time confess and avoid the same allegations; that such a pleading is subject to the objection that it is inconsistent with itself and also open to the charge of duplicity. The decisions supporting these propositions are abundant. We cite Coble v. McDaniel, 33 Mo. 363; Darrett v. Donnelly, 38 Mo. 492; Adams v. Trigg, 37 Mo. 141; Atteberry v. Powell, 29 Mo. 429, 77 Am. Dec. 579; McCord v. Railroad, 21 Mo. App., loc. cit. 95. In the case of State ex inf. v. Delmar Jockey Club, 200 Mo., loc. cit. 66, 92 S. W. 185, 98 S. W. 539, all these cases are considered. But it does not necessarily follow that plaintiff's motion to strike out the entire answer should have been sustained and judgment given for the plaintiff on the pleadings because the answer was defective. Such a rule would certainly be a travesty on justice, and would be a violation of every legal principle which seeks by rules of pleading and practice to arrive at the true substance of things, and not be drawn into a judicial chase after false shadows. The law is otherwise. The plea of general denial is simply waived when it is followed by special pleas as in this case. Price v. Mining Co., 83 Mo. App., loc. cit. 474; Bank of Monett v. Stone & Prickett, 93 Mo. App., loc. cit. 294. As stated by Smith, P. J., in the Price Case, supra: "It is a rule of pleading that a general denial is overcome by a subsequent confession and attempted avoidance"—citing McCord v. Railroad, 21 Mo. App. 95.

In most of the cases just cited the question was raised after trial. The motion to strike out in this case in its legal effect was a demurrer, and such motions are governed by the rules which govern demurrers. Sappington v. Jeffries, 15 Mo. 628; Cashman v. Anderson, 26 Mo. 67. A motion for judgment on the pleadings partakes of the nature of a demurrer, in that it admits all facts that are well pleaded, and, if sustained, judgment goes at once. In this it differs from a demurrer. If the demurrer is sustained, the order is not a final judgment. The party has a right to plead over. Sternberg v. Levy, 159 Mo. 617, 60 S. W. 1114, 53 L. R. A. 438. The motion, like the demurrer, raises an issue of law only. State ex rel. v. Higgins, 84 Mo. App. 531; State ex rel. v. Simmons Hardware Co., 109 Mo. 118, 18 S. W. 1125, 15 L. R. A. 676.

The only case in our state to which our attention has been called where a motion to dismiss before trial was considered is that of State ex rel. v. Rogers, 79 Mo. 283. This case seems to be nearly parallel to the case under consideration. In that case the answer contained several defenses consisting of a general denial followed by special defenses. The plaintiff demurred to the whole of the answer on the ground that the same constituted no defense to the action. The demurrer was sustained and judgment rendered on the petition for want of further answer as in this case. The Supreme Court there held that where the answer consists of a general denial and special pleas, and the latter do not in terms admit facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a judgment, a demurrer to the whole answer will not lie. The proper method of testing the sufficiency of the special pleas is to demur to them only or to move to strike them out. This case seems never to have been overruled or criticised, and, in the light of the latest decisions of the Supreme Court, points out the true rule of practice in such cases, and accords with the liberal principles of the modern law of pleading and practice.

The general denial in this case having, as we have seen, in law been waived by the special pleas, we are brought finally to a consideration of their sufficiency. We take the following quotation from the defendant's answer (count No. 2) as an example of his manner of pleading the warranty: "That said Sheppard, who was agent and traveling salesman for plaintiff (at the time of the sale), in order to induce the defendant to make such order and purchase such shoes on behalf of plaintiff, represented, warranted, and stated to the defendant that the shoes handled by him for the plaintiff, and sold by plaintiff, and the shoes to be shipped to defendant on such order, were of first-class quality, made of good leather for the style and price, were well put together, would wear well; that a warranty of quality went with every shoe to be delivered on the order; that said shoes were as good as or better than the shoes of the same and similar style and price sold by the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, whose shoes were well and favorably known in the community where the defendant had his store, and as good as or better than other shoes of the same style and price sold in that community. Defendant further says that he relied upon such statements, warranties, and agreements, and was induced thereby to give the order as above stated, but that plaintiff did not ship to the defendant shoes of the kind or quality ordered, but did ship to the defendant a bill of shoes similar in number, size, and price, which shoes so shipped and delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff were of inferior quality, made of poor and rotten leather, or imitation leather, and were not well put together, but would rip and tear and go to pieces with ordinary wear of a few hours, and at most a few days, were not as good as the shoes of similar price and style sold in that community by Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, but were in fact worthless and unmerchantable." If this does not state a cause of action on a breach of warranty, it gives countenance to appellant's assertion: "Then the English language is incapable of expressing a cause of action." That the sale of a chattel with any representation or positive affirmation of its quality and condition, made with the intention of being relied upon and in fact relied upon, is an express warranty for the breach of which an action will lie, has long been the law in English speaking communities. No special form of words is necessary to create a warranty. It is now more than 200 years since Lord Holt first settled the rule in Cross v. Gardner and Medina v. Stoughton, which Butler, J., in 1789 laid down in an opinion given by him in the famous leading case of Pasley v. Freeman, as follows: "It was rightly held by Holt, C. J., and has been uniformly adopted ever since, that an affirmation at the time of a sale is a warranty, provided it appears in evidence to have been so intended." It is a matter of contract between the parties, and the decisive question is the real intention as to whether the affirmation of fact was made for the purpose of inducing the purchase in the one instance, and whether it was relied upon by the purchaser in the other. Childs v. Emerson, 117 Mo. App. 671, 93 S. W. 286; Haines v. Neece, 116 Mo. App. 499, 92 S. W. 919; Young v. Van Natta, 113 Mo. App. 550, 88 S. W. 123; Danforth v. Crookshanks, 68 Mo. App. 311; Carter v. Black, 46 Mo., loc. cit. 385. A statement by the seller of chattels that his goods are equal in quality to other well-known articles similar in kind is an express warranty. Strauss v. American Chewing Gum Co., 134 Mo. App., loc. cit. 114, 114 S. W. 73; Murphy v. Gay, 37 Mo. 535; 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 138. The authorities already cited could be increased to an extent only limited by the time and diligence of the compiler.

Under these principles, the case must be reversed and remanded, which is accordingly done. All concur.

LETT'S-SPENCER GROCER CO. v. MISSOURI PAC. RY. CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
May 3, 1909. On rehearing,
Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 92*)—RECOVERY OF GOODS BY CONSIGNOR—EFFECT OF GARNISHMENT.

Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 5278, providing that an order of attachment binds the property attached from the time of service, and the garnishee shall be liable from the time he is served for all property in his hands, and section 5282, providing that a garnishee shall be served personally with summons and making him liable from the time served, places defendant's property in custodia legis from the time of the service of notice upon the garnishee, so that a railroad company ceased to hold defendant's property as a carrier after service of notice of garnishment upon it, but held it as the court's custodian, and was not liable as for conversion for nondelivery of the goods to the consignor on his exercising his right of stoppage in transitu.

2. SALES (§ 289*)—SELLER'S REMEDY—STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU—NATURE OF RIGHT.

The right of stoppage in transitu is merely an extension of the seller's lien for payment of the purchase money.

3. SALES (§ 291*)—STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU—INSOLVENCY OF BUYER.

The right of stoppage in transitu arises upon the discovery by the seller, while the goods are in transit, that the buyer is insolvent.

4. SALES (§ 299*)—STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU—EFFECT.

The exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu by the seller vests in each party to the sale the rights he had before the goods were delivered to the carrier.

5. SALES (§ 296*)—STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU—TERMINATION OF TRANSIT.

The unloading and placing of the goods in the carrier's warehouse does not necessarily prevent the exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu, so that the seller could exercise such right the day after the goods had arrived at destination, but while they were still in the carrier's possession.

6. SALES (§ 294*) — REMEDIES OF SELLER — STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU—PRIORITY OF LIEN—GARNISHMENT.

The seller's right of stoppage in transitu while the goods were still in the carrier's possession could not be impaired by the garnishment of the goods by a creditor of the buyer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 834; Dec. Dig. § 294.*]

7. ATTACHMENT (§ 287*)—PROCEEDINGS—PARTIES—INTERVENTION OF SELLER.

The seller, after giving notice of the exercise of his right of stoppage in transitu, may interplead to enforce his right of possession in attachment proceedings by a creditor of the buyer.

8. ATTACHMENT (§ 300*)—CLAIMANT OF PROPERTY—WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT—ACTION FOR POSSESSION OF GOODS.

The seller, after giving notice of the exercise of his right of stoppage in transitu, may enforce his right to possession by an appropriate action against the officer who levied an attachment against the goods at the suit of a creditor of the buyer, or by an action against the creditor and officer jointly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; Henry M. Rainey, Judge.

Action by the Letts-Spencer Grocer Company against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Martin L. Clardy and Ben. J. Woodson, for appellant. Culver & Phillip, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. Plaintiff sued defendant in the circuit court of Buchanan county for damages for the alleged wrongful conversion of certain goods, wares, and merchandise. A jury was waived, the cause was submitted to the court on an agreed statement of facts, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $405.63, the value of the property. Defendant appealed. Plaintiff, a wholesale merchant at St. Joseph, sold the goods in question to the W. C. Ross Construction Company of Stockton, Kan., and delivered them to defendant at St. Joseph for transportation to Stockton. They arrived at Stockton November 29, 1907, and were unloaded into defendant's depot at that place. The construction company was insolvent at the time of the sale, but that fact was not known to plaintiff until December 9th. On November 29th, the day of the arrival of the goods at Stockton and while they were still in the possession of defendant, a creditor of the construction company brought suit on a demand against that company before a justice of the peace at Stockton, and caused a garnishment summons to be issued and served on defendant. On December 9th plaintiff notified defendant in writing of its purpose to exercise the right of stoppage in transitu, offered to pay defendant's charges, and demanded the goods. The demand was refused, and this suit followed.

The plaintiff in the garnishment suit in Kansas recovered judgment against the construction company for $174.63 and costs. Defendant answered as garnishee, stating that it held the goods, but that their vendor (plaintiff here) had exercised the right of stoppage in transitu. Notwithstanding this defense, the justice ordered defendant to deliver the goods to the constable on the payment by that officer of the freight charges amounting to $26.66. Compliance with this order being refused by defendant, the attachment plaintiff brought a statutory action against defendant in Rooks county, Kan., based on the order. Defendant answered, claiming that the notice by the plaintiff in the present suit of the exercise of its right of stoppage in transitu excused defendant from obeying the order made by the justice. The issues thus raised were tried in the district court of Rooks county, a court of record of general jurisdiction, and submitted to the court, but at the time of the present suit judgment had not been rendered in that action. Plaintiff was asked by defendant to intervene in the Kansas suits, but did not comply with the request, and was not made a party to either suit. The statutes of Kansas and decisions of the Supreme Court of that state bearing on the issues before us were introduced in evidence. In support of its contention that the facts above stated compel a judgment in its favor, defendant argues that the effect of the service on defendant of the garnishment summons was to impound the property, to place it in the custody of the law, and to make defendant its custodian, subject to the orders of the Kansas court; therefore, that defendant was disabled by law from complying with the demand of plaintiff to return the goods, and being thus disabled, cannot be held to have converted the property on account of having done that which the law compelled it to do. On the other hand, plaintiff argues that its right of stoppage in transitu gave it a lien on the goods for the purchase price superior to any lien a creditor of the vendee could acquire by attachment or garnishment; that this lien and the right to enforce it were in force at the time of the garnishment summons, since they would not be lost until actual delivery of the property to the vendee, and, being thus in force, the right was not impaired by the garnishment of the carrier, but could be exercised and enforced against the carrier, regardless of any actions brought to subject the property to the payment of the debts of the vendee to third persons.

Pertinent provisions of the statutes of Kansas relating to garnishment proceedings in justices' courts are as follows: "An order of attachment binds the property attached from the time of service, and the garnishee shall stand liable to the plaintiff in attachment for all property, moneys and credits in his hands, or due from him to the defendant, from the time he is served with the written notice mentioned in section thirty-seven." Section 5278, Gen. St. Kan. (Dassler) 1901. "A garnishee summons shall be issued and personally served, in the same manner as an ordinary summons and from the time of such service the garnishee shall stand liable to the plaintiff for all property, money and articles in his hands or due from him to the defendant." Section 5282, Gen. St. Kan. 1901. The effect of these statutes is to place in custodia legis the property of the defendant in a garnishment suit from the time of the service of notice on the garnishee. Rood on Garnishments (1896 Ed.) § 194; Drake on Attachments (6th Ed.) § 251. In legal effect the property came under the control of the Kansas court as completely as would have been the case had the officer of that court seized it under writ of attachment; the only difference being that in the latter case the constable would have held the property as legal custodian, while in the case in hand the defendant, on the service of notice, ceased to hold it as a common carrier, and thereafter held it as the court's custodian.

This brings us to the question of whether a vendor may enforce his right of stoppage in transitu before the goods have been actually delivered by the carrier to the vendee, but after they have been seized by an officer of the court under writ of attachment issued in a suit of a creditor of the vendee, or, what is practically the same thing, after they have been impounded by service on the carrier of a garnishment summons. "All authorities agree that the right of stoppage in transitu is nothing but an extension of the vendor's lien on the goods for the payment of the purchase money." Schwabacher v. Kane, 18 Mo. App. 126. "The transit is held to continue from the time the vendor parts with the possession until the purchaser acquires it; that is to say, from the time the vendor has so far made delivery that his right of retaining the goods and his right of lien * * * are gone to the time when the goods have reached the actual possession of the buyer. * * * The stoppage in transitu is called into existence for the vendor's benefit after the buyer has acquired title and right of possession and even constructive possession, but not yet actual possession, * * * and the insolvency of the purchaser is a sufficient justification for exercising the seller's right, though the sale be unconditional and time be given to the purchaser. This right of stoppage is not precluded until the goods have actually reached the buyer or under circumstances equivalent thereto." Estey v. Truxel, 25 Mo. App. 238. The right is based on the equitable rule that one man's property shall not be taken to pay another man's debt. It arises from the discovery by the vendor during the transitus of the insolvency of the vendee, and the ordinary effect of its exercise is "to vest in each party to the contract of sale the rights he had before the possession of the goods sold was delivered to the carrier." Milling Company v. Railway, 97 Iowa, 719, 66 N. W. 1059, 59 Am. St. Rep. 434. "The unloading of the goods and the placing of them in the warehouse of the railroad company does not necessarily terminate the transitus nor put an end to the right of stoppage. So long as they remain in the hands of the carrier or middlemen as such, the right does not cease." Symms v. Schotten, 35 Kan. 310, 10 Pac. 828. The application of these rules to the facts in hand compels the holding that at the time of the service of the garnishment summons on the defendant the right of stoppage was vested in plaintiff, and could not be destroyed or impaired by any process issued at the suit of a creditor of the vendee. Further, we agree with plaintiff that, "after a notice of stoppage has been given, the seller may enforce his right of possession thereupon accruing by intervention in the attachment proceeding by interpleader to determine the rights of the parties, or by appropriate action against the officer who levied the writ, or jointly against the creditor and the officer, or against the carrier or middleman who has refused on account of the attachment to redeliver the goods to the seller." But obviously the remedy we have italicized, which is the one sought to be enforced in the present case, would not obtain if, at the time of the service on the carrier of notice to stop the goods, the carrier no longer holds them as a common carrier, but has been transformed into an officer of the court and holds them as the custodian of the court. Plaintiff concedes in his brief that, "If the officer actually seizes the goods and takes them out of the possession of the railroad company and into his own possession under the writ of attachment or execution, then replevin must be brought against the officer because such action must be brought against the person in possession." So in the present case, when the notice of stoppage was served by plaintiff, the property passed out of the possession of the defendants as a carrier into the custody of the law. "After the seizure of the goods by the sheriff under the attachment, they were in the custody of the law, and the defendant could not comply with the demand of plaintiffs without a breach of it, even admitting the goods to have been at the time in his actual possession." Stiles v. Davis, 66 U. S. 101, 17 L. Ed. 33. Holding the goods as the receiver or officer of the court, as it did, how could defendant accede to the demand of plaintiff without violating its duty to the court? It was compelled by sovereign power to hold the goods subject to the orders of that power and its obedience to the command of sovereignty was its first duty. It was not guilty of the conversion of the goods for the simple reason that it exercised no control of its own over them, but, as we have seen, merely held them as the instrument of a higher power to which it owed obedience. The right that inured to plaintiff was not lost or impaired by the service of the garnishment on defendant, but the particular remedy now sought to be enforced was lost by the jurisdiction assumed by the Kansas courts over the res to which the lien attached. Defendant committed no wrong against any right of plaintiff, and consequently cannot be held liable as a wrongdoer.

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

On Rehearing.

BROADDUS, P. J. A rehearing was granted in this case because of the importance of the legal questions involved, and the possibility that the former decision might be erroneous. But after a careful consideration of the case anew we are satisfied that there can be no question but what the decision correctly states the law, and that it results in justice as well.

Reversed. All concur.

HARING et al. v. SHELTON et al.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 71*)—LIMITATIONS—STATUTES.

The three-year statute of limitation does not protect one not deraining title from the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 422; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 82*)—LIMITATIONS—STATUTES.

The five-year statute of limitation does not protect one claiming under a deed from an individual, where he does not show the date of the recording of the deed.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 148*)—SALE OF REAL ESTATE—VALIDITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a will does not authorize the independent executrix to sell real estate, a purchaser from her has the burden of proving that at the time of the sale such conditions existed as would authorize the probate court to order a sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 595-601; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

In trespass to try title, in which defendant claimed under a deed on a sale by an independent executrix to pay debts of testator, declarations of the executrix as to the existence of debts at the time of the sale, made after the sale, are inadmissible as hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1174-1192; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

5. WILLS (§ 439*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

In construing wills the object is to ascertain the intention of the testator, and an intention not inconsistent with the rules of law will govern.

6. WILLS (§ 602*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATE CREATED—DEFEASIBLE FEE.

Testator devised to his wife, "her heirs and assigns forever, the following described land, * * * and it is my will that my said wife and her heirs shall hold said land in fee simple forever, or so long as she shall remain a widow." Held, that the wife took a fee-simple title, determinable on her remarriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1356; Dec. Dig. § 602.*]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 229*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

A purchaser of realty from a devisee who took a fee-simple title thereto, determinable on her remarriage, is charged with notice of the terms of the will and takes only the devisee's title.

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of First Supreme Judicial District.

Action by J. W. Shelton and others against J. G. Haring, in which the First National Bank of Crockett intervened. There was a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (114 S. W. 389) affirming a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant and intervener bring error. Affirmed.

Nunn & Nunn, for plaintiffs in error. Aldrich & Crook, for defendants in error.

BROWN, J. From the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals we copy the following statement of the case: "In this case J. W. Shelton et al. sue J. G. Haring in trespass to try title to recover a tract of land. The First National Bank of Crockett intervened, setting up that it had acquired Haring's title. Upon trial without a jury the plaintiffs had judgment for an undivided four-ninths of the land sued for, and from the judgment defendants appeal. Conclusions of fact and law by the court were filed. The case turned upon the validity of a deed to Haring by C. C. Shelton, surviving widow, in her own right and as independent executrix of W. M. Shelton, ancestor of plaintiffs, to convey the land, and the effect of this deed depended upon: (1) The existence of debts against the estate of the testator at the date of the deed, to authorize the independent executrix to sell, and (2) upon the estate vested in her as devisee by the terms of the will, as authorizing her to convey in her own right. If the existence of such debts was shown, and, if not, if the will vested in her the entire estate instead of an estate limited to her widowhood, her deed conveyed the land, and plaintiffs in either event were not entitled to recover. The court found on both issues against the defendants. W. M. Shelton was twice married. Appellees (plaintiffs below) are some of the children of the first marriage. Shelton and his first wife owned in community a tract of land in Falls county. After the death of the first wife and the second marriage to C. C. Shelton, Shelton exchanged the Falls county land for land in Houston county, of which the land in controversy is a part, taking the title to the Houston county land to himself and his second wife, C. C. Shelton. Shelton died leaving a will which was duly probated, wherein he named his wife independent executrix, after devising to her his entire estate, in the following language: 'I give and devise unto my beloved wife, C. C. Shelton, her heirs and assigns forever, the following described tracts or parcels of land, to wit: A tract of 51 acres in Houston county, Texas, about 4 miles N. W. from the town of Crockett, and fully described in a deed to me by H. G. Sanders, bearing date June 11, 1892. Also a tract of 210 acres of land in said county and state, on the Wm. White headright survey, about 4 miles N. W. from the town of Crockett, and fully described in the above-mentioned deed from H. G. Sanders to me, except 50 acres heretofore sold by me to Alex Anderson, which is reserved out of the said 210 acres tract, said two tracts being formerly known as the West Christian place, and now occupied by me and my said wife as our homestead, and it is my will that my said wife, C. C. Shelton, and her heirs shall hold said lands in fee simple forever, or so long as she shall remain a widow.' No express power to sell is given by the will. Shelton died in 1893. In 1895, two years after Shelton's death, Mrs. Shelton in her own right, and as independent executrix, executed to J. G. Haring a deed to the land in controversy, reciting that it was done to pay debts of the estate. Mrs. Shelton married again in 1903. The suit was filed in 1904. She died after the suit was filed and before trial."

It is unimportant to the disposition of this case whether the property in question was the community property of Shelton and his first wife or not, unless we shall find it necessary to reverse the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals upon one or both of the following propositions, which are contended for by the plaintiffs in error in this case: (1) It is claimed that the trial court and Court of Civil Appeals erred in finding and holding that there were no debts against the estate of Shelton at the time of the sale made by his widow to Haring, and therefore that the sale was not made for the purpose of paying the debts due from Shelton's estate. (2) It is contended by plaintiffs in error that the trial court and Court of Civil Appeals erred in holding that the will of Shelton did not vest an estate in fee simple in his widow, C. C. Shelton.

The defendant and intervener pleaded the statute of limitations of three and five years; but they did not deraign title from the state. Therefore the three-year statute did not apply, and they claimed the five-year statute of limitation under the deed from Mrs. C. C. Shelton, but did not show the date when it was recorded. Having failed to show themselves entitled to the bar of either period of limitation, it is not necessary for us to pass on the assignment which presents that question.

The second and third assignments of error assert that the trial court and Court of Civil Appeals erred in holding that there were no debts against the estate of W. M. Shelton. There being no provision in the will authorizing the sale by the executrix, the burden of proof was on the purchaser to show that at the time of the sale such conditions existed as would have authorized the probate court to order the sale of the land. Freeman v. Tinsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 835; Roberts v. Connellee, 71 Tex. 16, 8 S. W. 626; Mayes v. Blanton, 67 Tex. 247, 3 S. W. 40. The evidence introduced upon this question was not so conclusive as to authorize this court to say that the trial court and Court of Civil Appeals erred in holding that the evidence did not show that debts existed against the estate of W. M. Shelton.

At the trial the defendant and intervener offered to prove the declarations of Mrs. C. C. Shelton, made after her second marriage and after the sale of the land, to the effect that debts existed against her husband's estate at the time the sale was made, which evidence the trial court excluded. There was no error in this ruling. The testimony offered was hearsay, and therefore not admissible.

The principal questions in this case are: What title did Mrs. C. C. Shelton take under the terms of the will, and what interest did she convey to J. G. Haring by her deed to him? The will of W. M. Shelton contained the following provisions: "I give and devise unto my beloved wife, C. C. Shelton, her heirs and assigns forever, the following described tracts of land." Then follows the description of the tracts of land in that paragraph of the will and in the succeeding paragraph. After the description of the property, we read in the will: "It is my will that my said wife, C. C. Shelton, and her heirs, shall hold said lands in fee simple forever, or so long as she shall remain a widow." The language first quoted was sufficient to vest in Mrs. C. C. Shelton the title in fee simple to the interest of the testator in the land and did so vest that title in her; but, by the language which was used in the succeeding paragraph of the will, the estate was qualified and converted into a fee-simple estate determinable upon a future contingency, that is, upon the second marriage of Mrs. C. C. Shelton. "The intention of the testator is the first and great object of inquiry in the construction of wills, and it must govern, provided it be not inconsistent with the rules of law." Laval v. Staffell, 64 Tex. 372. It is evident that Shelton did not intend to give to his wife the lands in question, free of the claims of any one in the future; but it was his purpose that his widow should have the property as her own, subject to the condition that she should remain a widow.

In the case above cited the testatrix used this language: "I give and bequeath to my son, Alcide Francois Phaneuf, the store and lot which I own in the city of San Antonio, on the north side of the Main street, and on the south of the San Antonio river, between lots belonging to Mr. August Nette, druggist (on the east and west). This legacy is made with the following restrictions, namely: That before my said son shall have completed his twenty-fifth year, he shall have no other right over the real estate and fixtures which I bequeath to him than to receive and dispose of the revenue thereof, without having the right in any manner to incumber, mortgage or sell the said property before he shall have completed the twenty-fifth year of his age; and if my said son should leave this world (which God forbid) before having reached that age, in that case the lot, house, or store aforesaid shall pass in full right and free from all charges in full property to my aforesaid daughter, Maria Reine Celine Phaneuf." The court held that that provision which restrained the devisee from selling or mortgaging the property was void, but also held that the provision which limited the estate granted to Alcide was lawfully limited by the provision that, if he should die before he reached his twenty-fifth year, the property should pass to another, and the court said: "The provision therefore that the estate should pass to the appellant in case of the death of Alcide before reaching the age of 25 years was one which the testatrix was authorized to make, and there is nothing in the restraint upon alienation that can prevent this will and intention of the testator from being carried out. Treating the provision as to alienation as void, we must read the will as if no such restriction had been imposed. Alcide is then left with the power of selling or mortgaging all the interest or title he held in the property under the will; that is, a fee-simple estate liable to be defeated upon the contingency of his dying before becoming 25 years of age. To this extent only could he have sold or incumbered the estate had the restriction as to alienation not been made. The insertion of the void condition could not certainly have given him greater power over the estate than he would have had without it. The mortgage to Grothaus therefore furnished him security only to the extent of Alcide's title to the land, as above stated. Grothaus took the risk of Alcide's living to the age of 25 years. If that contingency happened, the entire fee-simple estate was pledged to him for the payment of his debt; otherwise, his security could last only to the death of Alcide, and, if the property in the meantime had been sold in satisfaction of the mortgage, the title of the purchaser would have expired with the death of Alcide."

That case is very similar in its facts to the one under consideration, and conclusively establishes the fact that in this case Mrs. Shelton took the fee-simple title, determinable upon her marriage, and that the plaintiffs in error, the bank, and Haring, took the title of Mrs. Shelton, and no more, which was terminated in their hands by her second marriage, the same as it would have been if the title had remained in her. No claim is made that they acquired any rights as innocent purchasers from Mrs. Shelton, and, indeed, the facts show that no such claim could exist, for their title was derived through the will, by which the limitation was plainly expressed, and the purchasers from Mrs. Shelton were charged with notice of the terms of the will under which they derived their right.

The judgments of the district court and Court of Civil Appeals are affirmed.

HOPKINS et al. v. HOPKINS.

1. DEEDS (§ 128*)—ESTATE GRANTED—RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE—"HEIRS."

The granting clause of a deed was to the grantor's son H. and to his "heirs," "on the terms and conditions hereafter stated," the habendum clause to H. and his "heirs," the special warranty to H. and his "heirs," and the "terms and conditions hereafter stated" were: "The intention * * * is to vest sufficient title in * * * H. to the * * * property so that he can, during his life, use, occupy, and enjoy it * * * as completely as though he had a fee simple, and at his death his children are to have a fee-simple title. Should * * * H. die without issue, then the title * * * is to revert in us * * * if we are living; if we are not living, then according to the descent and distribution laws * * * such of our heirs are to receive and have the same title as he gets, and whoever inherits said property hereafter shall have a fee-simple title." Held, that the rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, so as to vest the fee in H.; it appearing from the subsequent terms and conditions referred to in the granting clause, and which are to be read as if incorporated in it, that the word "heirs" therein is used, not in its legal sense, but in the sense of "children" or "issue" of H. living at his death, who are to take by purchase, as remaindermen.

2. DEEDS (§ 129*)—CONSTRUCTION—"CHILDREN"—"ISSUE."

The words "children" and "issue" in a deed will not be read as meaning "heirs," where not to do so will carry into effect the lawful intention of the grantor that the grantee take only a life estate, and his children living at his death the remainder; while to do so would defeat such intention.

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Second Supreme Judicial District.

Action by Samuel B. Hopkins against Carrie A. Hopkins, guardian of Carrie B. Hopkins, a minor, and others. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals (114 S. W. 673), and error is brought in behalf of said minor. Reversed and dismissed.

D. H. Morrow and Lewis & Phillips, for plaintiffs in error. Davis & Thomason, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. This action was brought by defendant in error to obtain a construction of a deed and an adjudication that it vested in him a fee-simple title to the land conveyed by it. A copy of the deed in question is attached to the petition and is from S. B. Hopkins and his wife, Mary B. Hopkins, to plaintiff, their son. It states that it is made in consideration of love and affection, and the parts material to the decision are as follows, in their order: (1) Granting clause, "unto our said son, Samuel Bunch Hopkins, and to his heirs, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter stated." (2) Habendum clause, "to our said son and his heirs." (3) Special warranty of title to "said premises unto our said son, Samuel Bunch Hopkins, and his heirs." (4) The following: "The intention of this conveyance is to vest sufficient title in our said son, Samuel Bunch Hopkins, to the above-described property, so that he can, during his life, use, occupy and enjoy it, and receive therefrom all the benefits as completely as though he had a fee-simple title, and at his death his children are to have a fee-simple title. Should our son, Samuel Bunch Hopkins, die without issue, then the title to said property is to revert in us as completely as though this conveyance had never been made, if we are living; if we are not living, then according to the descent and distribution laws of Texas such of our heirs are to receive and have the same title as he gets, and whoever inherits said property hereafter shall have a fee-simple title." We have, for convenience in reference, numbered the clauses. It appears from the petition that both the grantors are dead, leaving three children, plaintiff and two sisters. The father, however, survived the mother and married again and left a widow and a daughter, Carrie B. Hopkins, the plaintiff in error. This widow and the two full-sisters and the half-sister of plaintiff are the defendants in this action. The defense is made in behalf of the minor half-sister, and was presented only by demurrer to the petition, which was overruled, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff in accordance with his prayer. The appeal from this judgment and, upon its affirmance, this writ of error, were prosecuted in behalf of the minor.

The question argued is whether the plaintiff took a fee-simple title, or only an estate for life. It is the contention of the plaintiff below, sustained by the Court of Civil Appeals, that the deed vested in him the fee by force of the rule in Shelley's Case, which is, briefly, thus stated: "If an estate for life, or any other particular estate of freehold, be given to one, with remainder to his heirs, the first taker shall be held to have the fee, and the heirs will take by descent, and not by purchase." Counsel for defendant (plaintiff in error) contend that the rule has no application, for the reason that, if we try to apply it to the granting clause, the habendum clause, and the warranty, without regard to the words, "upon the terms and conditions hereinafter stated," we find, not a life estate, but a fee-simple estate granted to the first taker, while, if we regard the words just quoted and the last provision in the deed to which those words evidently refer, we find a life estate granted to the first taker and a remainder, not to heirs, but to children. The several parts of the deed are not to be considered without reference to each other, but are to be construed together and the effect of one upon the other so determined; and a question upon which the decision must depend does thus arise as to the application of the rule in Shelley's Case.

The grant in the first clause to Samuel Bunch Hopkins and to his heirs, if that were all, unquestionably would create in him a fee simple; but we cannot stop at those words, because the clause itself does not stop with them. The added words, "upon the terms and conditions hereinafter stated," are a part of the granting clause itself and of equal dignity with the other language of that clause. Until we look to other parts of the deed to see the "terms and conditions," we cannot rest upon the assumption that the estate granted is such as the other words, by themselves, would convey, for, as we shall see, it was competent for the grantors, notwithstanding the use of words proper to the creation of a fee simple, to show by other provisions in the deed that those words were used in a restrictive, but legitimate, sense, in which they would create a life estate only. The reference in the first clause to other parts of the deed for provisions that might determine the quantity of the estate granted had the effect of importing into the granting clause those other parts and of making them a part of that clause as fully as if they had been written therein. The deed thus read is a grant to the first taker and to his heirs; the estate granted to the former being in effect further defined as a life estate. If this were all, the rule in Shelley's Case would undoubtedly control and vest in the first taker a fee simple; but, after restricting the first estate to one for life, the deed grants the remainder in fee to the "children" of the first taker. It then provides for a reversion to the grantors, if living, should the first taker die without "issue."

We think it obvious that those who are to take after the death of the first taker are thus called indiscriminately "heirs" and "children" and "issue." The legal effect of the deed depends on the meaning of the grantors in using those words. If they meant heirs in the legal sense—that is, those appointed by law to take by inheritance from the first taker in regular succession from generation to generation—the rule in Shelley's Case would apply and vest the fee in him, for no mere declaration of an intention to limit the estate to one for life could prevail over the effect given by law to the use, in its legal sense, of the technical word "heirs." On the other hand, if that word was used as it often is used by unskilled persons only to designate the children, or the issue, who should be living at the death of the first taker, to take by purchase, as remaindermen, it expresses a perfectly lawful intent to which effect must be given. The real difficulty often arising in such cases results from the misuse of words and is experienced in fixing upon those which express the true intention of the grantors, for the word "heirs" is often used in the sense of "issue," and even of the still more restricted one of "children," while both the latter terms may be used when those to take generally by inheritance, as heirs in the broadest sense, are in mind. 2 Washb. Real Property, 653, 654.

In this case, however, we have not found much difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the grantors, when they used the words "heirs" and "issue" and "children," all the time had in mind one or the other of two classes of persons, viz., such "children" as the first taker should leave at his death, or such "issue" as he should leave at that time. All that militates against this view is the use of the word "heirs." As we have seen it is always permissible to ascertain from the whole language of an instrument that that word was used in a narrower sense than its true one and to give to it the effect it should have in that narrower sense provided the other language clearly indicates the restricted use. When the word is first used in this deed, referring to those who are to take after the first taker, it is at once followed by others which point to explanatory provisions to be introduced later. We look to those and find the words "children" and "issue" referring to the same class in provisions whose validity depends on the interpretation of all of the words in a sense more restricted than the true sense of the word first used. The estate first granted is in effect declared to be one for life, which it could not be if the remainder in fee really were limited to heirs; but the remainder in fee is granted to "children," and not limited to heirs, and this is a perfectly valid disposition, unless the word "children" is to be read as meaning "heirs" broadly. This we think should not be done. The clear intent can have effect by construing the words as we have indicated. According to the principle uniformly applied by this court in this very connection, the construction which carries into effect the intention, where that is lawful, is to be adopted in preference to that which defeats it. Hancock v. Butler, 21 Tex. 804; Simonton v. White, 93 Tex. 50, 53 S. W. 339, 77 Am. St. Rep. 824. That by "children" and "issue" the grantors did not mean "heirs" in the general sense essential to the application of the rule in Shelley's Case is indicated by the phrase, "at his death," which designates those persons of the class intended then living who are to take the fee by purchase and not by inheritance. Hancock v. Butler, supra, 21 Tex., at page 817. These words properly are words of purchase, and in order to treat them as words of limitation such use of them must clearly appear. The word "heirs" cannot be held to have that effect when the instrument shows, as we think this does, that it is the one mistakenly used.

We might pursue the discussion through the other language of the fourth clause to show the plain intention of the grantors to restrict the first taker's interest to a life estate and to grant the remainder in fee to his children or issue; but the question at last turns upon the meaning of the word "heirs" in this particular deed, and we have no doubt that it was used in the sense of one or both of the later words, "children" and "issue." Whether "children" is to be broadened to mean "issue," or "issue" narrowed to mean "children," is wholly immaterial to this controversy, since either word designates as remaindermen, to take by purchase, and not by inheritance, a class of persons to be ascertained at the death of the first taker. When we find the sense in which "heirs" is used in the first clause, there is no reason whatever for assuming that the word has a broader meaning in the second and third clauses.

It is argued that the warranty to Samuel Bunch Hopkins and his heirs has especial force in favor of plaintiff's contention, since he would leave nothing to his heirs if he took only a life estate, and there would therefore be nothing for the warranty to heirs to operate upon; but if the heirs referred to are merely the children, or issue, as we have held, and take the fee by purchase, the warranty applies as fully as if the fee vested in the ancestor and descended to the heirs by inheritance. Neither the habendum nor the warranty clause furnishes anything to change the question as it arises upon the granting clause. We do not intend to determine questions as to rights that may arise in others than children, or issue, under the fourth clause, since our conclusion that plaintiff took only a life estate ends the case. We may say, however, that this conclusion results in the further one that the provision that, in defined circumstances, the estate is to go according to the law of descent and distribution, cannot mean that it is to go to the heirs of Samuel Bunch Hopkins, Jr., since only a life estate is vested in him.

The exception to the petition should have been sustained, and, as there is no probability that a better case can be stated, the proper judgment to be here rendered is one of reversal and dismissal.

Reversed and dismissed.

KEITH et al. v. GUEDRY.

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 172*)—FORFEITURE—EVIDENCE.

One claiming the benefit of a forfeiture under Act Aug. 30, 1856 (Laws 1856, p. 81, c. 150), providing that when a survey has been made on a conditional certificate, and the field notes returned to the General Land Office, the unconditional certificate shall be returned to and filed in such office by a certain time, or the survey shall be forfeited, has the burden of proving the facts necessary to establish it; so that in case of doubt it will be presumed a survey was made, not by virtue of the conditional certificate, but by virtue of the unconditional certificate, in which case there would be no forfeiture.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§§ 93, 123, 190*)—RETROACTIVE LAWS—IMPAIRING OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS—VESTED RIGHTS—PUBLIC LANDS.

Act Nov. 29, 1871 (Laws 2d Sess. 1871, p. 45, c. 57), providing that in all locations and surveys of land theretofore made by virtue of any of certain certificates, embracing a headright certificate, and in which the field notes have been returned to the General Land Office, and the certificate by virtue of which the survey was made is not on file in such office, and has not been withdrawn for location of unlocated balance, such certificate shall be returned to and filed in such office within a certain time, or the location and survey shall be void, is not retroactive, and does not impair the obligation of contracts or vested rights, in contravention of Const. art. 1, § 16; it not impairing the rights of the grantee to the certificate, or the right to acquire land by locating it, but merely providing conditions on which title to land located on may be completed, with forfeiture of imperfect rights in default of compliance with the conditions.

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 172*)—FORFEITURE—EVIDENCE.

Under Act Nov. 29, 1871 (Laws 2d Sess. 1871, p. 45, c. 57), declaring void prior locations and surveys on certificates not returned to the General Land Office within eight months after passage of the act, defendant, who claimed under such a location and survey, would have to show, as against plaintiffs, to whom a patent was issued on a subsequent location, that the certificate was returned within such time, which would show a vested right in him superior to that of plaintiffs, unless they prove that, after deposit of defendant's certificate in such office, it was withdrawn therefrom by defendant, or some one authorized by him to do so, in which case his survey was forfeited.

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Fourth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by J. F. Keith and another against Gustan Guedry. Judgment for defendant was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals (114 S. W. 392), and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed and remanded.

Andrews, Ball & Streetman and George D. Anderson, for plaintiffs in error. Greens & Nall and J. W. Lockett, for defendant in error.

BROWN, J. J. F. Keith and the Keith Lumber Company brought this suit against Gustan Guedry to recover title and possession of so much of the John M. Bowyer 1,238½-acre survey as is in conflict with the John P. Wilds 640-acre survey, situated in Hardin county. Keith and the Keith Lumber Company claimed under John H. Kirby by warranty deed, and made him a party defendant in the suit. The petition contained the usual allegations in actions of trespass to try title, and also set up a claim on the part of the plaintiffs to the land under the statute of three years' limitation. The defendant disclaimed title to all of the land except that covered by the Wilds survey, which he described in his answer, and answered by a plea of not guilty and of three, five, and ten years' statutes of limitation. The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed by the court that, unless the plaintiffs can recover under the statute of three years' limitation (upon which you will hereinafter be instructed), then your verdict should be for the defendant, Gustan Guedry, upon the issue of title to the land." The jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

We extract from the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals the following statement of the facts of the case: "The appellants claim under the John Bowyer survey of 1,238½ acres, which was surveyed March 30, 1881, for J. W. Lawrence, by virtue of duplicate certificate No. 35/137 issued January 24, 1879, in lieu of certificate No. 1,062, issued by the board of land commissioners of Harris county on August 9, 1851, to John M. Bowyer. The field notes of the survey were filed in the General Land Office April 12, 1881, and on October 25th of that year were indorsed as being in conflict with the John P. Wilds survey, and on November 9, 1883, were indorsed corrected. On July 2, 1886, patent was issued for the land described by the field notes to Levi Ketchum and James D. Rhea, as assignees of James M. Bowyer, which was recorded in Hardin county, where the land is situated, in 1897. It is conceded by the appellee that appellants connected themselves by a complete chain of title with the patentees. The appellee claims the John P. Wilds unpatented survey of 640 acres, which, except a small portion in conflict with the Cochran survey, is covered by the Bowyer survey, claimed by appellants. This survey was made on April 30, 1856, by virtue of the land certificate hereinafter mentioned, and the field notes thereof filed in the General Land Office, July 14, 1856. On July 4, 1839, the board of land commissioners of Jefferson county, under the act of January 4, 1838, issued to John P. Wilds conditional headright certificate No. 46, for 640 acres, which certificate recites all the facts entitling him to it under the law and prerequisite to its issuance. On July 18, 1836, the clerk of said board reported to the General Land Office a list of certificates issued by it, which included the one above mentioned. The board of commissioners appointed under the act of January 29, 1840 (Laws 1840, p. 139), to inspect the records of the boards of land commissioners and ascertain by satisfactory testimony what certificates for land had been issued by the respective boards to legal claimants, and report to the Commissioners of the General Land Office such certificates as they should find to be genuine and legal, in its report of May 24, 1841, pronounced such conditional certificate genuine and legally issued. On November 8, 1845, the board of land commissioners of Jefferson county, under the act of January 15, 1841, defining the mode by which the holders of conditional certificates shall establish the same, issued to John P. Wilds his certificate No. 46 for 640 acres; he having established his right thereto in accordance with the provisions of said act, and the order of the board reciting the names of the witnesses, the date and number of his conditional certificate, and its class and number of acres. The 640 acres in controversy were surveyed April 30, 1856, by A. H. Redding, surveyor of Jefferson county, which then included what is now Hardin county. The field notes of the survey recite that it was made by virtue of headright certificate No. 46, and they were recorded in the surveyor's office April 30, 1856, and were, as before stated, on July 14, 1856, with map there-to attached, filed in the General Land Office, and on March 27, 1886, they were, in such office, indorsed in pencil as being in conflict with the Bowyer survey. The evidence tends to show that a certificate was filed with the field notes; but whether the conditional or unconditional it does not disclose with any degree of certainty. It has not been in the land office since this suit was filed, and no witness who testified in the case had any recollection of ever having seen it there on file. The questions as to whether it was filed, and, if it was, which certificate, were not submitted to the jury, because deemed by the trial court of no importance, under its view of the case."

It was not disputed that the plaintiffs had the title which was granted by the state by virtue of the location of the John M. Bowyer survey, and the defendant, Gustan Guedry, had the title which was acquired by the location of the John P. Wilds survey. The case was brought to this court by writ of error sued out by the plaintiffs in the court below. The statute of August 30, 1856 (Laws 1856, p. 81, c. 150), prescribed that when a survey of land had been made upon a conditional certificate, and the field notes returned to the General Land Office, the unconditional certificate should be returned and filed in the land office on or before the 1st day of August, 1857, and, upon failure to comply with that requirement, the survey should be forfeited. The terms of that statute do not apply to the present case because the testimony does not show that the survey in question was made by the conditional certificate issued to J. P. Wilds. It is at least doubtful, according to the findings of the Court of Civil Appeals, whether the survey was made by the conditional or the unconditional certificate, and, in such state of facts, the court will presume that it was made by virtue of the unconditional certificate, which would sustain the rights acquired thereby. One who claims the benefit of such forfeiture must prove the facts necessary to establish it. The constitutionality of the law of 1856 becomes immaterial in this state of the evidence.

On the 29th day of November, 1871, the Legislature of this state enacted that: "In all locations and surveys of land heretofore made by virtue of any such certificate, as is specified in the first section of this act, and in which the field notes have been returned to the General Land Office and the certificate by virtue of which the survey was made is not on file in the General Land Office, nor has been withdrawn for location of unlocated balance as is provided in the first section of this act, such certificate shall be returned to, and filed in the General Land Office within eight months from the passage of this act, or the location and survey made by virtue thereof, shall be null and void." Laws 2d Sess. 1871, p. 45, c. 57. The J. P. Wilds certificate, being a headright, was embraced in the terms of the first section of that act, therefore included in the part of the second section copied above. At the date of that enactment the J. P. Wilds certificate was not in the General Land Office, neither was it returned to that office prior to the 29th day of July, 1872. It follows that by the unmistakable language of the law the survey made under that certificate became void, and on March 30, 1881, the land was subject to location and appropriation by the certificate of John M. Bowyer, then located thereon, unless it shall appear that the unconditional certificate was at some time prior to July 29, 1872, on file in the General Land Office.

The honorable Court of Civil Appeals laid down these propositions: (1) That the issuance of the certificate to J. P. Wilds constituted a contract between him and the state under which he was entitled to appropriate 640 acres of the public domain. (2) That the location and survey of the land and return of the field notes to the General Land Office under that certificate constituted a vested right in the owner of it to that survey of land. Upon these propositions the Court of Civil Appeals based its conclusion that the act of November 29, 1871, was in conflict with article 1, § 16, of the Constitution of the state, which reads as follows: "No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, retroactive law, or any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be made." It is claimed that the law is retroactive and violated the obligation of the contract and impaired the vested right secured by the location and survey. The act of 1871 here in question did not in any manner impair the rights of the grantee to the certificate issued to Wilds, nor did it destroy the right to acquire land by locating it. Only the location and survey are made void. After the forfeiture of the survey, the certificate might still have been located upon the public domain of the state. Therefore there was no impairment of the terms or the legal effect of the contract between the state and the citizen. The law did not destroy the right acquired by the location. "In all such cases, however, the imperfect right is lost through the failure of the person who claims, and seeks to assert it, to do what he knew he must do, and without which the law promised nothing. That the law may be passed after the imperfect right has an existence does not make it objectionable."

It is true that a survey under the Wilds certificate and the return of the field notes and certificate would have constituted a vested right in that land to the extent that it secured to the owner of the certificate a right to perfect his imperfect title to the land in the manner and time prescribed by law, or that should thereafter be prescribed; but it did not invest the owner with the title to the land that remained in the state until the patent should be issued. In order to complete his title Wilds, or his assignee, was required to present the certificate to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and procure a patent for the land. The location and survey could not have been perfected into full title without presenting the certificate to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and depositing it with him. It would be implied that the certificate upon which the patent was issued should be delivered up to the state. The Legislature had the authority to prescribe a time within which those acts should be performed and to declare a forfeiture of the survey on failure of the owner to comply with the terms expressed. Snider v. Methvin, 60 Tex. 499. In that case this court said: "That the Legislature may prescribe a time within which a person must perform acts necessary to the vestiture of title to land is certainly true; and that, in case of failure to comply with such a requirement, imperfect rights, such rights as could be made perfect only by compliance, may be annulled by legislation declaring the utmost limit of time which shall be given to perform such acts. Instances of the exercise of such power by the Legislature are seen in those acts requiring surveys already made to be returned within a given time or the surveys to become null and void, and in acts prescribing the period within which land certificates of the various classes should be presented to the several boards and tribunals created to determine the validity and genuineness of such claims."

To the instances mentioned by the court we would add the following: In 1876 the Legislature enacted a law (Laws 1876, p. 46, c. 48, § 4, as amended by Laws 1879, p. 35, c. 35), providing that in case the records of deeds of any county had been, or should be, destroyed by fire, every owner of land whose deed had been recorded in said records should have four years' time within which to re-record the instrument, and, in case of failure to do so, the destroyed record should no longer constitute notice of the existence of the deed. The Supreme Court sustained this law as being valid. O'Neal v. Pettus, 79 Tex. 254, 14 S. W. 1065. On the 5th day of February, 1840, the Congress of the Republic of Texas passed an act whereby it required that all of a certain class of certificates which had been previously issued should be presented to a board of commissioners created by that act within a given time, and that the person claiming to own such certificate should be required to establish its validity, and in case it was not presented or not proved to be genuine the right under such certificate should cease. The Supreme Court of the state held that law to be constitutional, although it did in fact destroy the right claimed to have been acquired by reason of the issuance of the certificate. Hosner v. De Young, 1 Tex. 764. In the year 1856 the Legislature passed a law which required that each owner of a land certificate of certain classes theretofore issued should present his certificate to a commissioner to be appointed, and by proof to establish its validity and failing to do so the certificate should cease to be of any force. That law was sustained in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Moore in the case of Durrett v. Crosby, 28 Tex. 688. Other similar laws which have been sustained might be cited; but we deem these sufficient. We are of opinion that the Court of Civil Appeals erred in holding the act of the 29th or November, 1871, to be void, and for such error the judgment in this case must be reversed, and the cause remanded.

In remanding the cause we think it proper to say that, the state having issued a patent upon the location made under the Bowyer certificate, it will devolve upon the defendant below to prove that the unconditional certificate issued to J. P. Wilds was located and the field notes and certificate returned to and deposited in the General Land Office at some time prior to the 29th day of July, 1872. Such proof in our opinion would show a vested right which would be superior to the right upon which the patent was issued, unless the plaintiffs shall prove that, after the Wilds certificate had been deposited in the land office, it was withdrawn therefrom by the owner of the certificate, or by some person authorized by him to do so. Snider v. Methvin, cited above. If such proof should be made by the plaintiffs, then the survey made by the Wilds certificate must be held to have been forfeited under the act of November 29, 1871, and plaintiffs would be entitled to recover the land in controversy.

Reversed and remanded.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1090*)—APPEAL—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

Where accused stated in his motion for new trial that he was not prepared for trial, not having been able to procure material evidence, because he had no attorney to attend to his case, and that his motion for a continuance when the case was called was overruled, but there was no bill of exception reserved to such matters, and nothing in the record verifying such statement, except such mention in the motion for new trial, the questions raised would not be reviewed.

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; Robt. B. Seay, Judge.

T. O. Franks was convicted of crime, and appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This record is before us without a statement of facts or bills of exceptions.

There is a statement in the motion for new trial that appellant was not prepared for trial, not having been able to procure material evidence on account of having no attorney to attend to his case; and he further states that he made a motion for continuance when the case was called for trial, and that the court overruled this, and he was compelled to go to trial unprepared. There is no bill of exception reserved to this matter, and there is nothing in the record verifying this statement, except the mention of it in the motion for new trial. As the record is presented, we are unable to review these questions.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

ANIMALS (§ 50*)—STOCK-LAW ELECTION—VALIDITY—DESCRIPTION.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4980, providing that a petition for a stock-law election from the freeholders of a subdivision of a county shall properly describe such subdivision and the boundaries thereof, a stock-law election is invalid where the petition, the order of commissioners' court, the notices of election, and the proclamation of the county judge ordering an election contained no particular description by metes and bounds of the subdivision in which the election was to be held.

Habeas corpus, on the relation of J. F. Gullidge, to secure his release from custody. Relator discharged.

Norman & Shook, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and C. F. Gibson, Co. Atty., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This is an original application for writ of habeas corpus, made to this court in term time. The application involves the validity of the stock-law election held in Cherokee county. It is averred and proven that the petition upon which the election was held, as well as the order of the commissioners' court, the notices of election, and the proclamation of the county judge putting same in effect and ordering said election, contained no particular description by metes and bounds of the territory in which such election was to be held, and in fact was thereafter held, other than as justice precinct No. 2, Cherokee county, Tex.; and it is therefore averred that said election, by reason of the failure to describe particularly such justice precinct No. 2 by metes and bounds, is invalid.

That such an election is invalid is too clear for discussion. Article 4980 of the Revised Civil Statutes is as follows: "Such petition shall set forth clearly the class or classes of animals enumerated in the preceding articles which the petitioners desire shall not run at large in such county or subdivision, as the case may be; and if the petition be from the freeholders of a subdivision of any county such subdivision shall be particularly described and the boundaries thereof designated." Applicant's position has been sustained directly both by the decisions of this court and the Supreme Court. Cox v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 88 S. W. 812; Railway Company v. Tolbert, 100 Tex. 483, 101 S. W. 206; Railway Company v. Tolbert (Tex. Civ. App.) 90 S. W. 508. In this connection it should be stated that originally application was made to the county judge of Cherokee county, who indorsed on such application a statement that his own judgment was that the writ should be granted, but that, in view of the importance, not only to relator, but to the inhabitants of the territory to be affected by the decision, and inasmuch as by the discharge of the relator there could be no such authoritative decision of the question as was to be desired, it was suggested that the application be made to us in the first instance. We think the authorities above cited are conclusive, and that, indeed, the matter is settled past discussion.

Relator is accordingly ordered discharged.

HANKINS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 173*)—VARIANCE—NAME OF ACCUSED.

An indictment for selling liquors to "Jim W." is not supported by proof of a sale to "Will

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 233*)—PROSECUTIONS—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence that the proprietor of the drug store where the alleged sale of liquors was made had employed the accused, a day or two before, to haul away empty beer and whisky bottles, is inadmissible, as not tending to show a sale by the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

Appeal from Johnson County Court; J. B. Haynes, Judge.

John Hankins was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Reversed.

Phillips & Bledsoe, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was convicted in the county court of Johnson county, Tex., on the 18th day of February of this year, on a charge of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of the local option law, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $50 and imprisonment in the county jail for 40 days.

1. The indictment in the case alleges sale by appellant to one Jim Washington. The only proof in the record as to the sale is by one Willis or Will Washington. The statement of facts shows the following: “Willis Washington, being duly sworn, testified for the state as follows: ‘My name is Will Washington. * * * I told him I wanted to get some whisky, and gave him 75 cents. He got a pint bottle of whisky and gave it to me.’” There is no other reference to the name of the prosecuting witness in the record, except at one time he was referred to as Washington. The rule is elementary that the name of the person to whom the alleged sale was made shall be proven to be the same person as alleged in the indictment. There is no evidence in the record that this witness, Will or Willis Washington, was ever called or known as Jim Washington. This variance was fatal to a conviction. Perry v. State, 4 Tex. App. 566.

2. Again, we think the court erred in admitting in evidence the testimony of Ward Roper to the effect, in substance, that about a day or two before the alleged sale he sent appellant to Ft. Worth with a wagon and team, in which he carried a load of empty bottles to sell, and among these bottles were beer bottles, frosty bottles, whisky bottles, medicine bottles, and all kinds of bottles. Roper, it should be stated, was the proprietor of the drug store where the sale was alleged to have been made. This testimony did not tend to show a sale by appellant, and the only effect of same would probably be to prejudice the jury against appellant, and perhaps impress them that Roper was engaged in an unlawful business, and in this manner injure the rights of appellant.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted in the district court of Hunt county on a charge of burglary, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the reformatory.

The record is before us without a statement of facts or bill of exceptions. The indictment is in the usual form, and the charge of the court is a correct and proper presentation of the law applicable to the facts of the case.

No error appearing, the judgment is in all things affirmed.

BRANDT v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1090*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONDUCT OF JURORS.

That a jury in a criminal case received testimony and evidence and wrong information as to the evidence in the case from one of their members cannot be reviewed, in the absence of bill of exceptions evidencing all the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2821; Dec. Dig. § 1090.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—REVIEW—EVIDENCE—APPROVAL OF VERDICT.

Where a verdict convicting defendant has been approved by the trial court, and the evidence, if believed, justifies the conviction, it will not be disturbed.

Appeal from District Court, Ft. Bend County; Wells Thompson, Judge.

Lucius Brandt was convicted of assault with intent to rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment had in the district court of Ft. Bend county on April 26, 1909, convicting him of the offense of assault with intent to rape, and assessing his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of two years.

Appellant's motion for a new trial raises three questions: First, that the jury received testimony and evidence against defendant from one of their own members which was not introduced before the court, and which was to the effect that appellant had served a term of years in the state penitentiary, which had a detrimental effect on his cause; and, again, that one of the jurymen, being in doubt as to the testimony of one of the witnesses, was informed by the other members that a certain matter occurred at a different time from the date and time in fact such event happened, and that the jurymen, therefore, on such erroneous information, changed his mind, and accordingly his verdict, to the detriment of appellant. The last contention is that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence.

There is no bill of exceptions in the record, nor is the charge of the court complained of in the motion. It is manifest, under the well-settled rules governing this tribunal, that the first two matters mentioned above cannot, in the absence of bill of exceptions evidencing all the facts there stated, be considered by us. The evidence in the case is far from satisfactory, though the prosecuting witness testifies to an assault by such means and force and under such circumstances as, if believed, to justify the jury in concluding that appellant was guilty. This verdict has received the sanction and approval of the learned trial court, and we feel that we ought not, as here presented, to interfere.

Finding no error in the proceedings of the court below, the judgment is hereby in all things affirmed.

GEE v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 596*)—CONTINUANCE—GROUNDS—ABSENT WITNESSES—IMPEACHING TESTIMONY.

A continuance for absent testimony is properly refused, where such testimony could only be used to impeach a state's witness, who is to testify in the case.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—UNLAWFUL SALES—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Testimony of the state's witness that he gave accused 25 cents to get him some whisky, and that accused shortly afterwards gave him a drink of whisky, was sufficient to justify a conviction for violating the local option law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Appeal from Montague County Court; A. W. Ritchie, Judge.

J. D. Gee was convicted of violating the local option law, and appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of violating the local option law. When the case was called for trial, appellant moved to continue the case on account of the absence of Mark and Ophelia Black. By these witnesses he expected to prove that the state's witness and alleged purchaser, Winniger, on or about the 25th of February, 1909, while at the house of said witnesses Black, stated to them that his (witness') father had given or offered to give said witness a horse, bridle and saddle if he would testify against this defendant in this case. This evidence was sought to impeach the credibility of the state's witness, Winniger. The court did not err in overruling this application. Where the absent testimony could only be used for the purpose of impeaching a state's witness, who is to testify in the case, the continuance should be refused. Garrett v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 198, 38 S. W. 1017, 39 S. W. 108; Rodgers v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 563, 38 S. W. 184. In Butts v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 364, 33 S. W. 866, it was held that a continuance should not be granted to obtain evidence that is only impeaching. See, also, Franklin v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 203, 29 S. W. 1088; Bolton v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 1010.

The only other question suggested for consideration is the alleged insufficiency of the evidence. The evidence of the state's witness was sufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. He testified he gave appellant 25 cents to get him some whisky, and that appellant shortly afterwards gave him a drink of whisky.

There being no error in the record requiring a reversal, the judgment is affirmed.

COUCH v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

BAIL (§ 77*)—FORFEITURE—PROCESS—SERVICE OF CITATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 480, entitling sureties on a bail bond to notice of forfeiture proceedings by service of citation the length of time and in the manner required in civil actions, and requiring the officer executing the citation to make the return as provided for return of citation in civil actions, a return of service and citation reading, "Came to hand 22d day of August, 1908, and executed on * * * C. 22d day of August, 1908, in B. county," was not sufficient to sustain a default judgment against a surety on a bail bond.

Appeal from Brown County Court; A. M. Brumfield, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against J. C. Couch. From a judgment for the State, by default, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Scott & Foster, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This appeal is from a forfeiture of a bail bond. The judgment was taken by default.

It is contended that the service and execution thereof, as shown by the officer's return, is not sufficient. The return as to the service and execution of the papers, notice, etc., is as follows: "Came to hand 22d day of August, 1908, and executed on J. C. Couch 22d day of August, 1908, in Brownwood, Tex., and executed on C. H. Benney Sept. 1, 1908, in Brownwood, Tex."—signed by the sheriff, by a deputy. Under all the authorities, this service is not sufficient. Article 480, Code Cr. Proc. 1895, provides as follows: "Sureties shall be entitled to notice by service of citation, the length of time and in the manner required in civil actions, and the officer executing the citation shall return the same in the manner provided for the return of citations in civil actions." In proceedings upon forfeited bail bonds and recognizances, the sureties are entitled to notice, by service of citation, for the length of time and in the manner required in civil actions. Middleton v. State, 11 Tex. 255. For collation of authorities generally, see White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc. § 436; Batt's Ann. Civ. St. art. 1225, and citations in notes; Fulton v. State, 14 Tex. App. 32;

Rutherford et al. v. Davenport et al. (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 110; Russell et al. v. Butler et al. (Tex. Civ. App.) 71 S. W. 386.

The judgment by default under the service and execution of the process is not sufficient to sustain the judgment by default under the authorities cited.

The judgment is reversed and remanded.

MARTIN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 239*)—ILLEGAL SALES—EVIDENCE—ISSUES.

Where accused, on a trial for selling intoxicating liquors on election day, admitted the sale of six bottles of liquor to prosecutor, who testified that five bottles intoxicated him, and testified that the liquor was warranted to be nonintoxicating, that he had seen people drink as many as half a dozen bottles many times and that it never intoxicated, and that he had told the wholesale men that he wanted nothing that could not be legally sold in local option territory, the evidence raised the issue of honest mistake of fact; and the court, on request, must submit the issue.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 231*)—ILLEGAL SALES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on a trial for selling intoxicating liquor on election day, prosecutor testified to the purchase of six bottles of liquor, and that five bottles made him intoxicated, and accused testified that the liquor was nonintoxicating, it was error to exclude the testimony of a witness that he had drunk as many as six or eight bottles a day many times, and that it was nonintoxicating.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 291; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

Appeal from Montague County Court; A. W. Ritchie, Judge.

Wes Martin was convicted of selling intoxicating liquor on election day, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. The appeal in this case is prosecuted from a conviction had in the county court of Montague county for selling intoxicating liquors on election day.

The only issue made in the case was in respect to the intoxicating quality of the liquor sold. The sale was admitted. W. G. Bralley, sheriff of the county, testified that on the 12th day of December, 1908, he bought six bottles of liquor, which appellant told him at the time was frosty; that he took them home, and the next morning drank five bottles of them; and that they intoxicated him so that he could hardly walk. Appellant testified that he sold the six bottles to Mr. Bralley, as stated by him; that the liquor was straight frosty, and warranted to be nonintoxicating; that he had seen people drink as many as a half dozen bottles many times, and that it never intoxicated him or any one else; that he had told the wholesale men he wanted nothing that could not legally be sold in local option territory.

1. In this state of the record, appellant requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "You are further instructed that if a person, laboring under a mistake as to a particular fact, shall do an act which would otherwise be criminal, he is guilty of no offense, unless he was guilty of a degree of carelessness or negligence which the law regards as criminal; and in this case, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant in this case was mistaken as to the character of the goods he so sold, if he sold any as alleged, and that he believed, and had reasons to believe, that the same was not intoxicating, then in that event you will acquit the defendant." While the evidence is slight on the issue of honest mistake of fact, nevertheless it was sufficient to raise the issue, and under the authority of numerous cases of this court this issue should have been submitted. We do not desire to be understood as holding that the requested charge was in every respect accurate as applied to the facts in evidence; but it was undoubtedly sufficient to have called the attention of the court to the matter, and, in substance, at least, should have been given. See Walker v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 496, 98 S. W. 843; Patrick v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 587, 78 S. W. 947; Mayne v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 93, 86 S. W. 329; Uloth v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 295, 87 S. W. 822; McRoberts v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 288, 92 S. W. 804.

2. Again, there was error in the action of the court in excluding the testimony of J. T. Stallings, offered by appellant. Stallings, the bill shows, was justice of the peace of Bowie precinct, in Montague county, and had been for some ten years. He testified that he was acquainted with appellant's place of business, and had drank a great deal of the frosty through the past summer and up to the time his place closed. Thereupon he was asked how much he had ever drank, and whether or not it was intoxicating. To this question, and the answer sought to be elicited thereby, counsel for the state objected, and the court sustained the objection, and refused to let the answer go to the jury. The witness would have answered, as the bill recites, that he had drank as many as six or eight bottles a day many times, and that it was nonintoxicating. It seems too clear for discussion, as the matter is presented, that this testimony was admissible, and on another trial should be received.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

RANKIN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 509*)—CONTINUANCE—SURPRISE.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, after the state's witness had testified to buying whisky from accused in the presence of two others, which accused denied, accused applied for a continuance on the grounds of surprise. The application stated that the persons claimed to have been present at the sale would testify to the contrary, and their affidavits attached denied that they were present, or that they ever saw accused sell whisky to any one. Held, that the application for continuance should have been granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1333, 1334; Dec. Dig. § 599.*]

Appeal from Montague County Court; A. W. Ritchie, Judge.

Dan Rankin was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Albert S. Phelps, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of violating the local option law. The state's witness Ward testified that he was in Sunset on the 25th of December, 1908, and was in George Powell's light plant, and Jack Rankin and Bob Davis were both present while he was there; that appellant gave him a bottle of whisky; that he gave somebody $1.25 for it, but did not remember whether he gave it to appellant or his brother, Jack Rankin, but he thought he gave it to appellant; that he had been drinking that day, and was drunk at the time. Dan Rankin testified that it is untrue that he ever met Ward in George Powell's light plant, and that it was untrue that he ever sold him a bottle of whisky at any time. The parties went to trial, and, when this state of case developed, appellant's counsel asked the court to permit him to withdraw his announcement of ready for trial on account of the absence of two witnesses, Jack Rankin and Bob Davis; that he was surprised at this testimony, and was unaware of what the witness Ward would testify as to the purchase—the time and place; that he had gone to Ward, and tried to ascertain what his testimony would be, to the end that he might prepare his case for trial. Ward denied that appellant had gone to him and asked him about the matter. Application for continuance or postponement was made, in which appellant states that he could prove by these two witnesses that they were not present at the time and on the occasion, and that no such transaction occurred. We are not stating the details of the application. The application was overruled and appellant convicted.

As a part of the motion for new trial, the affidavits of Davis and Jack Rankin are attached to it as exhibits. In these affidavits they swear most positively they were not present in the town of Sunset, in George Powell's light plant, and saw Dan Rankin or anybody else deliver to said witness a bottle of whisky, or brandy, or any other kind of a bottle; nor did they see Ward deliver to Rankin or anybody else a dollar, or any other sum of money. They further state that no such circumstance occurred on December 25, 1908, or at any other time, and it is not true that they were ever in George Powell's light plant at said time, or any other time, when Ward and Dan Rankin were present. We are of opinion that under the circumstances of this case this application should have been granted. McNamee v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 97 S. W. 96; Sessions v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 98 S. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 778, 789*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE—REASONABLE DOUBT.

A charge that defendant is presumed to be innocent till his guilt is established by legal evidence, and that in case the jury have a reasonable doubt as to guilt they must acquit, correctly instructs as to the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt.

Appeal from District Court, Smith County; R. W. Simpson, Judge.

Major Flournoy was convicted of theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Boyette, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of hog theft. The record is without bills of exceptions or statement of the facts.

The motion for new trial criticises the charge given by the court. The charge, we think, is a sufficient presentation of the law on the general propositions in regard to theft of hogs. The following charge given by the court is urged as error: "The defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence, and in case you have a reasonable doubt as to his guilt you must acquit." The objection is thus stated: The court should have charged: "The defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt." This criticism is rather hypercritical. The charge given, we think, does instruct the jury as to the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt. In addition to this, the court submitted the issues to the jury, informing them that, before they could convict, the evidence in the case must show beyond a reasonable doubt that appellant was guilty.

There are some other criticisms of the charge in the brief which are not mentioned in the motion for new trial, nor were exceptions taken to these matters on the trial. As these matters are presented, they cannot be considered.

There being no error in the record, the judgment is ordered to be affirmed.

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; Robert B. Seay, Judge.

Will Walters was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

RAMSEY, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a conviction of burglary, had in the criminal district court of Dallas county on June 30, 1909, wherein appellant was convicted of said offense, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

As the record comes to us, there is neither bill of exception, statement of facts, nor motion for a new trial. The indictment is valid. In this state of the record, it follows, of necessity, there is no question which we can review, and the judgment of conviction is therefore affirmed.

Ramsey, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from District Court, Falls County; Richard I. Munroe, Judge.

Nat McCleary was convicted of an unlawful homicide, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Nat Lewellyn and Spivey, Bartlett & Carter, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Tom Connally, Co. Atty., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was convicted in the district court of Falls county on the 24th day of February, 1909, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary. From such judgment of conviction he appeals to this court, and asks that same be reversed for many reasons.

The facts in evidence showed that appellant, who was a young white boy about 19 years old, on or about the 25th day of October, 1908, in the village of Durango, in Falls county, shot and killed John Shaderick. Shaderick was a negro man some 35 years of age. Appellant established a good reputation in the community where he was raised as a peaceable, quiet, inoffensive man. The testimony of the appellant tended to establish the fact that the deceased was a dangerous and quarrelsome man, though this was contested by the state, which introduced some evidence to the effect that his reputation was good as a peaceable, quiet, and an inoffensive citizen. The evidence showed that on the day of the homicide appellant, with Bonner Peavy, E. C. Stuart, and Dallas Stuart, left the town of Lott in a buggy, and some distance from this town, on the way to Durango, they passed Will Reed, who was in a wagon, in which was also the deceased and another negro. Soon after passing the wagon containing Reed and the negroes, appellant and one of his companions went back to the wagon to get some whisky. The occasion of their going back and what occurred is disputed in the testimony; but it is conceded that there was some rough language used between the appellant and deceased. Appellant's witnesses testified that deceased called him a son of a bitch and attempted to strike him with his knife. This was probably between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The parties named above continued their journey to Durango, where appellant obtained a gun and made inquiry for some large shot, saying that he wanted to kill some ducks. Some of the witnesses testify that appellant walked with the deceased, Shaderick, and another negro, from near a man named James' place down to where the stores were situated in the village of Durango. Deceased was shot three times. One shot was over the eyebrows, another on the cheek, and the third near the temple.

Appellant, by his testimony, if believed, makes a case of self-defense. He explains his possession of the gun with the statement that he intended to see Shaderick and demand an apology, and apprehended that, as a result of his mission, deceased might assault him, and for his protection, and not for any other purpose, he had provided himself with a gun; that later on he felt that, if he exhibited the gun, the negro might think he was looking for trouble, and for this reason provided himself with a pistol, and with this on his person approached Shaderick, and said to him more than once that he thought that he owed him an apology; that, on making this statement to deceased the third time, deceased turned towards him, put his hand in his pocket, and said he would apologize to no white man, with an oath, and started, as he believed, with a weapon in his hand, to advance upon him; and that he shot Shaderick in the belief that his own life was in danger. Appellant's testimony to this effect was somewhat strongly supported by the evidence of E. C. Stuart, Bonner Peavy, and one Stevens, and his contention found some support, also, in the testimony of Will Reed. The testimony of most of these witnesses related to the direct issue of self-defense, and was in substantial accord with the statement and testimony of appellant, and was, of course, of the highest importance to his defense.

The county attorney, acting for the state, sought to impeach these witnesses, and not wholly without success, by producing and having them identify, and subsequently offering in evidence, written statements, some of which were made on the examining trial, soon after the tragedy, and others made before the grand jury. In some of these statements, one of the witnesses, at least, who had testified to the acts of deceased in putting his hand in his pocket and advancing on appellant, testified on the examining trial that at the time of the shooting, or at any event at the time the first shot was fired, and just before, he did not and could not see deceased. The testimony of other witnesses positively affirmed some matters on the trial as true which were not mentioned at all as having occurred in their testimony on the examining trial.

1. In this state of the case, the court instructed the jury as follows: "There is testimony before you tending to contradict or impeach the witnesses Will Reed, E. C. Stuart, Bonner Peavy, and Mose Stevens. As to the effect of said impeaching or contradicting testimony, if any, you are instructed that you can only consider the same for impeachment purposes, if at all, and for no other purpose." We think, considered altogether, that this charge must be held to be on the weight of the evidence. Santee v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 436; Stull v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 547, 84 S. W. 1060.

In the first-cited case the court gave the following charge: "You are further instructed that evidence has been admitted before you tending to show that, about the time defendant is charged to have received and concealed the property charged in the indictment, he received property belonging to another person than R. K. Lane that was stolen. You can consider said testimony in determining what knowledge the defendant had with reference to the property described in the indictment at the time he received or concealed the same, if he did receive or conceal it, and for no other purpose." After adverting to some other errors in this charge, Judge Henderson, speaking for the court, uses this language: "Now, in this connection, the court, in the charge above quoted, tells the jury that the evidence admitted tended to show that defendant, about the time charged in the indictment, received the Felson goods, and that they were stolen. Webster defines the word 'tend' to mean as follows: 'To be directed, as to any end or purpose; to aim; to have or give a leaning; to exert activity or influence; to act as a means; to contribute to.' As above defined, the charge of the court would convey to the jury that the judge believed that the testimony had an aim or leaning in the direction of showing that such other goods were stolen; that said evidence contributed to show such fact. If the Felson goods had not been stolen, then the fact that the defendant subsequently had possession of the same would not constitute any inculpatory evidence against him as to having knowingly received the alleged stolen goods he is charged in the indictment to have received. If, on the other hand, said goods were stolen property, then it would constitute a criminative fact against the defendant. Certainly the court could not assume as an admitted fact that said goods were stolen; but it was his duty to submit such issue fairly to the jury, and it occurs to us that the use of the word 'tending,' in the charge of the court, was a suggestion to the jury that the evidence aimed and contributed to establish the fact that said Felson's goods were stolen, and so was an invasion of the province of the jury."

The charge of the court considered in the case of Stull v. State, supra, was to this effect: "The testimony before you of defendant as to his having been charged with any other crime or crimes than the one for which he is now on trial was admitted only for the purpose of going to the credibility of the defendant as a witness, and for no other purpose, and you will consider it for no other purpose whatever." Commenting on this charge, the court say: "Said charge is upon the weight of the evidence, and assumes that defendant had testified he had been charged with other crimes. It is also upon the weight of the evidence, because it tells the jury that it 'goes to his credibility,' which is equivalent to telling the jury that it affects his credibility, because the jury knows, as does any person with ordinary sense, that if it 'goes to his credibility' it cannot strengthen it, but if it 'goes to his credibility' it 'goes' against his credibility. The court should have so instructed the jury on this phase of the case as to leave it with the jury as to whether it had any effect at all on defendant's testimony. It is a question for the jury to determine what effect any fact has on the weight to be given the testimony of any witness, and is entrenching upon the function of the jury for the court to tell them in his charge that 'certain testimony is admitted for the purpose of going to the credibility of the defendant as a witness.'"

While it is true in this case the court says that the jury may consider the same for impeachment purposes, if at all, it is open to the criticism and objection that it begins with an affirmative statement that there is testimony before them tending to contradict the witnesses named. There is no provision of our criminal law which the courts have guarded more jealously than that prohibiting courts from commenting on the weight of the evidence. In respect to testimony so vital as that of these witnesses we cannot see on what ground this charge could be upheld, and for this reason we think the case should be reversed.

2. There are quite a number of other questions raised on the appeal touching the admissibility of testimony, application for continuance, and remarks of counsel, most of which we deem it unnecessary to discuss.

Among other things, the court instructed the jury as follows: "But in this connection you are charged that the defendant had the right, on a peaceable mission, to seek out the deceased and ask him to apologize to him, or retract the insulting language, if any, he claimed the deceased had used towards him, and he also had the right to arm himself for his necessary self-defense, if he apprehended danger at the time he sought such apology or retraction, if any, from the deceased; and if you believe from the evidence that the defendant, on a peaceable mission, sought out the deceased and asked him to apologize to him, or retract the insulting language he claimed the deceased had used towards him, and that when he made such request, if any, the deceased refused to do so, and if you further believe from the evidence that at the time the fatal shot was fired it reasonably appeared to the defendant, from the acts and demonstrations of the deceased, if any, or from the words of the deceased, coupled with his acts and demonstrations, viewed from the standpoint of the defendant, that the deceased was then making an attack on the defendant, or the defendant believed that he was in the act of making an attack on him, which, from the manner and character of it, caused the defendant to have reasonable expectation or fear of death or serious bodily harm, and that, acting under such reasonable apprehension or fear, the defendant shot and killed the said John Shaderrick, then and in that event you will acquit him; or if you have a reasonable doubt thereof you will acquit him." The contention is earnestly made that this charge was erroneous, and that the words "on a peaceful mission" placed an improper limitation on appellant's rights. Appellant refers, in support of his proposition, to the following cases: King v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 208, 101 S. W. 237, 123 Am. St. Rep. 881; Airhart v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 470, 51 S. W. 214, 76 Am. St. Rep. 736; Mitchell v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 180, 96 S. W. 43; Pratt v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 227, 96 S. W. 8; Melton v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 451, 83 S. W. 822; Gant v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 801.

The majority of the court think this charge, under the evidence, erroneous, and that same should operate as a reversal. My own opinion is that in the respect complained of the charge is not erroneous, but in accordance with all the authorities in this state, except the case of King v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 208, 101 S. W. 237, 123 Am. St. Rep. 881. See Mitchell v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 180, 96 S. W. 43; Shannon v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 2, 28 S. W. 687, 60 Am. St. Rep. 17; Melton v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 451, 83 S. W. 822; Winters v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 582, 40 S. W. 303; Winters v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 51 S. W. 1110; Hall v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 444, 60 S. State*, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 63, 94 S. W. 1044. And, by comparison, see Bush v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 539, 51 S. W. 239.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

CRAVENS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 46*)—VALIDITY OF STATUTE—NECESSITY OF DETERMINATION.

Where a statute may be sustained as a local or special law, the court will not inquire whether the statute, if treated as a general law, is unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 43-45; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 93*)—LOCAL AND SPECIAL LAW—VALIDITY.

Acts 30th Leg. (Laws 1907, p. 177) c. 88, fixing the compensation of county attorneys in cities of over 30,000 and under 40,000 population according to the census of 1900, is not invalid as a local or special law, within Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibiting special legislation, but is a valid law, within article 11, § 5, providing that cities having more than 10,000 population may have their charters granted or amended by special act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 102; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 61*)—PUBLICATION OF LOCAL AND SPECIAL STATUTES—PRESUMPTIONS.

The court, in the absence of proof to the contrary, must presume that the Legislature, in adopting a local or special law, complied with Const. art. 3, § 57, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 3260, relating to publication of notice of intention to apply for the passage of local or special laws; and this is true, though the act purports on its face to be a general law.

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Galveston County; El. R. Campbell, Judge.

Lizzie Cravens was convicted of crime. From an order denying her motion to retax the costs in the case, she appeals. Affirmed.

R. H. & Alice S. Tiernan and John T. Wheeler, for appellant. Miles Crowley, James B. & Charles J. Stubbs, and F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This is an appeal prosecuted by Lizzie Cravens from an order of the criminal district court of Galveston county, refusing to retax the cost in a case in said court wherein she had been convicted, and to exclude and strike therefrom the sum of $10 assessed and taxed as a proper fee of the county attorney of Galveston county for representing the state therein. The order appealed from in substance adjudges the fees so taxed to be proper and legal, and recites: "It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the aforesaid motion to retax costs be and the same is hereby in all things overruled." Appellant was allowed 20 days after adjournment within which to file bill of exceptions and statement of facts.

By bill of exception it is recited that the following facts were adduced in evidence by appellant: A complaint was filed in the corporation court in Galveston on November 23, 1908, in which appellant was charged with unlawfully being under the influence of intoxicating liquors in a public place in the city of Galveston on said day; the fact that she was fined the sum of $1 in the corporation court, from which judgment she gave notice of appeal to the criminal district court of Galveston county, Tex. She also offered in evidence the transcript of the record of said court, which shows, among the cost in said corporation court, was a fee of $10 of the county attorney. It further appears that on the 5th day of February, 1909, in said criminal district court, appellant pleaded guilty to said charge, and was fined the sum of $10, and the cost adjudged against her in the last-named court, including a fee of $10 to the county attorney; that thereafter she filed her motion to strike out the fee of $10 taxed for the county attorney of Galveston county, claiming that the act of the Legislature of Texas under and by virtue of which said fee was taxed was in contravention of the Constitution, illegal, and void. The bill recites that appellant had paid the sum of $28.05 into the registry of the court, this being the sum taxed against her (including final costs), less the said fee of $10 so taxed against her for said county attorney. This was all the evidence adduced on the hearing of the motion.

Appellant asserts that the act of the 30th Legislature (Laws 1907, p. 177, c. 88), fixing the compensation of county attorneys in cities of over 30,000 population and under 40,000 population, according to the census of 1900, is unconstitutional, because it is in contravention of section 56, art. 3, of the Constitution of Texas, and that same is a local and special law. This article of the Constitution provides, in substance, that the Legislature shall not, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution, pass any local or special law authorizing any of the several matters and things therein named. Among the matters and things against which special legislation is inhibited are the following: Incorporating cities, towns, or villages, or changing their charters. This provision of the Constitution is to be construed in connection with section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution, which in terms provides that cities having more than 10,000 inhabitants may have their charters granted or amended by special act of the Legislature. In this case the act in question on its face is framed in form as if it were intended to be a general law, and yet it relates wholly to the compensation of the county attorney in a city or cities having a population of more than 30,000 and less than 40,000 inhabitants, and is in aid of the enforcement of the law in such cities.

It is to be noticed that the statement of facts in this record contains no suggestion, nor is any issue made, as to whether notice had in fact been given, before the meeting of the Legislature, of the purpose to introduce this bill as the Constitution requires. If, under the record, the act may be sustained as a local or special law, then it becomes unnecessary to inquire whether, if treated as a general law, it would be violative of the Constitution. If it may be assumed to be, or treated as, a local or special law, then we think it must be held, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that we should and will presume that all the prerequisites to the passage of same as a local or special law had been complied with. It will be noted that section 56 of article 3 of the Constitution provides that the Legislature shall not, "except as otherwise provided in this Constitution, pass any local or special law" authorizing, among other things, such an act as that here complained of. It would, as we believe, undoubtedly be within the power of the Legislature, by special act, to prescribe the powers and duties of officers in cities and to fix their compensation. If this measure had in terms been framed as a local measure, the question would be free from difficulty. If in fact its application is local, does the form of the law change the rule?

In most of the cases where similar acts have been held unconstitutional, as being special legislation, it was because the Legislature was not authorized under any circumstances to pass a local law in respect thereto. Section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution provides as follows: "Cities having more than 10,000 inhabitants may have their charters granted or amended by special act of the Legislature"—and may levy taxes and do other things as in said section provided. We think the true test in considering such legislation as special is not the test of form merely, but by its substance, and that, if considered with reference to what is enacted, it is in its nature special, and such as might have been enacted on notice and by special law, it should, and must in a proper case, be sustained as a local measure, notwithstanding it is clothed with the vesture of a general law. It was held by our Supreme Court in the case of City of Dallas v. Western Electric Co., 83 Tex. 243, 18 S. W. 552, that article 3, § 56, of the Constitution, prohibiting local or special legislation, does not apply to special city charters granted cities having more than 10,000 people. And it is further said that it was the purpose of the Constitution that the grant of power in the charter of a city having more than 10,000 inhabitants shall be complete without reference to any other law. Again, it was held in the case of Texas Savings & Real Estate Investment Association v. Pierre's Heirs, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 453, 31 S. W. 426, that Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibiting the Legislature from passing a local or special law regulating the practice or changing the rules of evidence in a judicial proceeding, does not apply to acts granting special charters to cities containing over 10,- 000 inhabitants; such charters being specially authorized by article 11, § 5.

Further, if it be conceded that the act complained of is a local or special law, and not a general law, then this court would and should presume conclusively, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the Constitution was complied with as to publication of notice of the intention to apply for the passage of the act in question, as demanded by article 3, § 57, of the Constitution, and as also expressly arranged for in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3260. This question came before the Court of Civil Appeals of the First Judicial District in the case of Moller v. City of Galveston, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 693, 57 S. W. 1116. In that case, discussing this matter, the court say: "The Constitution prohibits the passage by the Legislature of any local or special law, unless notice of the intention to apply therefor shall have been published in the locality where the matter or thing to be affected is situated, which notice shall state the substance of the contemplated law, and shall be published at least 30 days prior to the introduction into the Legislature of such bill, and in the manner to be provided by law. The evidence of such notice having been published is required to be exhibited to the Legislature before such act shall be passed." Further discussing the matter, the court says: "But we are of the opinion that the passage of the act by the Legislature is conclusive of the fact that due notice was given. The Constitution requires evidence of such publication to be exhibited to the Legislature before such act shall be passed. This, we think, is for the purpose of authorizing that body to pass conclusively upon this question of fact. To hold otherwise would be to relegate to the courts the ascertainment of a jurisdictional fact for the Legislature, and to unsettle every special or local law that has been passed since the adoption of the Constitution."

It may be objected that this act purports, on its face, to be a general law. It, however, relates to a matter touching the municipal life of the people of Galveston, and regulating the enforcement of the law in the local court of that municipality, and is such a law as might properly have been included in a city charter. The fact that on its face it purports to be a general law would not deny its validity as a special law, if notice in fact were given, and if it were such an act as might have been passed as a special law and a legitimate amendment of their charter. We think, on full review of the subject, that the act can, and should, be sustained as a special law, and that certainly, in the absence of proof to the contrary, we should and must assume that proper notice was given.

It follows, of course, that the court did not err in overruling the motion, and its action in so doing is hereby affirmed.

JONES v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. LARCENY (§ 27*)—PARTIES TO OFFENSE—"PRINCIPAL."

If accused's son and grandson took possession of another's cow from the range, and drove her away, with the intention of appropriating her to their own use, and accused was not present, he would not be guilty of the theft as a "principal," though he may have agreed that the animal should be stolen and subsequently butchered, and that he would participate in the butchering and would conceal the meat.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-57; Dec. Dig. § 27.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5552-5557; vol. 8, p. 7763.]

2. LARCENY (§ 70*)—INSTRUCTIONS—LIABILITY AS PRINCIPAL.

Where accused was prosecuted under an indictment charging the committing of cattle theft as a principal, he was entitled to a clear-cut charge that if he was not a principal under the statute he should be acquitted, and that the fact that he was an accomplice or a receiver of the stolen animal would not authorize his conviction.

Appeal from District Court, Liberty County; L. B. Hightower, Judge.

Henry Jones was convicted of cattle theft, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Stevens & Pickett, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of cattle theft. The alleged owner was named Swayne. The evidence is rather voluminous in minor details. The case is one purely of circumstantial evidence.

A witness named Holts testified: That on the evening of the 3d of July, 1907, he was on horseback, and passed where Ran Jones, son of appellant, and Miles Dark, grandson of appellant, were standing by their horses, and one of them had a rope in his hand. That he passed by without speaking to Ran, but Ran spoke to him. That about 50 or 60 yards from where the two were standing was a considerable bunch of cattle, about 30 or 40 in number. In this bunch was one belonging to Swayne, a red two year old heifer. This animal gave appearance of having been chased or run. Witness rode out to where the animal was, and identified it as Swayne's. That about that time Ran Jones rode away, and the witness saw nothing more of him. That witness and Miles Dark, the little grandson of appellant, rode away together. So far as this witness is concerned, there is nothing shown as to what became of Ran Jones or Miles Dark, except as stated. Miles Dark lived with appellant, and seems to have been raised by him up to that time, at which time he seems to have been something like 12 or 14 years of age. The evidence shows that

Ran Jones lived in the town of Liberty, and appellant something like $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles northeast of Liberty. This was late in the evening of the 3d of July. Ran Jones was seen by another witness later that evening, perhaps along about dusk, riding towards the town of Liberty, where he lived. The cattle mentioned were about 300 or 400 yards from the house of appellant at the time witness Holts saw them, and Ran Jones and Miles Dark near them.

Sam Holloman testified that he lived in the same neighborhood in which the appellant lived, and beyond him from the town of Liberty; that early on the morning of the 4th of July he was going to town, and passed appellant's house, and in appellant's lot he saw a little heifer yearling, which he ultimately describes as being about two years of age as he thought. He says the animal had its head towards him, but he knew it was a heifer, and in answer to a question stated he knew because he could see clear through it. He gives no other description of the animal than that, and places no brand upon it or marks on its ears. It might be well enough to state in this connection that appellant was the owner of cattle. After passing beyond appellant's house, this witness Holloman met Ran Jones going in the direction of his father's, and asked him if he saw a little yearling at his father's, and, being answered in the affirmative, stated that he was going to butcher it.

An officer named Thornton, a constable, testified that on the 4th of July, in company with the sheriff, Cherry, he went to appellant's home, armed with a search warrant, and searched his premises; that he found a number of tracks in the lot, which he followed out of the lot gate into and through the field in three separate trails; that these trails were tracked to a log in a cypress brake, and off the log into the brake some 75 yards to a tree, in which he found concealed three sacks of meat. The following day he returned, and found another sack of meat about 50 yards from where he had discovered the meat the previous day in the tree. He could not tell the size of the shoe tracks, but said they were 7's, 8's, 9's, or 10's; but he did not measure them, nor could he say they were three separate sizes; nor did he pay any attention to what kind or character of shoes made the tracks, nor did he fit the feet of appellant, Ran and Ike Jones into these tracks, and regretted that he did not do so. He carried these three parties with him, trailing the tracks out to where he discovered the three sacks of meat in the tree; nor would he swear that the tracks were not made by the same person. He also testifies that the same party who made the track he followed on the second day could have made the three tracks he found the previous day. His statement is this: "The man that made the track out to the fourth sack, so far as I know, could have made those three I found the first day. As to it being probably the same person and the same shoe, probably he could have made it." This witness disclosed expertness in tracing tracks. It is further disclosed by this witness that what he terms the "brake" was a muddy, boggy place of soft ground, and that in passing over it his feet would go deep into the mud and over the top of his laced boots. He also states that he did not notice whether appellant and his two sons, Ran and Ike, had any mud on their shoes or clothing, that they assisted him in tracing these tracks, and that he made them carry the three sacks of meat away from the tree where they were discovered. He also states that he saw no evidence of where a beef had been butchered about appellant's premises anywhere, except that in what he calls a "little hog pen" he saw some blue flies about some weeds, as if they scented or smelled something. These weeds had not been disturbed or mashed down. It may be stated from the evidence that appellant has a lot in which he kept his milch cows, horses, and a mule. Ike Jones, a son of appellant, milked the cows. There was a continued and very close search made for a place where the animal was butchered, as well as to discover the hide, which search proved fruitless. There was no blood, offal, or other evidence of a beef having been butchered in the lot or about appellant's premises. The above in substance is a fair statement of this witness' testimony.

The appellant introduced evidence to the effect that he had nothing to do with the killing of any animal, and that it was not killed at his place. Several witnesses were introduced to this effect. Ike Jones, appellant's son, testified for the appellant; it having been shown that he had been acquitted on a charge of theft of the animal. His evidence was in substance that there was no animal of any sort butchered at the place, and he knew nothing about the meat, or how it got to the tree, and that his father and brother Ran did not participate in the killing of any animal about the premises, and in fact had nothing to do with the killing of any animal, on the 4th of July. A woman by the name of Burnett, who was living at the home of appellant, testified in substance as did Ike Jones. All the witnesses for the state and defendant testifying on this point state that this witness was there, and was ironing on the morning of the 4th of July, and had a considerable fire in the yard, where she heated her smoothing irons. The state shows that appellant had a very small quantity of cooked beef in his safe or on a shelf, as well as a small quantity of cooked liver. This was a small amount. Some of the meat and liver, from the testimony of appellant's witnesses, had been eaten. Appellant accounted for the presence of this meat by the fact that Ike Jones had bought the meat in the town of Liberty on the 3d of July, and appellant had bought the liver from a man named McAllister. The state denied this through testimony.

Holloman was arrested by the officer for the theft of the animal, and kept under arrest for a day or so, and then discharged. On the morning of the 4th of July the officer, Thornton, went to the house of Holloman and found the doors barred or fastened on the inside, but finally succeeded in kicking them open and found Holloman asleep. Holloman says he was drunk. The officer aroused him, and returned to appellant's house, and instituted the search above described. This, perhaps, without going further into the details, is a sufficient statement to review the questions.

The court gave a general charge, authorizing the jury to convict if they believed appellant guilty, and also instructed the jury in regard to the law of circumstantial evidence. Appellant asked several charges submitting the law of principals. Three of these were given by the court, and qualified in what appellant contends is an unauthorized manner. It is hardly necessary, we think, to reproduce each of these charges, as they in substance embody the same general principle. Two of the charges, however, were refused by the court, on the ground that he had previously given other charges asked by appellant covering the same question. The propositions involved may be illustrated by this requested instruction: "You are instructed that if the defendant, Henry Jones, was only an accomplice, and not as a principal, in the commission of the alleged crime, you will find the defendant not guilty; and the law as to accomplice and principals is as follows: The dividing line between the two is the commencement of the commission of the offense. Therefore, if Henry Jones, the defendant, and Ran Jones, agreed to steal the alleged stolen animal together, but did not act together in the original taking of the said head of cattle, then Henry Jones, under such circumstances, would not be a principal, and if you so believe you will find the defendant not guilty, and so say by your verdict. When the acts committed prior to the commission of the principal offense or subsequent thereto, and one party is not present when the offense itself is committed, such party is not guilty as a principal offender, but as an accomplice, or accessory in law. If you, therefore, believe from the evidence that the head of cattle was actually stolen by Ran Jones or Miles Dark, or by both said Ran Jones and Miles Dark, acting together, and you further believe that the defendant, Henry Jones, was not present when the animal was originally taken, but that he subsequently received some of the stolen meat, or assisted in butchering or disposing of the same, you will in such case find the defendant not guilty, and so say by your verdict. And if you believe from the evidence that the alleged stolen animal was not originally taken by the defendant, Henry Jones, or that he was not present when the animal was originally taken, although the defendant may have agreed to assist in the theft and to help kill the alleged stolen animal, you will find the defendant not guilty, and so say by your verdict." This charge was given, with the following qualification by the court: "Given, with the remark that the foregoing special instruction is a correct exposition of the law; but you will consider the same with the following: All persons are principals who are guilty of acting together in the commission of the offense, and this includes not only those who are present at the commission of the offense, but those who, though absent, are doing their part in connection with and in furtherance of the common design; and all persons are principals who engage in procuring aid or means of any kind to assist in the commission of an offense, while others are executing the unlawful act."

Exception was reserved to the court qualifying the charge as qualified, and the contention is made that the qualification does not correctly state the law. It may be well to copy one of the other charges given by the court, which is as follows: "You are further instructed that, to constitute theft of cattle upon the range, the taking of the cattle is fully complete by the driving of such cattle with the intent to subsequently butcher the same; and if you therefore believe from the evidence that Ran Jones, on the 3d day of July, 1907, took possession of the head of cattle alleged to have been stolen, by driving the same from the range with the intent of killing the same, and that Henry Jones, the defendant, at the time of such taking of said cattle by the said Ran Jones was not present, you will find the defendant not guilty." The court gave this special charge with the following qualification: "Given, with this qualification: Add after the word 'guilty' in the last line of the above special instruction these words: 'Unless you find that the defendant was connected with the original taking by Ran Jones, if you find Ran Jones did drive the animal from the range.'" These two charges practically embody the thought contained in the other charges, one of which was given and two refused. The one given was qualified in the same manner as those herein copied.

We are of opinion that appellant's contention is correct. If Ran Jones and Miles Dark on the 3d of July took possession of Swayne's cow from the range, and drove her away with the intention of appropriating her to their own use and benefit, and appellant was not present, then under the facts of this case he would not be guilty as a principal. He may have agreed that the animal should be stolen and subsequently butchered, and that he would participate in butchering the animal and conceal the meat, still this would not make him a principal. It might constitute him an accomplice to the taking and a receiver of the stolen property after it came into his possession, or when he became connected with the animal or the fraudulent acquisition of the meat after being slaughtered; but he could not be, under our statute, a principal. This question has been so often decided we deem it unnecessary to discuss it. All the later authorities are harmonious on this question. The old rule in Smith's Case, 21 Tex. App. 107, 17 S. W. 552, by the majority of the court, as well as in Bean's Case, 17 Tex. App. 60, has been overruled by a long line of decisions and held not to be the law. It is unnecessary to go into a review of this question and what led to the later doctrine. The overruling and qualifying decisions discuss all these matters and assign the reasons. Sessions v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 159. We have not undertaken to collate all the cases, but enough to show the unbroken line, down to and inclusive of Davis v. State, supra, a very recently decided case. Appellant was entitled to a clear-cut charge to the jury that, if he was not a principal under our statutory law, he should be acquitted, and the fact that he was an accomplice, or a receiver, or both, would not authorize his conviction as a principal under this indictment.

There are several bills of exceptions reserved to the introduction of testimony of acts and statements of other parties, in the absence of appellant, and in the absence of a conspiracy shown. We are of opinion that upon another trial, if the facts are the same, testimony of this character should not be admitted. We deem it hardly necessary to go into a discussion of these matters, as they will suggest themselves to the learned trial judge.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

HANEY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 226*)—OFFENSES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, where defendant was convicted upon the testimony of but one witness, evidence that defendant, while upon the way to trial, upon being overtaken by a buggy in which the witness was riding, halted it, and pulled the witness out, and fought with him, was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 364*)—EVIDENCE—INADMISSIBILITY—RES GESTÆ.

The evidence was not admissible as part of the res gestæ of the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 805, 808-810, 813, 816-818; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 369*)—PREVIOUS CONVICTION.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, it was error to require defendant to testify that he had previously been convicted of violations of the local option law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822-824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—PREJUDICE—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence also tended to bring about a higher punishment than the minimum, as it placed defendant in a very bad light before the jury, to show that he was a common violator of the law, especially so because of the admission of evidence of the fight between defendant and the state's witness on the way to the trial.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—TRIAL—CURE OF ERRORS—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—EFFECT OF.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, the error in requiring defendant to testify that he had previously been convicted of violating the local option law was not cured by an instruction, given at the request of the state, after the argument was over and the charge given, withdrawing this evidence from the consideration of the jury, as the state had already received the full benefit of the testimony and the argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3141; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

Appeal from Montague County Court; A. W. Ritchie, Judge.

Jim Haney was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This is a conviction for violating the local option law. The state proved by a witness named Paul that appellant sold him some whisky. Appellant testified that he did not sell him any whisky, but sent his brother-in-law, Smith, a bottle of whisky by the witness Paul. Appellant kept a livery and feed stable. His brother-in-law Smith, kept a hotel, and the reason he sent whisky to his brother-in-law, he states, was that his brother-in-law had been kind to him, threw a good deal of trade to his livery stable, and was in a sickly condition and needed the whisky. This was practically the testimony.

On the morning before the trial that day appellant was coming to the county seat for the purpose of attending the trial, bringing his wife and children with him in a surrey. A man named Moody and the alleged purchaser, Paul, who was in a buggy with him, overtook appellant, who was walking alongside of his surrey in company with one or more of his children, the remainder of his family being in the surrey, when appellant halted them, and pulled Paul out of the buggy, and had a fight with him. This evidence was introduced by the state over appellant's protest and objection. We are of opinion this was error. It in no way tended to prove appellant had sold the whisky to Paul. It might indicate his outraged feelings that Paul was testifying against him under what he believed was false testimony; but it was a different transaction and different offense, which, as we understand, did not throw any light on this transaction, either as to motive or identity. Nor was it a part of the res gestæ. The sale of whisky, if it occurred, had long passed. Appellant had been arrested previously, and was en route to the court to stand his trial. We think this testimony was inadmissible, and, in view of other matter set up in other bills of exception, tended to bring about a higher punishment than the minimum; the fine in this case being $50 and 30 days' imprisonment. One of the bills recites the fact that there had been previous convictions in other cases against appellant, and that appellant had been placed in jail and suffered the punishment. It is also shown in the bills that on account of the fight excitement was rather high about the town and courthouse, and these matters tended to injure appellant and bring about a higher punishment.

A bill of exceptions recites that appellant himself was required to testify that he had previously been convicted for violations of the local option law. This went to the jury over the protest of appellant. It is made to appear by the bill of exception, after argument was over and after the charge had been given by the court, the state requested a charge withdrawing this evidence from the consideration of the jury. This charge the court gave, and instructed the jury not to consider it as evidence against the defendant. This evidence was clearly inadmissible and erroneous. Why it was introduced is not explained by the court, nor is any reason given. After the state had got the full benefit of the testimony and the argument, the state sought to withdraw the evil effect of it by the special charge. We do not believe this character of practice should be condoned. It has been found a matter of difficulty to always know, when illegitimate testimony has been introduced and withdrawn, whether the ill effects of the testimony could be also withdrawn from the jury; but this matter, it occurs to us, bears evidence of deliberate purpose in getting it before the jury and its effect upon them, and then in a special charge to avoid the error. This it is insisted contributed to the higher punishment of appellant, especially viewed in the light of the testimony previously discussed. This character of testimony was evidently damaging, and seriously so. It placed the appellant in a very bad light before the jury to have it shown to them that he was a common violator of the law, and especially so in this case, where the difficulty occurring between the witness and appellant on the road en route to the county seat shortly before and on the morning of the trial was shown. We are of opinion, therefore, that the error in regard to introducing this testimony was not cured by the state's requested instruction withdrawing it. Appellant had done all he could to avoid it, and asked for a fair trial. Under the circumstances, we believe the error was of sufficient importance to require a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

EUBANKS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 830*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—SUFFICIENCY.

Testimony for the state in a criminal case was sufficient to sustain a conviction under an indictment for theft and for fraudulently receiving stolen property. Defendant testified that he bought the property from or through another, and supported his evidence by another's testimony and by testimony as to his good reputation. The charge defined theft substantially in the terms of the statute, and submitted the offense of theft as such, as well as that of fraudulently receiving and concealing stolen property, and the issue of its voluntary return. Defendant requested a special instruction that, when a person takes property under a claim of title, he cannot be convicted of theft, and if the jury believed he took the property under a claim of title they must acquit. Held, that while the requested charge was not strictly accurate, nor its language wholly applicable to the case, it was sufficient to call the court's attention to its failure to submit the defense at all, and should, at least in substance, have been given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2012, 2017; Dec. Dig. § 830.*]

2. LARCENY (§ 73*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

An indictment for theft must aver possession of the property stolen, and that it was taken from possession of the owner or person holding for him, and in submitting the issue of possession it should be substantially in the terms of the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 196; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

3. LARCENY (§ 73*)—INSTRUCTIONS—POSSESSION AND OWNERSHIP.

A portion of a charge submitting the issue of the owner's possession of stolen sacks authorized a conviction if the jury were satisfied that defendant, at or about the time charged in the indictment, "fraudulently took from the possession of the sacks the property described in the indictment, and that they were the property of

J. J. McQ., without the consent of said J. J. McQ., with intent to deprive the owner of the value of the same," etc. Held, that it was wholly meaningless and defective, in that the jury were not required to find that the property was taken from possession of the person as laid in the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 196; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

4. LARCENY (§ 77*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

Where the issue of theft was raised by the state's case, and defendant admitted the manual taking, but claimed it was done under circumstances not imputing crime to him, but in pursuance of purchase, it was error to submit the issue of voluntary return of stolen property, as that doctrine necessarily implies there has been, in the first place, a criminal taking, and this charge was calculated to create a belief in the minds of the jury that the original taking was wrongful.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 199-204; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

Appeal from Ellis County Court; J. T. Spencer, Judge.

L. J. Eubanks was convicted on a trial on charges of theft and of receiving stolen property, and he appeals. Reversed.

Winn & Hancock, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was indicted by the grand jury of Ellis county on November 28th of last year for the theft of 26 sacks, alleged to be the property of one J. J. McQuatters, of the value of $2.60, and in another count with the offense of fraudulently receiving stolen property. The testimony of the state includes circumstances sufficient, perhaps, to sustain the conviction, if they stood alone. It was appellant's contention that he bought these sacks from or through one Parson Frierson, a negro driver. This contention he supported by his own testimony, as well as the evidence of Frank Tidwell. Appellant introduced testimony that he had borne and bore a good reputation as an honest and law-abiding citizen in the community in which he lived. The charge of the court defined theft substantially in the language of the statute, and submitted to the jury the offense of theft as such, as well as the offense of fraudulently receiving and concealing stolen property, as well as the issue of the voluntary return of stolen property.

1. In this state of record appellant requested the court to give in charge the following special instruction: "You are further instructed that, where a person takes property under a claim of title, he cannot be convicted of theft, and, if you believe that the defendant took the property under a claim of title, you must acquit him." This charge is not strictly accurate, nor is this language wholly applicable to the case at bar, but was sufficient, we think, to call the attention of the court to his utter failure to submit ap-pellant's defense at all, and should, in substance at least, have been given.

2. By bill of exceptions appellant complains of the following portion of the court's charge: "Now, if from the evidence you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, L. J. Eubanks, in the county of Ellis and state of Texas, at or about the time charged in the indictment, fraudulently took from the possession of the sacks the property described in the indictment, and that the sacks were the property of J. J. McQuatters, without the consent of the said J. J. McQuatters, with intent to deprive the owner of the value of the same, and to appropriate it to the use or benefit of him, the said defendant, L. J. Eubanks, then you will find the defendant guilty," etc. Except for the bill of exceptions, which was taken at the time, there might be some contention that we could assume that the charge of the court as copied in the record was a mere lapse of the pen; but this portion of the court's charge was in terms excepted to, as the bill recites, before the jury had retired to consider their verdict, on the ground that same was meaningless, and that appellant could not take from the possession of the sacks, the theft of which he is charged, but the evidence must show that they were taken from the possession of some one, and the court gave the jury no opportunity to pass on the question as to whom the possession of the sacks was in, or as to whose possession they were taken from. In all indictments for theft, it is essential to aver the possession of the property stolen, and that it was taken from the possession of the owner, or person holding for the owner, and in submitting the issue to the jury it is indispensable that the matter of possession be submitted substantially in the terms charged in the indictment. The charge of the court here, of course, is wholly meaningless and defective, in that the jury are not required to find that the property, if taken, was taken from the possession of the person as laid in the indictment.

3. Again, appellant complains that the court erred in submitting the issue of voluntary return of stolen property. We think the court was in error in submitting this issue. Under the state's case, the issue raised was the fraudulent taking of the property, or, in other words, that appellant was guilty of theft. By his testimony he in substance admitted the manual taking of the sacks, but claimed that same was done under circumstances not imputing crime to him, but in pursuance of purchase. The doctrine of voluntary return of stolen property implies of necessity that there had been, in the first place, a criminal taking. This charge was calculated to create the belief in the minds of the jury that the original taking was wrongful, and must, of necessity, have been prejudicial to appellant. From the verdict of the jury, which assessed a fine of $1 against appellant, without imprisonment, it is obvious that they found appellant guilty with reference to this paragraph of the court's charge. On another trial the issues as here indicated should be clearly submitted to the jury, omitting any mention of voluntary return of stolen property under the evidence as here presented. See Schultz v. State, 30 Tex. App. 94, 16 S. W. 756.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

JOHNSON COUNTY SAVINGS BANK v. RENFRO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 20, 1909.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 373*)—INNOCENT PURCHASER—EQUITABLE SET-OFF.

Where plaintiff was an innocent purchaser for value of acceptances given by defendant in payment for goods sold through fraud, but obtained knowledge of the fraud and of defendant's refusal to pay for them before maturity, defendant could set up the fraud as a defense in an action thereon by plaintiff only as to such drafts as matured when plaintiff had in its possession funds of the drawer sufficient to pay the acceptances, but not as to such drafts as were not matured when plaintiff held the drawer's funds, as the rule should not be applied when it would work injury to a bona fide purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 966; Dec. Dig. § 373.*]

2. SALES (§ 114*)—RESCISSION FOR FRAUD—RIGHT TO RESCIND.

The buyer of goods who has given drafts for the purchase price could rescind and cancel the contract for fraud in inducing him to purchase, notwithstanding a bond given to him indemnifying against loss under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 288; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 373*)—ACTIONS—DEFENSES—FRAUD—ESTOPPEL.

Where the drawee when he paid drafts was not fully aware of the fraud inducing the sale of goods for which they were given, or, if so, was then trying to adjust his differences with the drawer, the payment by the drawee did not preclude him from urging the fraud as a defense against one holding the drafts at maturity, with knowledge of the fraud, acquired after transfer, who then had sufficient of the drawer's funds to pay them.

Appeal from Wilbarger County Court; J. A. Nabers, Judge.

Action by the Johnson County Savings Bank against J. R. Renfro. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and rendered in part, and affirmed in part.

F. P. McGhee, for appellant. Berry & Lucky, for appellee.

RICE, J. This was a suit by appellant against appellee to recover on three drafts, a series of five, of date November 13, 1906, drawn by the American Jobbing Association on appellee and accepted by him, the last three being each for the sum of $74, all of the same being due, respectively, four, six, eight, ten, and twelve months thereafter; the first two having been paid off at maturity. Appellee purchased from the American Jobbing Association an assortment of jewelry, for which these acceptances were given. Subsequent thereto, on the 14th of December, 1906, said association, for value, indorsed said drafts to appellant herein, who took same without notice of any of appellee's defenses thereto. The appellee defended on the ground, among other things, of the failure of consideration of said acceptances, in this: that he, not being a judge of jewelry, relied upon the representations of the agent, and was induced to purchase said jewelry by reason of said representations made by said association to the effect that the same were first-class goods, merchantable and of good quality, whereas, said jewelry proved to be worthless, and said representations were therefore fraudulent. He further pleaded that plaintiff was not an innocent holder for value without notice, and, further, that plaintiff after it had been informed before the maturity of the acceptances of the fraud that had been practiced upon him in the purchase of said jewelry, and that the consideration for said acceptances had failed, had paid the first two thereof, and that plaintiff had sufficient funds in its hands belonging to said American Jobbing Association before and at the time of the maturity of said last three acceptances to cover same, and which he contended should have been applied in payment thereof. Appellant, by supplemental petition, further pleaded that it was an innocent purchaser for value of said acceptances, without notice of the infirmity in said paper, and likewise pleaded that at the time of the purchase of said jewelry the said American Jobbing Association had executed to defendant a contract of guaranty as to the quality of said jewelry, etc., wherefore he was precluded from asserting any defense against the judgment sought against him. Upon trial before the court without a jury judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

While there are a number of assignments assailing the correctness of the judgment of the court for several reasons, still we think it only necessary to notice the principal one, which in our judgment is decisive of the questions presented. Appellant insists that the defendant has no right in equity to set up as against it a failure of consideration of the acceptances, and to urge its failure to apply the funds of the association in its hands to the satisfaction of said acceptances as a defense to this action, since it contends that it was an innocent purchaser of said drafts for value before maturity without notice of any infirmity therein, and especially so since there were no funds in its hands belonging to the association at the time of the maturity of the last acceptance.

It is, however, urged on the part of appellee that the judgment should be sustained because of appellant's failure after notice of the fraud and failure of consideration therefor to apply the funds in its hands belonging to said association to the satisfaction thereof, and this is true notwithstanding he had paid the first two thereof without objection, asserting that it would be inequitable to do so, and cites in support of said insistence the cases of Sperlin v. Peninsula Loan & Discount Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 103 S. W. 232; also the case of Van Winkle Gin & Machinery Co. v. Citizens' Bank of Buffalo, 89 Tex. 147, 33 S. W. 862. While the case first cited is in its facts very much like the present case, and in some respects seems to support appellee's contention, still in our judgment it is dissimilar to and distinguishable from the case at bar. In this: that in that case it was clearly shown by the proof that the bank, the holder of the acceptances sued upon, was not an innocent purchaser for value, and, further, the question was not raised in that case as to whether there was any deposit in the bank in favor of the drawer of the checks at the time of the maturity thereof. In the last case cited the record discloses that the bank not only had notice of the infirmity of the paper and the failure of consideration before maturity thereof and before suit was brought thereon, but likewise had at the time of its maturity, and at the time of the institution of the suit, a large amount of money in its hands belonging to the drawer of the drafts sued upon; wherefore it was held bound in equity and good conscience to protect the acceptor of the paper by the application of said funds of the indorser to the payment of said acceptances. So that in our judgment each of those cases presents a different state of facts from those under consideration here, and which, in our opinion, renders them inapplicable to the questions here presented, and therefore of no controlling effect.

It is said by Judge Denman in Van Winkle Gin Co. v. Citizens' Bank, supra: "The relation of the bank to its depositors is that of debtor and creditor, and its right to offset its indebtedness to the depositor against the indebtedness of the latter to it is of an equitable nature intended for its protection, and does not depend upon any statute in relation to offsets. It is generally said that it is optional with the bank whether it will avail itself of this right. Citizens' Bank v. Carson, 32 Mo. 191; Jermain v. Denniston, 6 N. Y. 276; Marsh v. Oneida Cent. Bank, 34

Barb. (N. Y.) 298; Pitts v. Congdon, 2 N. Y. 352, 51 Am. Dec. 290; Beardsley v. Warner, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 610; Ticonic Bank v. Johnson, 21 Me. 426; Shackamaxon Bank v. Kinsler, 16 Wkly. Notes Oas. (Pa.) 509. The instances in which it has been held that the bank had the absolute right to determine whether it would or would not exercise its privilege were cases in which it was not appealing to the courts to apply any equitable principle in order to allow it to recover, as the Citizens' Bank of Buffalo is doing here, against an innocent party to the paper, who, but for the application of such principle, could not be held liable. If the Buffalo Forge Company had not transferred the bill before maturity, or if at the time of the indorsement the bank had known of the failure of consideration, it is clear that such failure would have been a complete defense. This is not disputed. McDonald Manuf. Co. v. Moran, 52 Wis. 203, 8 N. W. 864; Mann v. Nat. Bank, 30 Kan. 412, 1 Pac. 579. But although, in good conscience, plaintiff in error ought not as between it and the Buffalo Forge Company, or any one claiming under or through the latter with notice, to be held to pay the bill, nevertheless it will not be allowed to assert its defense to the prejudice of the indorsee bank because the latter has invoked the protection thrown round it by the law as an innocent purchaser. As between the acceptor and the innocent holder, the latter will be absolutely protected, because the former has carelessly launched upon the market its unqualified promise to pay, whereby the latter was induced to acquire same. But, while the law protects the innocent holder at the expense of the negligent but innocent acceptor, it does not permit the former to use his vantage ground for the purpose of going beyond his protection, and willfully inflicting on the latter a wrong, in order to favor the fraudulent endorser who in justice and good conscience ought to pay the bill."

It must be borne in mind, however, that in that case an entirely different set of facts from those here presented were before the court for consideration. Beside the fact that the bank had ample funds in its hands, both at the time of the maturity of the paper and at the institution of the suit, with which to have protected itself, and that both it and the drawer of the paper lived in a foreign state, it was further shown that the suit was brought at the instance of the drawer of the draft in that case, who had agreed to hold the bank harmless in the event of a failure of said suit. To show that the court evidently gave much weight to the fact that there was money in the hands of the bank belonging to the endorser at the time of maturity of the paper after notice of its dishonor, and with which it could have amply protected itself, we beg to further quote from the opinion by Judge Denman in the same case, as follows: "The bank had the undoubted right to say to the Forge Company: 'You have indorsed us a paper which, as between you and the acceptor, the latter ought not to pay. We have money belonging to you in our hands sufficient to satisfy your contract of indorsement now due, and we elect to avail ourselves of our equitable right to apply the same as an off-set and in settlement of your contract and return to you the paper, rather than pursue the innocent acceptor in another jurisdiction, especially since such pursuit cannot possibly be necessary for our protection. We will not use the shield thrown round us by law solely for our protection as innocent purchasers as a subterfuge to aid you in enforcing through us an unjust demand.' Such a position would have been unassailable in morals and in law. The bank, however, elected the contrary. The case then comes to this: The indorser in good conscience should pay. The bank has its funds in its hands sufficient to satisfy the demand with a perfect right in equity to offset same in satisfaction of the bill. The pursuit of the acceptor in a foreign jurisdiction is clearly not necessary to the bank's protection, but can only serve to allow the indorser to avail himself of the protection given by law to an innocent purchaser in order to cut the acceptor off from a just defense, and compel it to pay a sum of money which in equity it should not pay." While the evidence shows that the defendant was induced to purchase the jewelry on account of fraudulent representations made with reference to its quality by said association, and that the same proved worthless, and there was a total failure of consideration for said acceptances, yet it also appears to our satisfaction that the appellant was an innocent holder for value, without notice, of the same; and, while subsequent to its purchase of said paper, and before maturity thereof, it had notice of said infirmity therein and defendant's refusal to pay the same, still it also appears that at the time of the maturity of the last acceptance there were no funds in its hands belonging to said association, but, on the contrary, there was an overdraft by said association, amounting to some $800. We are of the opinion for these reasons that it would be inequitable, so far, at least, as the last acceptance is concerned, to apply the equitable doctrine invoked here, and thereby defeat the right of recovery on the part of appellant thereon. It appears, it is true, that, as to the other two acceptances sued on, there were funds in the hands of the bank after their maturity belonging to said association more than sufficient to have liquidated them, and as to them the defense urged, we think, is applicable, but we do not believe that the bank, appellant in this case, would have any right to apply funds in its hands belonging to said association to the payment of said last acceptance before the maturity thereof. Certainly if the bank itself, as between it and its depositor the American Jobbing Association, in this case would have no right to set off its unmatured demand against said depositor, then it would be inequitable to hold that it should be compelled in this case to have applied any funds in its hands that may have been shown to belong to said association in payment of its unmatured claim in an effort to protect the innocent acceptor, because it could not be held it seems to us that it should be required to place itself at disadvantage for the benefit of the acceptor. The equitable doctrine invoked in our judgment should only be applied when it could work no injury to the bona fide purchaser of the paper, and in support of this doctrine we cite the following authorities: Homer v. Nat. Bank of Commerce, 140 Mo. 225, 41 S. W. 790; Jordan v. Nat. Shoe & Leather Bank, 74 N. Y. 467, 30 Am. Rep. 319; 1 Morse on Banking (3d Ed.) p. 563, § 329; 3 Randolph on Commercial Paper, § 1441; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Proctor, 98 Ill. 558; First Nat. Bank v. Peltz, 176 Pa. 513, 35 Atl. 218, 36 L. R. A. 832, 53 Am. St. Rep. 686.

Appellant likewise urges that since a guaranty bond was given by the jewelry association to the defendant, indemnifying him against loss under the contract, and, further, that since the payment of the first two acceptances without objection by him, he should be held to have waived the right of urging his equitable defense thereto. We think it only necessary to say in reply to this contention that the defendant had the right, on the ground of the fraud pleaded, to rescind and cancel the contract, and that, when the first two acceptances were paid by him, he was not fully aware of the worthlessness of said jewelry, or, if so, there was at that time an effort being made by him to adjust the dispute with the association, for which reasons in our judgment he was not precluded from urging said defense, and appellant's contention is therefore without merit.

Believing that the court erred in rendering judgment against appellant so far as the last acceptance is concerned, its judgment in this respect is now here reversed and rendered in favor of appellant for the sum of $74, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from date of maturity thereof, the same being the amount due on said last acceptance; but the judgment in appellee's favor as to the other two acceptances will not be disturbed, but is affirmed.

Affirmed in part, and reversed and rendered in part.

An agreement between the maker and the payee of a matured note, without the surety's consent, to extend the time of payment for a definite period, on consideration that the maker will pay interest accruing thereon, releases the surety.

Appeal from District Court, Shelby County; James I. Perkins, Judge.

Action by P. P. Keith against F. W. Fambro. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

D. M. Short & Sons, for appellant. Bryarly, Carter & Walker, for appellee.

NEILL, J. Appellee sued appellant on a promissory note, alleging that the note was made to him on February 21, 1903, by James T. Polley and F. W. Fambro for the sum of $204.50, payable 30 days after date, with interest from date at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum; that, while the note was signed by each maker as a principal, as a matter of fact Polley was the principal and Fambro his surety thereon; that since the note matured, and before the institution of the suit, Polley died, leaving his estate insolvent. The defendant, Fambro, answered by a general denial, and pleaded specially: (1) That he signed the note as an accommodation surety at the request of Polley, and upon the representation, made him by plaintiff when such request was made, that the note would never be enforced against him, and that he relied upon and was induced by such representation to place his signature to the instrument; and (2) that after the note matured the plaintiff, without his consent, in consideration of an agreement made with him by Polley to pay the interest accruing thereon, extended time of payment of the note for 30 days, and that by reason of such agreement and extension defendant was discharged from further liability. Exceptions to both special pleas were sustained, the case was tried by jury, and judgment rendered against the defendant for the amount, principal and interest, due.

That the first special plea offered no defense to the action is too obvious for discussion. It involves the absurdity that an oral promise of the payee to the payor, made when a note is executed, not to enforce its payment, destroys the obligation evidenced by a written instrument. But there is music for the appellant in the other special plea; for it is held in this state that the extension of an interest-bearing debt, upon an agreement of the parties, based on a consideration, for a definite period, is, in effect, a contract that the creditor will forbear suit during the time of extension, and that the debtor forego his right to pay before the expiration of that time; that such agreement is a contract based upon a valuable consideration, and binding upon the parties, because the debtor secures the benefit of forbearance, and the creditor an interest-bearing investment for a prolonged and definite period; and, hence, that a surety on the original contract of indebtedness, who has not assented to the agreement extending its time of payment, is released from his obligation, because of the impairment of his right to pay the debt at any time after it became due under the original contract and proceed against the principal for indemnity. Benson v. Phipps, 87 Tex. 578, 29 S. W. 1061, 47 Am. St. Rep. 128; Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Clark (Tex. Civ. App.) 91 S. W. 882; Kearby v. Hopkins, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 166, 36 S. W. 515.

We conclude, therefore, that the court erred in sustaining the exception to said plea. Wherefore the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—ORDERS APPEALABLE—STATUTES.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1383, authorizing appeals from final judgments of the district and county courts, does not authorize an appeal from an interlocutory order of the county court setting aside a default judgment.

Appeal from Franklin County Court; G. E. Cowan, Judge.

Action by T. A. Hope against S. M. Long and another. From an order setting aside a default judgment in favor of plaintiff, he appeals. Dismissed.

S. D. Goswick, for appellant. R. T. Wilkinson, for appellees.

LEVY, J. The appellant sued appellee, and had entered on the appearance day of the county court judgment by default. On the third day after the default judgment was rendered, the appellee filed a motion to have same set aside and to be allowed to file an answer and have the cause proceed to trial on the merits. It appears from the motion, and the evidence submitted to the court on the hearing thereof, that on the first day of the court the attorneys for the plaintiff and defendant had agreed that the case should be passed for trial until a specified day later in the term. The court after hearing the evidence granted the motion, and entered an order to set aside the judgment by default. The appellant excepted to the order setting aside the judgment by default, and gave notice of appeal to this court. The case was not tried on its merits at this term of the court, but seems to have been passed awaiting a determination of this appeal.

There is no provision of law authorizing an appeal to this court from an interlocutory order of the county court in this case setting aside the judgment by default entered at a previous day of the term. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1383; Stewart v. Jones, 9 Tex. 469; Houston v. Starr, 12 Tex. 425; Dial v. Collins et al., 40 Tex. 368. The cases cited in appellant's brief have no application to the present appeal. They are cases where the court refused to grant a new trial and set aside the judgment, and consequently there was in the cases a final judgment which could be appealed from and the assignments reviewed by this court.

Because this court is without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, the same was ordered dismissed.

GOODHUE v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*)—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE—DAMAGES RECOVERABLE.

In case of delay in delivering a message informing a daughter of her father's fatal illness, damages arising from distress and mental anguish arising from her great desire to reach her father at the earliest possible moment, and from separation from her family, cannot be recovered, as her anxiety was not produced thereby, but merely prolonged.

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; L. B. Hightower, Jr., Judge.

Action by Augusta Goodhue against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ed. Haltom, for appellant. F. J. & R. C. Duff, for appellee.

FLY, J. Appellant instituted this suit to recover damages alleged to have accrued by the failure of appellee to promptly deliver a message informing her of the illness of her father. The material parts of the petition are as follows:

"And now, for cause of action, plaintiff avers: That on and for a short time before August 23, 1906, she was on a visit to the family of Mr. and Mrs. George Smith, in Warrenton, Va., and on the 23d day of August, 1906, John B. Goodhue, the father of plaintiff, was seriously ill in Beaumont, Jefferson county, Tex., and on said 23d day of August, at or about 12 o'clock midday, Mrs. Josie Goodhue, the mother of plaintiff, caused to be delivered to defendant at its office in Beaumont, Tex., a message to be sent to plaintiff at Warrenton, Va., notifying plaintiff to come home to Beaumont by first train; said message being in substance as follows: "Miss Augusta Goodhue, care Mrs. Geo. Smith, Warrenton, Va. Come home on first train, Papa ill. [Signed] Mama." And that the charges of defendant for transmission and delivery of said message were paid. And now plaintiff avers: That, within about one-half hour after said message was accepted for transmission and delivery by defendant at Beaumont, plaintiff's said mother caused the defendant at its office in Beaumont to be notified that the prompt and immediate transmission and delivery of said message was important, and then requested the agent or employé of said defendant to have said message hurried through to Warrenton, Va., so that plaintiff might receive the same as early as possible, and defendant's agent or employé was told that if there were any additional charge for hurrying said message through that such charges would be immediately paid, and so they would have been paid; and then the agent or employé replied, in substance, that the message had been sent, and would be hurried through to delivery without extra charge, and plaintiff further avers that said message upon its face, and by its wording, shows that it was important to plaintiff that she receive the same as early as possible, so that she could have an opportunity of taking the first possible railway train from Warrenton, Va., on her journey back home to Beaumont, Tex. That defendant's agents and employes, at Beaumont knew that he was seriously ill, and knew that said message was sent to plaintiff by plaintiff's mother.

"And now plaintiff represents: That through the gross negligence and carelessness of the defendant, its agents and servants, said message was not transmitted to Warrenton, Va., and delivered to plaintiff until after the expiration of nearly six hours after it had been received by defendant at Beaumont, Tex., for transmission, so that the same was not delivered to plaintiff until about the hour of 5 o'clock and 55 minutes on the evening of August 23, 1906. That at the time said message was delivered the banks and business houses in Warrenton had closed for the day, and plaintiff did not have sufficient funds to pay her passage back to Beaumont, and by reason of the banks and business houses being closed plaintiff could not get a draft on Beaumont cashed to raise the necessary funds which she could and would have done had said message been delivered even one hour earlier. That her host, Mr. Geo. Smith, did not have in his house sufficient money to pay plaintiff's passage back to Beaumont; but, almost immediately after said message was delivered, Mr. Geo. Smith went out among his friends, and borrowing a little from first one and then another he succeeded in getting for plaintiff sufficient funds to have paid her passage to Beaumont, Tex., but before he could get the money together the last train out of Warrenton, Va., that day, had left, which train left Warrenton at about 7:05 p. m. on the evening of August 23, 1906, and there would be no other train leaving Warrenton, which plaintiff could take on her journey home, until 6:15 p. m. next day, August 24, 1906. That being very anxious to get home as soon as possible, plaintiff went on the night of August 23, 1906, by wagon to Calverton, Va., a distance of about nine miles, with the intention of there taking a train to New Orleans, on her way home. That the plaintiff expended for team and driver from Warrenton to Calverton the sum of $10, which was a reasonable charge, and which it became necessary for plaintiff to pay in order to reach her destination at the earliest possible time. That Calverton is a small town on the Southern Railway through which a train passed en route to New Orleans at about 12:30 a. m., but which did not usually stop for passengers at that station. That plaintiff, or friends for her, sent a telegraph message to the officials of said railway at Washington, D. C., requesting that the train stop at Calverton for plaintiff, but by reason of the fact that the message to plaintiff from Beaumont was not delivered to plaintiff until nearly 6 p. m. the message to said railway officials could not be delivered at the offices of said officials in Washington until after office hours, and said message was not received by said railway officials until it was too late for them to grant said request made by plaintiff, and although plaintiff reached Calverton in time to take said train it passed through without stopping. That if plaintiff had succeeded in her effort to take said train she would have reached Beaumont about 24 hours earlier than she did. Not being able to take the said train, she waited at Calverton until the hour of 1:30 a. m., August 24, 1906, when she took a train which carried her to Cincinnati, Ohio. That this was under the circumstances the best and quickest way for plaintiff to reach her home in Beaumont, or at least it so appeared to plaintiff. At Cincinnati, Ohio, plaintiff took the first train she could for New Orleans, La., which place it was expected plaintiff would reach in time to take a train from New Orleans to Beaumont, at about 9 p. m., August 25, 1906; but the train upon which plaintiff was going from Cincinnati to New Orleans was late or behind time, and plaintiff did not reach New Orleans until about 11 o'clock p. m. August 25, 1906, after the train from New Orleans to Beaumont had departed. That upon arriving at New Orleans plaintiff was met by friends who informed her that her father, John B. Goodhue, had died August 24, 1906, and that he would be buried on the evening of August 26, 1906. That there would be no train going from New Orleans to Beaumont, until about 9:30 o'clock on the morning of August 26, 1906, and which would not reach Beaumont until 6:30 or 9:30 o'clock August 26th, after the burial of the body of plaintiff's father. That in order to arrive at Beaumont before the funeral of her father it was necessary for plaintiff to hire a special train to carry her from New Orleans to Lafayette, La., and further it became necessary for plaintiff to again borrow money to pay for said special train, and she did borrow money, and did hire and pay for such special train the sum of $185. Plaintiff was compelled to wait in New Orleans until 2 o'clock a. m., August 26th, before said special train was made up and ready to depart, and at which hour and day said train left New Orleans and arrived at Lafayette, La., at about the hour of 7 o'clock a. m., August 26th, at which place plaintiff took a train which arrived in Beaumont, Tex., at about 2 o'clock p. m., August 26, 1906, about two hours before the burial of the body of plaintiff's father.

"And now plaintiff avers: That in the journey from Warrenton to Calverton by wagon she was compelled to travel over a rough and muddy road in the dark, and although accompanied by friends, who did all in their power to render plaintiff comfortable, on said journey she suffered and endured great physical pain from being jolted and shaken by the wagon rolling over the rough and muddy road, and great anxiety, distress, and mental anguish on account of fearing she would not be able to take the first train passing through Calverton; and that, by reason of having to make the long journey from Cincinnati to New Orleans on a train behind time, she continuously on said journey suffered great anxiety, distress, and mental anguish in her desire to reach her father at the earliest possible time. And at New Orleans, where plaintiff first learned of her father's death, she suffered great mental anguish and distress in contemplating the long ride from New Orleans to Lafayette alone in a special train, and on said journey from New Orleans to Lafayette she suffered great distress and mental anguish from being alone in her great distress and grief, and from the fact that she was separated from her mother and other loved ones in their sorrow. All of which physical pain and mental anguish was directly and proximately caused by the gross negligence and carelessness of the defendant in failing to use ordinary care and diligence in transmitting and delivering said message. And plaintiff further shows: That she was required to pay and did pay for said special train the sum of about $185, which sum of money she would not have had to pay had it not been for the gross negligence and carelessness of defendant in failing to use ordinary care and diligence in transmitting and delivering said message, and defendant is liable for said money. That plaintiff paid for the wagon and driver to carry her from Warrenton to Calverton the sum of $10, which she would not have had to pay had it not been for the negligent failure of defendant to use reasonable care and diligence in transmitting and delivering said message.

"And plaintiff further says: That she was not in any way guilty of contributory negligence which in any way contributed to her injuries or mental anguish or damages; and the defendant, its agents and servants, had notice by the wording of said message that plaintiff was notified of her father's serious illness, and that it was urgent and necessary for plaintiff to take the first train possible in order to reach her father's bedside at the earliest possible moment; and they knew that if said message was not delivered with reasonable dispatch and promptness plaintiff would be put to extra expense and also delay in reaching her home to be with her relatives in their distress. And the defendant knew, or ought to have known, that plaintiff would expend any money necessary to be expended in her attempt to reach Beaumont at the earliest possible time. Plaintiff further avers: That, had it not been for the gross negligence and carelessness of defendant in failing to use ordinary care and diligence in the transmission and delivery of said message, the plaintiff could and would have taken a train at Warrenton, Va., at about 5:55 p. m. or 7:05 p. m. on August 23, 1906, and would have arrived at Charlottesville, Va., at about 8 o'clock p. m., where she would have taken a train direct to New Orleans, La., and would have arrived at New Orleans at about 9 a. m. on August 24th, and would have reached Beaumont at about 9 p. m. on the same day. That had defendant used ordinary care and diligence in transmitting and delivering said message plaintiff would have received the same at or before 2 o'clock p. m. on August 22, 1906, and could and would have obtained the necessary money for her journey in time to have left Warrenton, Va., at 7:05 on that day, and could and would have arrived in Beaumont on August 24, 1906, at 9 o'clock p. m."

The sum of $1,800 was alleged to have arisen for mental anguish and $195 on account of $10 paid for conveyance from Warrenton to Calverton and $185 for a special train from New Orleans to Lafayette, La. The court sustained special exception to those parts of the petition that set up damages that were alleged to have arisen from the distress and mental anguish which arose from appellee's great desire to reach her father at the earliest possible moment and from the fact of her separation from her mother and loved ones and was alone in her distress and grief.

If the message had been delivered with such promptness that appellant would have left by the first train out of Warrenton, she would have been just as lonely and would have suffered the same mental anguish and grief on account of her desire "to reach her father at the earliest possible time" and "having to make the long journey from Cincinnati to New Orleans" as she did after being delayed. The delay of the message did not produce the anxiety of mind arising from those causes, but merely prolonged it. The Supreme Court has held that prolongation of anxiety caused by failure to promptly deliver a message cannot be made the basis of damages. Rowell v. Telegraph Co., 75 Tex. 26, 12 S. W. 534; Telegraph Co. v. Edmondson, 91 Tex. 206, 42 S. W. 549; Telegraph Co. v. Giffin, 93 Tex. 590, 56 S. W. 744, 77 Am. St. Rep. 896. The delay of the message did not add a mile to the length of the journey from Cincinnati to New Orleans, and did not increase the desire on the part of appellant to reach her father at the earliest possible time, and was not the proximate cause of any anxiety resulting "from the fact that she was separated from her mother and other loved ones in their sorrow."

The court held that the damages set forth as arising from mental anguish could not be recovered, but granted leave to appellant to amend so as to meet the rulings; but this was declined and notice of appeal given. The court granted permission to appellant to amend her petition so as to bring the matters in dispute within the jurisdiction; but this was declined, and, the amount in controversy that remained after the exceptions had been sustained not being sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, the case was properly dismissed. Haddock v. Taylor, 74 Tex. 216, 11 S. W. 1063; McFadin v. City of San Antonio, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 140, 54 S. W. 48.

The judgment is affirmed.

GALVESTON, H. & S. A. RY. CO. v. SANCHEZ.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 13, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 71*)—GROUNDS—VERDICT CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

As the jury may disregard the evidence of either party where it is conflicting a verdict for a servant should not be set aside because defendant's evidence tended to show contributory negligence and assumption of risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 144, 145; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 231*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—RELIANCE ON ASSURANCES BY FOREMAN.

Plaintiff, whose duty was to care for railroad yards and assist in the storage of oil cars in the yard, was ordered to unscrew the nipple under an oil tank car so as to attach a pipe thereto, to empty the tank. The valve in the tank, which was operated by a key from the top, had been left open, so that, when the nipple was unscrewed, the oil rushed out and injured plaintiff's eyes. Plaintiff's foreman, in charge of unloading the oil, whose duty it was to see that the valve was closed when the nipple was removed, went on top of the tank and told plaintiff everything was all right before ordering him to remove the nipple, and plaintiff did not know that the valve was open. Held, that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 676; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 205*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—ASSURANCES BY MASTER.

Plaintiff did not assume the risk of injury from such cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 548; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 139*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

The negligence of plaintiff's foreman in operating the oil tank without closing the valve caused plaintiff's injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 275, 296; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 264*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PLEADING AND PROOF.

Where, in a servant's action for injuries by oil spouting from the bottom of a tank into plaintiff's eyes when he removed the nipple from the pipe, there was no allegation that the spouting was caused by gravel in the valve, defendant's theory being that plaintiff went under the car when he knew the oil was running, surmises of witnesses that gravel in the valve caused the oil to spout were properly rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 865, 866; Dec. Dig. § 264.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 291*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a servant's action for injuries by oil spouting from the bottom of an oil tank into his eyes, because the valve was open when he removed the nipple from the pipe at the bottom of the tank, allegations of the answer that the danger was open to plaintiff's observation when he went under the car authorized an instruction that defendant would be liable if the spouting oil was a latent danger incident to the work, known to defendant, but unknown to plaintiff, and of which he could not have learned by exercising ordinary care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1138, 1139; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 149*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—MASTER'S LIABILITY—ORDERING SERVANT INTO PLACE OF DANGER.

If defendant knew of the danger in sending an employé under an oil tank car to unscrew the nipple of the pipe when the valve was open, so as to permit the oil to rush out into his eyes when the nipple was removed, and the servant did not know the danger and could not have discovered it, defendant would be liable for resulting injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 291, 294; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN.

Where the defenses of contributory negligence and assumed risk were clearly presented in the court's instructions, it was unnecessary to repeat them at defendant's request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 657; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

A requested charge, in a servant's injury action, to reject testimony as to the defective condition of machinery, was properly refused where there was no evidence of any defects in the machinery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 602, 603; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 272*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EXCLUSION OF TESTIMONY—OBJECTION BY PARTY OFFERING TESTIMONY.

Defendant cannot object to the action of the court in refusing an instruction to reject testimony given by his own witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 678, 679; Dec. Dig. § 272.*]

11. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

Where a servant's eyes were injured by oil so that he could not perform his duties or otherwise earn a living, and his condition was becoming worse, a verdict for $3,000 was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 385; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; W. P. Hamblen, Judge.

Action by Felix Sanchez against the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood and Lane, Jackson, Kelley & Wolters, for appellant. J. M. Gibson and Joe H. Eagle, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit for damages instituted by appellee against appellant. After alleging that appellee was an employé of appellant, the petition proceeds as follows: "That upon said date the defendant caused one of its tank cars loaded with oil or crude petroleum to be run upon the switch at said place for filling the oil tank there situate for the storage of petroleum used as fuel by the defendant upon its engines operating on said road to San Antonio. That the plaintiff was instructed and commanded by the defendant agent then and there operating and controlling the operation and unloading of said car to go under the said oil car or tank filled with crude petroleum oil, and to unscrew the nipples of the two tubular apertures, pipes, or drains, under said car, and attach thereon the rubber tube or hose used to pump the oil from the tank car into the oil tank reservoir there situate; that plaintiff, not being aware that the top of said oil tank car was open, and that the key or appliance unlocking a valve in the bottom of said car was turned so as to leave open free egress of the oil from said car on removal of said nipples on the projecting tubes at the bottom thereof, went under said car, and on removing the nipple from one of the said tubes the oil, petroleum, gas, and tar acids and other poisonous substances in said car and petroleum fluid violently spouted out upon plaintiff's face and body, and, entering both of his eyes, wounded, poisoned, and burned the lids, balls, and pupils thereof so as to greatly hurt the plaintiff and to destroy the vision of both eyes, and deprive him of sight and render him blind, or nearly so, for life." It was further alleged: "That the direct and proximate cause of his injury was the negligence of the defendant and its agents operating its tank car in causing the top of said car to be left open and the key of said bottom valves to be turned and opened, when the plaintiff was directed and caused to go underneath the said car and to remove the nipples from the tubular apertures thereunder."

Appellee was engaged, as an employé of appellant, in taking care of its yard and tracks at Rosenberg, Tex., and he also assisted about the oil tanks and tank cars in the yard of appellant. His eyes were so badly damaged by oil spouting in his face, while he was assisting in putting the hose to an oil tank, that his sight is permanently impaired, and he was discharged from the service of appellant because he could not see to perform his duties. He thus describes the accident: "The oil tank car was switched out of the train and placed on the side track opposite the stationary tank, and I was told to get the hose and attach to the nipples at the bottom of the car. Mr. Naylor, an employé of the defendant, who had charge and the direction of the unloading of the cars, went on top of the oil tank car. There is a place on top of the car, which is an opening in the tank car, having a removable top to it, in which the oil is loaded into the car. There is a rod, or key, running from the top of the car down to the bottom and inside of the car, which turns the valve at the bottom of the car. Beneath these valves were two apertures, or tubes, which are closed on the outside by what I call 'taps,' or 'nipples,' being screwed on. Mr. Naylor went on top of the car. It was his business to see that the key worked all right, and that the valve at the bottom was closed, so that when the nipples were taken off the tubes the oil would not spout out until the valves were turned. After he had gone on the car he called to me that it was all right, to go ahead and take off the nipples and put the hose upon the tubes underneath the car. At the time I was injured, I was taking the tap from underneath the oil car, so as to be able to connect the pipe to it and unload the oil, and while doing this the oil blew all over my face. I do not know whether there was anything wrong or the matter with the appliances or valves inside the car or not, because, as soon as I got the tap off the tubes underneath the car, the oil blew all over my face. The kind of oil tank car it was, was one of the kind usually used on this railroad; that is, it was a car with a tank situated on it. The tank was long and round. On the top of the car is a hole into which to load the oil into the car. It has a place up there which closes up when they are not taking the oil out. In order to unload the car in safety, it was necessary to turn the key on the top of the car, so as to close the holes or tubes at the bottom of the car. If the key had been turned, on top of the car, the oil would not have blown or spouted into my face when I moved the nipples at the bottom of the car. That car had two nipples at the bottom. The nipples at the bottom of the car were about one-quarter of a foot long. The one on this car was about that big, and the nipples screwed on the end of the tubes. I was under the car to fasten the hose. The pumpman, Mr. Naylor, told me to go under the car and take the screws off and attach the hose. He was on top of the tank car. I did not know that the tank car was open at the top when I went under it. The pumpingman, Mr. Naylor, told me to go and put the hose to the nipples, and he connected it with the hose, and said it was all right. When I did the oil blowed in my face."

That evidence was sharply contradicted by the witnesses of appellant, and the first, second, third, and fourth assignments of error seem to proceed upon the theory that, as its evidence tends to show contributory negligence and assumption of the risk, the verdict of the jury should have been set aside. This, however, is not the theory upon which trials by juries are conducted; but the power is lodged with the jury to disregard the evidence of appellant, which contradicted the testimony of appellee, and to accept such testimony as giving a true account of the affair. If the testimony of appellee be true, he was not guilty of contributory negligence, nor had he assumed the risk arising from the situation. He swore that there was a rod or key which turned the valve at the bottom, that the key was manipulated by the man who had charge of unloading the cars, that it was the business of that man to see that the key worked all right, and that the valve was closed, so that when the nipples were taken off the oil would not spout. The man in charge told appellee everything was in proper condition and ordered him to take off the nipples and put the hose on the tubes under the car, and while executing that command the oil blew into his face, inflicting the injury. The jury credited that testimony, and it formed a sufficient basis for their verdict. Under that testimony the injuries must necessarily have resulted from the negligence of the foreman in operating or manipulating the oil tank.

There was no allegation that gravel or something else had in some manner gotten into the valve and caused the spouting of the oil, and the court properly rejected evidence of the surmises of witnesses that such a condition existed. There was nothing in the pleading nor the circumstance upon which to base the guesses made by the witnesses as to what caused the oil to spout, and it did not have a tendency to disprove the case of negligence made by the testimony of appellee. The theory of the defense was that appellee had voluntarily gone under the car when he knew that the oil was running, and the desired opinions of the witnesses had no connection whatever with that theory.

The sixth assignment of error is overruled. That part of the charge which instructed the jury that appellant would be liable if the spouting of the oil was a latent or secret danger incident to the work which was unknown to appellee, and could not be ascertained by him in the exercise of ordinary care, but was known to appellant, was permissible, as it presented an issue deducible from the pleadings of appellant, which alleged that the dangers of the situation were open to the observation of appellee. If the dangers were hidden so that appellee could not and did not discover them, and appellant knew of them, it would be liable for sending him into a place where such hidden dangers would be developed by the acts of its agents in opening the valves. The language used is wrested from its connections and criticised without reference to them. When read as a whole, the criticised section of the charge is not open to the attacks made upon it.

So far as the special charge, whose rejection is complained of in the seventh assignment of error, embodied the law and was applicable to the facts, it was given in the general charge of the court. There was no evidence tending to show that the spouting of the oil was a danger ordinarily incident to the work in which appellee was engaged, and, on the other hand, appellant sought to show that it was brought about by unusual conditions.

The court did not err in refusing to present the third special charge requested by appellant. The defenses of contributory negligence and assumed risk were clearly presented by the court, and it was unnecessary to repeat the instructions.

The ninth assignment of error complains of the rejection of a special charge which sought to instruct the jury to reject testimony as to the defective condition of the machinery. The charge was properly refused because there was no evidence whatever of any defects in the machinery. If it were true, as stated by appellant, that it had proved by its witness that there was a defect in the valve, to have given the requested charge would have been extending the privilege to appellant of demolishing and destroying a man of straw erected by itself.

If appellee's eyes were so badly damaged that appellant concluded he could not perform the duty of caring for its yard, and he was on that account discharged, as the testimony showed, it would not seem that a verdict for $3,000 would be excessive. Appellee swore that his eyes were in such condition as to prevent him from earning a living, and that they were growing worse.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. PITTS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 14, 1909.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 19*)—PERSONAL CONTRACTS.—ASSIGNABILITY.

A purchaser in a contract of sale contracted in consideration of $2,000 cash to sell to a third person an option on certain land of the vendor. The contract with the third person recited that it was contingent on the consummation of the contract of sale, and, in case the sale was not consummated, the $2,000 should be returned to the third person, and provided that it was understood that the third person was appointed agent of the purchaser to sell the land described, and that the purchaser would make a warranty deed to the land sold by the third person, etc. Held, that the contract with the third person, whether construed as an employment of the third person, with power to sell land described, or as a purchase by him of an option on the land and the deposit of the $2,000 as a payment of a part of the price, was a personal contract whereby the purchaser bound himself to make warranty deeds, and he could not shift his undertaking to others without the consent of the third person.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 318*)—CONTRACTS—PARTIAL PAYMENTS—RECOVERY.

Where the purchaser in a contract of sale of real estate was bound to repay to a third person the sum deposited by him on his contract with the purchaser for an interest in a part of the real estate of the vendor, and there was evidence that the vendor did not know of the contract until after a settlement with the purchaser based on a report of sales by the purchaser from the vendor, and a payment of money by the purchaser to the vendor, the court, in directing the purchaser to repay to the third person, could not direct the vendor to pay the sum to the purchaser.

Appeal from District Court, Palo Pinto County; W. J. Oxford, Judge.

Action by O. A. Pitts against C. Hagelstein and others, in which R. K. Wylie and another were made parties. From a judgment for plaintiff against C. Hagelstein and another and in favor of C. Hagelstein and another against R. K. Wylie and others, Cicero Smith and others appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

C. H. Willingham, Gross & Allen, J. T. Ransport, and Penix & Eberhart, for appellants. J. B. Hayner and Ramsey & Odell, for appellees.

HODGES, J. Appellee O. A. Pitts instituted this suit in the district court of Palo Pinto county against C. and G. Hagelstein and Cicero Smith, seeking to recover $2,000 paid to them on the 30th day of January, 1907, under a contract of that date, by the terms of which Pitts was appointed an agent to sell certain lands under the control of the defendants in the suit. It is alleged that he agreed to sell for the defendants, within 12 months from that date, 2,000 acres of land known as a part of the Wylie ranch in Runnels county, Tex.; that he paid to the Hagelsteins and Smith the $2,000 upon condition and with the understanding that, in the event he performed his part of said contract, the money was to be refunded. It is also alleged that the Hagelsteins and Smith were under contract to purchase this land from R. K. Wylie and wife, and that his contract with the Hagelsteins and Smith was made dependent upon the consummation of the sale of the Wylie ranch to the Hagelsteins and Smith. It is claimed that this sale was not consummated, and for that reason plaintiff is entitled to the return of the $2,000. The defendants Hagelstein answered by general denial and in substance that the contract made with Pitts on January 30, 1907, granted to him an option to acquire and sell the lands described in this contract, and that the $2,000 was paid for that option; that the contract was contingent upon the consummation of the sale of the ranch by the Wylies to them, and, if not consummated, the $2,000 was to be returned to Pitts; that Wylie and wife on April 13, 1907, by written instrument, revoked the contract of sale with them, the Hagelsteins, which said Wylies had no right to do. They further pleaded that Wylie and wife and Smith had entered into an agreement with them, by the terms of which Smith and the Wylies assumed to carry out the obligations of the Hagelsteins as contained in the contract with Pitts, and of which Pitts had full notice; and asked that Wylie and Smith be made parties to the suit, and, in the event judgment was recovered against them, the Hagelsteins, that they have judgment against the Wylies and Smith for the same amount. Cicero Smith answered by general denial, and, among other things, specially alleged that he was ready and willing to carry out the terms of his contract with Pitts, but that Pitts had never performed his contract or offered to do so in any way; that the contract of purchase of the Wylie ranch by him and the Hagelsteins was consummated, and the Wylies thereafter repurchased from the Hagelsteins their one-half undivided interest in the same; that thereafter he, Smith, owned an undivided one-half interest in the ranch, and the Wylies the other half; that in the repurchase from the Hagelsteins by the Wylies the latter acquired the interest of the Hagelsteins in all the contracts of sale of said land which had been made, among which was a contract with the plaintiff Pitts. Smith also pleaded that, in the event the plaintiff recovered a judgment against him, he had judgment over against the Wylies for one-half of the amount. The appellants R. K. Wylie and wife answered by general denial, and adopted all of Smith's original answer, except wherein he asks judgment against them, and also adopted that part of the answer of the Hagelsteins which sets up the contract of sale of the Wylie ranch to them and Smith, and that by the terms of the same the Wylies had no authority to revoke the contract. They pleaded that they contracted in writing to sell the Wylie ranch to Smith and the Hagelsteins, and that on the 6th day of April, 1905, they repurchased the interest of the Hagelsteins, taking their deed for the same, but Smith retained his half interest. They professed to be willing and able to carry out all the contracts of sale made by the Hagelsteins. They further alleged that, while negotiating with the Hagelsteins for the repurchase of their interest in the ranch, the latter represented to them that they had made a number of sales of the land to divers persons, a list of which was furnished at the time. In this was listed a contract for the sale of 2,000 acres of land to Pitts, the plaintiff in this suit. The Hagelsteins claimed that they did not then have the Pitts contract with them, and fraudulently and falsely represented to them that the contract made with Pitts was a bona fide contract of sale, and that Pitts had placed in their hands a forfeit of $2,000, which was to go to the owners of the land in the event he failed to comply with the terms of his purchase. They alleged that as a part of the consideration paid by them to the Hagelsteins for their deed back to said land and the transfer of the contracts of sale and commissions claimed by the Hagelsteins they allowed them a credit of $2,000 for the alleged sale made to Pitts, and that, relying upon the representations made by the Hagelsteins that their contract with Pitts was a valid bona fide sale, they paid the Hagelsteins $1,750 as a commission of 5 per cent. on the sale which the latter claimed to have made to Pitts. This they charge was a fraud perpetrated upon them by the Hagelsteins, and that they were thereby defrauded by said Hagelsteins out of the commission amounting to $1,750; that said false representations were willfully and fraudulently made for the purpose of defrauding them of that sum; that the contract between the Hagelsteins and Smith and Pitts was secreted and kept from these defendants until some time after they had repurchased the interest of the Hagelsteins in said ranch. They further pleaded that an instrument of April 6, 1907, wherein it is stated that the contracts listed therein are received by them, the Wylies and Smith, did not speak the truth; that in truth and in fact at the time of the execution of that instrument they did not receive the Pitts contract nor did they receive the money mentioned in said contract, but the sum was retained by the Hagelsteins. The Wylies also allege that Smith owns a one-half interest in the lands and they the other half, and pray that Smith, the Hagelsteins, and the plaintiff take nothing against them, but, if judgment be rendered against them, that they have judgment against the defendants Hagelstein for $1,750 and for costs of suit. At the conclusion of the testimony the trial court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of Pitts against the Hagelsteins and Smith for the full amount sued for, and in favor of the Hagelsteins against the Wylies and Smith for the same amount. Judgment was rendered for and against the respective parties in accordance with the verdict. The judgment also provided that, in the event Smith paid off the judgment, execution issue in his favor against the Wylies for one-half of the amount recovered by the plaintiff in the suit. Smith and the Wylies alone have appealed, and have filed separate appeal bonds, and presented separate assignments of error.

The testimony shows that R. K. Wylie and his wife originally owned a large body of land situated in Runnels county, known as the "Wylie pasture." On December 12, 1906, Wylie and wife entered into a written contract with the Hagelsteins and Smith, by which, for a recited consideration, they agreed to sell and convey to the latter several thousand acres of that land. This contract was duly acknowledged and recorded. On January 30, 1907, the Hagelsteins and Smith, claiming to be a partnership firm, entered into a written contract with Pitts, the appellee, by the terms of which Pitts acquired certain rights from those parties as to the sale of 2,000 acres of the Wylie land, and deposited with the Hagelsteins and Smith the sum of $2,000, to be forfeited in the event he failed to perform the conditions of the contract, and to be returned to him under certain other specified conditions. This suit is for the recovery of that sum, and is based upon the contention by Pitts that the conditions occurred which justified him in asking for its return. Inasmuch as his right to the recovery must depend upon the construction of the contract last above referred to, it is proper that we give such portions of that contract as bear upon the issues involved. Omitting those portions which are not material, the contract is as follows: "State of Texas, County of Tom Green. This agreement, made and entered into by and between the firm of Hagelstein and Smith, composed of Chris Hagelstein and George Hagelstein of San Angelo, Texas, and Cicero Smith of Mineral Wells, Texas, parties of the first part, and O. A. Pitts, of Grandview, Texas, party of the second part, witnesseth: That the parties of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $2,000 cash in hand paid, have sold to second party an option on certain land hereinafter described, said option to last twelve months from the date hereof, and in the event that the conditions of this contract hereinafter set out are kept and fulfilled by second party, then said $2,000 shall be returned to said second party, but not otherwise. The conditions of this contract are as follows, to wit: First. Whereas, the first parties hereto are under contract to purchase the R. K. Wylie ranch located in Runnels county, Texas, about 6 miles N. W. from Ballinger, Texas, on the Colorado River, it is understood and agreed by both parties to this contract, that this contract shall be contingent on the final consummation of the contract of sale of said R. K. Wylie ranch, and in the event that said sale is not consummated, then said $2,000 is to be returned in full to said second party. Under this understanding and agreement the said parties hereto do agree that the said O. A. Pitts, party of the second part, is appointed agent of the parties of the first part under the following terms and conditions, to wit: The said O. A. Pitts, party of the second part, agrees to contract and sell to bona fide purchasers for the said parties of the first part, all of the land contained in the following tracts, according to the new subdivision of the said Wylie ranch, to wit:" Then follows a description of the land. The second and third paragraphs fix the price to be paid and terms of sale. "First party agrees to make warranty deed and furnish abstract to each tract of land sold by second party, showing good and sufficient title to said land within 90 days after being notified by second party that sale has been made. If any other and different terms for sale of said land shall be made by the second party, it shall be by approval of the first parties. The parties of the first part are to have the benefit of the unfenced and unsold land above described until the completion of this contract, and they are to have all growing crops now on said land. In the event that any contract for the sale of any of said land above mentioned shall be made by the parties of the first part or the party of the second part, and the proposed purchaser shall have been required to put up a forfeit and that said amount of said forfeiture or liquidated damages shall be collected, then the same shall at once be equally divided between each party hereto. The power herein conferred upon the party of the second part shall cease on the 25th day of February, 1908, and after such date he shall no longer have power or authority to bind the parties of the first part for any contract of sale hereunder, and nothing shall hereinafter be done under this contract except by mutual consent, save the final settlement between the parties hereto."

On April 18, 1907, Wylie and wife executed an instrument called a "revocation of contract," in which it was recited that by reason of the fact that the Hagelsteins had failed and refused to carry out or complete their contract of December 12, 1906, but had made default as to the same, they, the Wylies, thereby "announced and declared said contract had not been complied with by said Hagelsteins in any particular, and that the same was at an end and of no further force and effect," and that the Hagelsteins had no further rights or claims upon the land referred to in the contract of December, 1906. This instrument was acknowledged and recorded in the deed records of Runnels county. On the 26th day of April, 1907, C. and G. Hagelstein executed a written instrument reciting the contract of December 12, 1906, with the Wylies, and that it had been "mutually agreed" between them and the Wylies that the same should be "forfeited, canceled, and held for naught." It is then stated that for and in consideration of the sum of $10 and other good and valuable consideration paid by Wylie and wife to them, C. and G. Hagelstein, the latter "do release, remise, quitclaim, and acquit all their right, title, and interest in and to all the lands conveyed or agreed to be conveyed to them by Wylie and wife," and also releasing Wylie and wife from any obligation theretofore made to convey to them the lands before referred to. This instrument was acknowledged and recorded in the deed records of Runnels county.

All the appellants complain of the action of the trial court in instructing a verdict in favor of Pitts against the Hagelsteins and Smith. They contend that the contract of January 30, 1907, between the Hagelsteins and Smith on the one side and Pitts on the other, was the sale of an option to Pitts on the land described, and that when the Wylies, the real owners, stood ready to make to Pitts a conveyance, the latter was bound to take it or lose his forfeit of $2,000 by the terms of his contract. We do not agree to this construction of the contract of January 30, 1907. While the instrument is not entirely free from ambiguity, a fair interpretation, considering all of its provisions, shows that the parties intended that Pitts should become a special agent with certain powers to sell the particular tracts of land referred to during the time specified, and that, in the event he failed to comply with his undertaking, he was to forfeit the deposit of $2,000 made with the Hagelsteins and Smith. If this construction be correct, then it follows that the relations thereby created between the parties were of a personal nature, and that the Hagelsteins had no authority to transfer to Wylie and wife any of their duties and obligations in such a way as to compel Pitts to continue with the Wylies business relations commenced under the contract with the Hagelsteins. But we think it is immaterial whether we regard this contract in that light, or as the purchase by Pitts of an option on the 2,000 acres of the Wylie land, and the deposit of the $2,000 as the payment of a part of the purchase money to be forfeited upon the failure to complete the purchase. It clearly appears from Pitts' contract that the Hagelsteins and Smith did not at that time own the land involved, but only had a contract with the owners by which they were to acquire the title at some time in the future; and it was expressly provided that this contract (the one with Pitts) should be contingent upon the consummation of that contract (the one between the Hagelsteins and Smith and the Wylies), and in the event that that sale was not consummated, then the $2,000 deposited by Pitts was to be returned in full to him. The evidence is undisputed that this sale from the Wylies to the Hagelsteins and Smith was never consummated; that the contract by which the Wylies had bound themselves to make the sale had been canceled by agreement of all the parties concerned except Pitts. By their contract with Pitts the Hagelsteins also bound themselves to make warranty deeds and to furnish abstracts of title to the land when sold by Pitts. This was a personal undertaking upon their part to do something which they could not shift to others without the consent of Pitts. Their agreement to make a deed of conveyance with warranty was not fulfilled by tendering a deed from some one else. It may be that the purchaser, Pitts, had special reasons for wanting the warranty of the Hagelsteins. Their contract with him, and the conditions upon which the deposit was to be retained by them, was that they should acquire the title and make the conveyances, and they had no right to substitute a conveyance from another without the consent of Pitts; neither was he bound to accept a deed from one from whom he had not purchased. Rights growing out of contracts which involve relations of personal confidence cannot be transferred by one party without the consent of the other. Menger v. Ward, 87 Tex. 622, 30 S. W. 853; Burks v. Davies, 85 Cal. 110, 24 Pac. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 213. The contract of warranty usually contained in deeds conveying real estate involves a personal obligation upon the part of the grantor to which the grantee has a right, and which cannot be denied him or shifted to another without his consent. If the Hagelsteins could fulfill their contract by tendering the deed of the Wylles, they might with equal propriety have fulfilled it by tendering the deeds from any remote purchaser from Wylie, however irresponsible he may have been, and however much Pitts may have been induced to make his contract by reason of the solvency of the Hagelsteins, from whom he contracted to obtain the conveyance. We think the court properly instructed the jury to return the verdict in favor of Pitts against Smith and the Hagelsteins.

Complaint is also made of the peremptory instruction to return a verdict in favor of the Hagelsteins against Smith and the Wylles. The testimony shows that in April, 1907, there was a settlement between the Hagelsteins and Smith and the Wylles, and that the Hagelsteins made a report showing sales of land belonging to the Wylles and Smith amounting in the aggregate to $221,000, based upon contracts with prospective purchasers. At the same time the Hagelsteins turned over to the Wylles and Smith the contracts evidencing those sales, together with several thousand dollars of money which had been placed upon deposit with them as part payment of the purchase price of the land sold or as the purchase of options. In this report of sales was included the contract with Pitts, based upon the claim that it was a sale to him of 2,000 acres of land at $17.50 per acre. The $2,000 which had been deposited by him was also accounted for to Smith and Wylie, and they were charged up with a commission of 5 per cent., amounting to $1,750 for making the alleged sale to Pitts. Wylie and his attorney and Smith testified, and they do not seem to have been contradicted, that the contract with Pitts was not among the list of those actually delivered to them at the time of the settlement, and they did not know its contents till some weeks later and after the settlement had been made. If this be true, Wylie and Smith were not bound by an acceptance of that contract as one of a sale, and the Hagelsteins had no right to recover from Smith and Wylie any sum in excess of the difference between their commissions, $1,750, and that which they paid or accounted for to the Wylles. We think the court erred, therefore, in giving the peremptory instruction to find against Smith and the Wylles in favor of the Hagelsteins for the sum of $2,000. It may not be improper to remark in this connection that there is no basis in the finding of the jury for the judgment rendered by the courts in favor of Smith against the Wylles in the event Smith should pay off and discharge the judgment rendered against them jointly in favor of the Hagelsteins. The court has no right to pass upon any issue of fact upon which the jury has failed to return a finding, no matter how conclusive the evidence may be. Moore v. Moore, 67 Tex. 296, 3 S. W. 285; Texas Brewing Ass'n v. Meyer (Tex. Civ. App.) 38 S. W. 263.

That portion of the judgment wherein Pitts recovers for the amount sued for against Smith and the Hagelsteins is affirmed. In all other respects the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Appeal from District Court, Anderson County; B. H. Gardner, Judge.

Action by H. P. Wynne against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

This suit was brought by the appellee against the appellant railroad company and Thos. J. Freeman in his official capacity as its receiver to recover damages against the company for personal injuries alleged to have been inflicted by the negligence of its servants. The defendant Freeman answered by a general demurrer and by special exception to the effect that it is apparent from the petition that the alleged cause of action accrued before he was appointed receiver of the company, and it does not appear from the allegations that plaintiff procured permission of the court in which the receivership is pending to sue him. Freeman then answered that the alleged cause of action arose before his appointment, and that plaintiff had not been granted authority to make him a party to this action. Each defendant pleaded a general denial. The general and special exceptions were overruled, and the trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $15,000. It was ordered that the judgment entered on the verdict be certified for classification and payment to the Circuit Court of the United States, wherein the receivership is pending.

King & Morris, for appellants. Campbell, Sewell & Strickland, for appellee.

NEILL, J. (after stating the facts as above). The first and second assignments of error complain of the court's overruling the general and special exceptions to plaintiff's petition, and the third that the verdict against the receiver is contrary to the evidence, in that it conclusively shows that the cause of action arose long before his appointment, and that the suit is not in respect to any act or transaction of the receiver in carrying on the business of the railroad company as its receiver; it not appearing that plaintiff had previously to filing the suit obtained an order of the court wherein the receivership was pending to sue the receiver.

In determining the two first assignments we deem it unnecessary to decide whether, under Act Cong. March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 3, 24 Stat. 553, as corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 3, 25 Stat. 435 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 510), a receiver can be sued without leave of the court for an alleged wrongful act committed in the operation of the road before he became receiver; for, if it should be conceded that leave in this case for the plaintiff to sue the receiver was essential, yet if, as is alleged in plaintiff's petition, the court appointing the receiver entered an order expressly authorizing and empowering him to defend any and all actions which had been theretofore brought, seeking to establish any claim or demand against the property in his hands as such receiver, including the demands of plaintiff, such order, regardless of the statute cited, was ample authority for the prosecution and maintenance of this suit against Freeman in his capacity of receiver of the railroad company. 1 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) § 571. We therefore hold that the petition was good as against the exceptions referred to. In regard to the third assignment, we deem it sufficient to say that, as the allegations in plaintiff's petition respecting his right to prosecute his action against the receiver were not denied by the defendant Freeman under oath as required by statute (Rev. St. 1895, art. 1265), it was not necessary for plaintiff to prove them. Townes on Pleading, 299.

The fourth assignment of error complains of this paragraph of the court's charge: "The undisputed facts in the case show that H. P. Wynne, the plaintiff, an air brake machinist in the employ of the defendant railroad company, was at work in discharge of his duty as such air brake machinist under the tank of engine No. 258 when said engine and tank was caused to move and run over and crush plaintiff's hand, thereby causing amputation. Now you are charged that if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that said injury was caused by the failure of the employes so causing said engine to move to ascertain the presence of plaintiff under said tank or to warn him of the intention to move said engine and tank, and if you further find that such failure to ascertain the presence of plaintiff or to warn him of the intention to move, if there was such a failure, was the direct and proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff, then you will find for the plaintiff, otherwise you will find for the defendant." The evidence shows that the plaintiff went under the tank without the knowledge of defendant's servants, who moved or cause the movement of the engine to which it was attached, and that, from the time he went under it until the engine was moved, such servant did not know, or have any reason to suspect, he was there. As to whether it was the servant's duty to ascertain the presence of plaintiff under the tank or warn him of his intention to move the engine and tank, the evidence is conflicting. If the uncontradicted evidence showed that such was the servant's duty his failure to discharge it would be negligence. But such is not the state of the evidence. Therefore the question of whether the failure of the servant who moved or caused the engine to move to ascertain the presence of plaintiff under the tank or to warn him of his intention to move the engine and tank was negligence was one of fact which should have been submitted to the jury. This the charge fails to do; but, in effect, assumes it was negligence as a matter of law. In this the charge is clearly erroneous.

The remaining assignment complains that the verdict is excessive. As the judgment will be reversed for reason of the error indicated, the question raised becomes purely academic, and will not be considered.

Reversed and remanded.

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 96*)—POSSESSION OF PART OF TRACT.

Where the boundaries of a lot were clearly marked, it having been fenced at least a portion of the time, possession of plaintiff, through his tenants, of a part of the lot, perfected title by limitation to the well-defined limits of the whole lot.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Trespass to try title by Henry Harrison against W. B. Washam. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lock McDaniel, for appellant. Sam, Bradley & Fogle, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is an action of trespass to try title to a certain parcel of land situated in the city of Houston, instituted by appellee against appellant. In the petition appellee pleaded title by limitation of 10 years. Appellant answered by general denial and plea of not guilty. A trial by jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee.

In deference to the verdict of the jury, we find that appellee had acquired a title by limitation in so far as appellant was concerned. He was placed in possession of the land by Cummins in 1890, under a verbal contract of sale. He built a house on the front part of the lot and a stable and barn in the rear next to a lot owned by his mother and step-father. He paid most of the purchase money, but did not obtain a deed to the land. In 1893 Cummins left the country, and the house on the front part of the lot was moved off, and appellee moved, but left his mother in possession of the stable on the rear end of the lot, as well as the whole lot. She held possession of the lot for more than 10 years for appellee. A fence was around the whole of the lot for a large portion of the 10 years. The evidence tended to show that appellee continuously claimed the whole of the lot through a period of more than 10 years before appellant entered possession of a part of it. There was evidence to the effect that the whole of the lot was inclosed from 1890 to 1900, a period of 10 years, when the fence was blown down by what was designated as the "Galveston storm." Appellant does not claim through or by the vendor of appellee.

Possession of a part of the lot with a claim to the whole was sufficient to perfect title by limitation to the whole of it. The boundaries of the land were clearly marked. It was fenced at least a portion of the time. Appellee at all times claimed the whole of the lot, and, even though his tenants were in possession of only a part of the lot, the possession extended to the well-defined limits of the whole lot. Railway v. Broom (Tex. Civ. App.) 114 S. W. 655.

The first assignment of error complains of the third paragraph of the charge, because it did not state that in order to recover under the 10 years' statute of limitation there should be proof of adverse possession. The statements connected with the assignment of error and propositions thereunder fail to disclose what the court charged on the subject, and this court could with propriety decline to consider the assignment. However, it may be stated that there was no question whatever as to the character of appellee's possession; the only issue being as to the length of possession and the amount of the land possessed. All the facts tended to show that if appellee was in possession at all, as he claimed, the possession was peaceable and adverse to the claims of every one. The character of the possession not being attacked, the court could assume that it was adverse to the claims of appellant.

The court did not err in stating to the jury that appellee had improvements on, and held possession of, the rear part of the lot. Those facts were established by the undisputed evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

INGALLS v. ORANGE LUMBER CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. June 25, 1909. Rehearing Denied Oct. 21, 1909.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 743*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—TITLE TO PROPERTY.

In trespass to try title, a judgment by agreement between heirs of a patentee and plaintiff's remote grantor in a suit for recovery of title and possession to the land, divesting the heirs' title and vesting it in the remote grantor, was admissible as a link in plaintiff's chain of title, vesting title in the grantor by estoppel and having the same prima facie effect in placing in him the title inherited by the heirs as their deed would have had.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1276; Dec. Dig. § 743.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—REVIEW—ERROR FAVORABLE TO PARTY COMPLAINING.

In trespass to try title, defendant cannot object to the exclusion of evidence showing that the plaintiffs in a prior action against the remote grantor of the plaintiffs in the present suit, in which there was a judgment by agreement, vesting title to the land in the remote grantor, had not sold their interest in the land to the grantor or to any one else, since it would only strengthen the effect of the judgment as a link in the present plaintiff's title.

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 178*)—CONVEYANCE BY HEIRS—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Title acquired under a transfer of a bounty warrant certificate could not be asserted against a purchaser for value, who acquired title of the heirs of the original owner of the certificate to whom the land was patented without any notice, actual or constructive, of the transfer of the certificate, the land being located under a certificate for the unlocated balance of the bounty warrant certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 581; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In trespass to try title, where the undisputed evidence shows that plaintiff purchased for value without notice of an outstanding claim of title, a charge that defendant, to defeat plaintiff's recovery, on the ground of the outstanding claim, must connect himself with such title, if erroneous, was harmless.

Appeal from District Court, Newton County; W. B. Powell, Judge.

Trespass to try title by the Orange Lumber Company against James Ingalls. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Blake, for appellant.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This is an action of trespass to try title brought by appellee against appellant to recover a tract of 200 acres of land in Newton county granted to Elisha Spencer. Pending the suit appellee obtained a writ of injunction restraining appellant from cutting timber from the land. The defendant answered by general demurrer and plea of not guilty and by plea in reconvention for damages caused him by the injunction proceedings. To this answer plaintiff replied by supplemental petition in which it claimed title under the three, five, and ten years statutes of limitation, and also as innocent purchaser for value without notice of defendant's claim. The trial in the court below with a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for all of the land in controversy.

The land was patented on September 22, 1875, to Elisha Spencer. In a suit in the district court of Newton county brought by W. A. Shepherd and others, heirs of Elisha Spencer, against William Clark, a judgment by agreement was entered on March 28, 1900, in favor of said Clark for the title and possession of the land, divesting all right and title of plaintiff in said land, and vesting same in defendant. Appellee holds the title thus acquired by Clark by regular chain of conveyances. The land was located under a certificate issued to Elisha Spencer August 27, 1870, for the unlocated balance of a bounty warrant certificate for 1,280 acres, issued to said Spencer on January 31, 1838. This original bounty warrant certificate has the following indorsements thereon:

"The discharge upon which this Certificate was issued has been legally transferred from G. W. Mott assign Elisha Spencer to P. Halpin whis Transfer is now on file in this office. Feby. 2nd. 1838. Barnard E. Bee, Sec. War.

"1 File 1374. Bexar Bounty Warrant 1280 acres. Elisha Spencer. Filed Sept. 20/58. 1 7. 1858 by Jno. H. Herndon for Jno. James San Antonio.

"Registered and approved March 11, 1858. Edward Clark, Commr. of Claims. Certificate of unlocated Balance for five hundred and forty-two (542) acres issued and delivered to C. P. Johns & Co. Aug. 27, 1870."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The original survey of the land in controversy was made by the surveyor of Newton county in 1873. The surveyor's records of said county show that the application for said survey was made by James Ingalls, the father of appellant, in his own name. The same records show that other applications made by said Ingalls at or about this time were made in the names of the grantees in the certificates. Appellant testified that his father, who was a civil engineer, always claimed to own this certificate, and always claimed the land located thereunder. Appellee purchased the land for a valuable consideration and without actual notice of appellant's claim thereto.

The first assignment of error and the propositions advanced thereunder are as follows: "The court erred in permitting the plaintiff to read in evidence before the jury, over the objection of defendant, a judgment of the district court of Newton county, in cause No. 540 on the docket of said court, styled, W. A. Shepherd et al. v. Wm. Clark, dated March 28, 1900, which judgment described the land in controversy, for the reasons assigned in bill of exceptions No. 1." Proposition under first assignment of error: "The judgment relied on, being a judgment by consent and between different parties, and not showing on its face that the title of Elisha Spencer or one emanating from him either by purchase or descent was involved in the controversy, could not constitute a link in the chain of title from the sovereignty. To recover in this cause, the same proof of superior title that enabled Clark to recover from the heirs of Elisha Spencer (if in fact they were the heirs, and the recovery was upon proof of title) must be presented here or the plaintiff fails to connect himself with the Spencer title, and cannot recover against a defendant in possession. Plaintiff in trespass to try title must recover on the strength of his own title, not upon weakness of defendant's title." Under this assignment it is very earnestly insisted by appellant that the judgment referred to in the assignment does not prima facie connect Clark and those holding under him with the Spencer title, even, if it be conceded that the plaintiffs in said judgment were the heirs of Elisha Spencer. We cannot agree with appellant in this contention. The judgment was by agreement and by its terms divested the title of plaintiffs in said land and vested said title in the defendant Clark. The evidence shows that the plaintiffs in the suit were the heirs of Elisha Spencer, and the agreed judgment divesting their title and vesting it in Clark was just as effectual in placing in him the title inherited by them from Elisha Spencer as their deed would have been. If the judgment had not been by agreement, and had not in terms divested the title of plaintiffs, the suit being one for recovery of the title as well as the possession of the land, a judgment in favor of defendant would have passed the title of the plaintiffs by estoppel, and would have prima facie connected defendant with the title of Elisha Spencer. It goes without saying that neither the plaintiffs in that suit, nor any one claiming under them, could assert against Clark or those holding under him any title to the land which they had at the time said judgment was rendered, and, it being shown that they were the heirs of Elisha Spencer, it devolved upon defendant, in order to defeat the prima facie title by estoppel thus acquired by Clark, to show that at the time said judgment was rendered the plaintiffs in said suit did not hold the Spencer title. As before said, we think this judgment should be given the same prima facie effect as would be given to a deed from the heirs of Elisha Spencer. There is no firmer rule of decision than that which recognizes title by estoppel, and no character of estoppel is of higher dignity than estoppel by judgment.

The cases cited by appellant wholly fail to sustain his contention. The cases of Colman v. Reavis (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 645, and House v. Reavis (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 646, simply hold that a plaintiff in action of trespass to try title does not connect himself prima facie with the title of the original grantee of the land by showing that he holds under a foreclosure judgment and sale of the land had in a suit in which neither the original grantee nor his heirs, or any one holding title under him, was a party. The case of Sebastian v. Martin Brown Co., 75 Tex. 292, 12 S. W. 986, holds that a plaintiff in suit of trespass cannot recover by simply showing that he purchased the land at a sheriff's sale under foreclosure proceedings and that the defendant in claiming under the defendant in said foreclosure proceedings, but, to authorize a recovery by showing a superior title from a common source, the plaintiff must show that the deed to the defendant from the common source is subsequent to that under which plaintiff claims. The case of Barnes v. McArthur, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 73, 22 S. W. 770, holds that a deed from the husband alone to land shown to be the separate property of the wife, notwithstanding the title was in the name of the husband, would not pass title to a vendee who paid no consideration for the land. It is apparent that these cases go no further than to recognize and enforce the fundamental rules that no one is bound by a judgment to which he is not a party, and that in an action of trespass to try title the plaintiff cannot recover without showing a prima facie title. The assignment cannot be sustained.

The second assignment complains of the refusal of the trial court to permit the defendant to read in evidence a part of the depositions of Mrs. Viana Spencer taken in the suit of Shepherd v. Clark, before mentioned. This evidence was offered, as stated by appellant's brief, for the purpose of showing that the heirs of Elisha Spencer had not sold their interest in said land to William Clark, or to any one else, and therefore Clark could not have recovered in said suit upon the Spencer title and the judgment in his favor did not connect him with said title. The witness whose deposition in the former suit was offered was dead at the time said deposition was offered in this suit. The offered testimony was not material to defendant's case, and was therefore properly excluded, even if it were permissible in this suit to use the depositions taken in the former suit between persons not parties to this suit.

According to our view of the case, as before expressed, evidence showing title in the heirs of Spencer at the time the judgment in favor of Clark was rendered against him for the land, so far from destroying the prima facie effect of that judgment as a link connecting appellee with the Spencer title strengthens and confirms it, and appellant cannot object to the exclusion of such evidence.

We do not think the evidence is sufficient to show a transfer of the certificate by Elisha Spencer, but conceding, for the sake of argument, that it is, the title thus acquired could not be asserted against a purchaser for value who acquired the title of the heirs of Spencer to whom the land was patented without any notice, actual or constructive, of the transfer of the certificate, and the undisputed evidence in this case shows that both appellee and its immediate vendor was a purchaser for value without notice of appellant's claim. Wimberly v. Pabst, 55 Tex. 587; Lewis v. Johnson, 68 Tex. 448, 4 S. W. 644; Bogart v. Moody, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 79 S. W. 633. Upon this state of the record it is unnecessary for us to determine whether the transfer of the certificate to P. Halpin, conceding, for the sake of argument, that the evidence shows such transfer is an outstanding title which appellant, without connecting himself therewith, can use to defeat appellee's title.

The third assignment of error, which complains of the charge of the court, which in effect instructs the jury that appellant in order to defeat appellee's recovery on the ground of outstanding title in Halpin must connect himself with such title, cannot be sustained because if the charge was erroneous, as contended, such error was harmless in view of the undisputed evidence showing appellee to have purchased for value without notice of such outstanding claim of title.

What we have said disposes of all the material questions presented by the appeal, and the remaining assignments of error need not be discussed. Each of them have been duly considered, and none of them should be sustained. We are of opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and it has been so ordered.

Affirmed.

A judge's certificate to the statement of facts is sufficient as against appellee's motion to strike out the statement on the ground that it does not show that the statement was submitted to him or his attorney, where it is shown that he is a nonresident, and it does not appear that he was present at the trial, and the certificate shows that he was not represented by any attorney.

Appeal from District Court, Galveston County; Robt. G. Street, Judge.

Action by Nicholas Thouron against William Skirvin and others. From a judgment for plaintiff without damages, he appeals. Affirmed.

Stewarts, Geo. T. Burgess, and J. Homer Jones, for appellant. James B. & Charles J. Stubbs, for appellees.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This action was brought by appellant against the appellees to recover the title and possession of certain lots or parcels of land on the Antonio Julia survey, in Galveston county, and to recover actual and exemplary damages for alleged wrongful, fraudulent, and malicious acts of defendants in attempting to acquire title to plaintiff's land by fraud and in thereby clouding the title thereto. In addition to the usual allegations to an action of trespass to try title, the petition alleges, in substance: That on November 3, 1893, the defendant, William Skirvin, induced the plaintiff, who was then the owner in fee simple of the Antonio Julia 320-acre survey, in Galveston county, to subdivide same into lots of about 15 acres each, said lots being numbered 44 to 61, inclusive, and to sell all of said lots to said defendant. That plaintiff on said date conveyed all of said lots to said defendants, and in part consideration for such conveyance the defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff his certain several promissory notes for the aggregate sum of $5,400, which said notes were secured by vendor's lien on the land, expressly retained in the deed conveying said lots. That thereafter, on December 3, 1893, Skirvin conveyed all of the lots to the Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company, a corporation organized and controlled by Skirvin and M. S. Waller. That the deed conveying the property to the corporation recites a consideration of $1,000 in cash, and further recites the fact that the conveyance is made subject to the incumbrance of $5,400 due plaintiff, but that, in fact, no consideration was paid for said conveyance. "That at and prior to the time that this plaintiff was induced by William Skirvin to convey said real property to said Skirvin said William Skirvin had entered into an agreement and conspiracy with one M. S. Waller, whereby it was agreed between said William Skirvin and said M. S. Waller that they would defraud plaintiff out of the said Antonio Julia survey, but the fact of the said fraud and conspiracy was not known to this plaintiff at that time, and was not discovered by him until long subsequent. That the said Antonio Julia survey was inclosed together with various other surveys in a pasture by one Jacques Tacquard. That said Waller and said Skirvin, conspiring together, purchased from said Jacques Tacquard certain lands owned by him, and did fraudulently induce said Jacques Tacquard, he being a man unable to read or write, to execute to the said M. S. Waller a deed of conveyance for the said Antonio Julia survey, by which said deed apparently the Antonio Julia survey was by said Jacques Tacquard conveyed to said M. S. Waller, and which said deed bears date of June 6, 1892, which deed was not filed for record, however, until October 31, 1894, and of which deed plaintiff had no knowledge at the time he conveyed the property to said Skirvin."

It is further alleged that Waller at the instigation of Skirvin conveyed the Antonio Julia survey to Thomas C. Brown by deed of date November 24, 1894, and that thereafter, when said vendor's lien notes executed by Skirvin became due, he refused to pay the same on the ground that there was an outstanding title to the land in Brown, which he pretended to believe was superior to plaintiff's title, and proposed to plaintiff that, if he (plaintiff) would cancel and surrender said notes he (the said Skirvin) would procure a reconveyance of the lots to plaintiff; that plaintiff was led to believe by the representations of said defendant that his title to the property was defective and agreed to accept the proposition to surrender said notes in consideration of a reconveyance of said property; that, in pursuance of his said proposition, the defendant Skirvin had the said Thomas C. Brown to reconvey the Antonio Julia survey to M. S. Waller, and had the said Waller to convey same to the Alto Loma Company; that thereafter said Skirvin, on May 4, 1898, tendered to plaintiff a deed from said company reconveying to him the lots theretofore conveyed by plaintiff to said defendant, and that plaintiff accepted said deed, and canceled and surrendered to defendant his said notes; that at the time plaintiff accepted said deed and surrendered the notes he was assured by Skirvin that the Alto Loma Company held the Tacquard title to said land, and plaintiff relied upon said representations, and would not otherwise have accepted said conveyance in satisfaction of said notes; "that the said Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company was a corporation which was owned, controlled, and manipulated by said William Skirvin and M. S. Waller; that said William Skirvin did cause said Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company to convey to one M. B. Gerry of Pueblo, Colo., lots 46 to 55, inclusive, in said Antonio Julia survey, said deed dated June 3, 1895, and reciting that said property was sold subject to vendor's lien; that the only vendor's lien outstanding against this property was said vendor's lien held by this plaintiff, and the lien of this plaintiff was the lien intended and referred to in said deed to said Gerry; that in truth and in fact said Gerry paid no consideration whatever to said Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company, but took title to said property merely in trust for said William Skirvin in furtherance of the purpose of said William Skirvin to defraud this plaintiff; that said Skirvin, though having signed said deed from the Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company in his capacity as secretary of said company and knowing full well of the existence thereof, did in truth and in fact state to this plaintiff that the Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company had not conveyed said real property, but that same belonged to said Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company at the time of the execution and delivery of the aforesaid deed from said company to this plaintiff; that this statement was made by William Skirvin for the purpose of defrauding this plaintiff and at the time same was made was known by said Skirvin to be false and fraudulent; that, to further carry out the purpose to defraud this plaintiff, said Skirvin did have M. B. Gerry execute a deed of conveyance to one J. H. Fesler of Pitkin county, Colo., which deed described the property therein attempted to be conveyed as lots numbered 46 to 55, inclusive, and being the same lots by like numbers described in the aforesaid deed from the said Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company to this plaintiff, and being the said property that had been by this plaintiff conveyed to William Skirvin; that said deed from Gerry to Fesler was made, executed, and delivered without any consideration whatsoever, and said Fesler had no real interest in said property, but took and held the same and still holds same of record for the use and benefit of said William Skirvin, who is claiming to own said real property; that the placing of the apparent title to said property in said Fesler was for the purpose of defrauding this plaintiff, and was conceived and carried out by said William Skirvin with that end in view; that both said Gerry and Fesler in all said matters were represented by William Skirvin and M. S. Waller and said Gerry and Fesler in truth and in fact had no interest in said transactions or said property, but merely permitted the use of their names by said William Skirvin in order that he might by the use of said names and apparent placing of title in said Gerry and Fesler, place said title again outstanding and in an innocent party, and thereby again defraud this plaintiff; that said Fesler in so taking title to said property and holding same in his name and said William Skirvin in having said Fesler take property in his name and placing deed of record are conspiring together to injure this plaintiff, and, so conspiring and so acting, have injured and damaged this plaintiff in the sum of $7,500; that said Skirvin and said Fesler by their actions have cast a cloud upon title of plaintiff to said property; that said William Skirvin is now offering said property for sale and pretending to own same, though he knows that said real property belongs to plaintiff, and that this plaintiff took and accepted a deed of conveyance from the Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company on the representation of said Skirvin that, by said conveyance from said Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company to this plaintiff, this plaintiff would be revested with the title to said real property; that the action of said William Skirvin in so offering said property for sale and in claiming to own same casts a cloud on title of this plaintiff, and same is done maliciously and wrongfully, and for the sole and only purpose of injuring title of this plaintiff to said real property; that defendant R. S. Rowland did in June, 1908, file with the county clerk of Galveston county, Tex., two instruments; one purporting to be a deed from J. H. Fesler to J. R. Morse, and the other to be a deed from J. R. Morse to R. S. Rowland conveying portions of the hereinbefore described real property; that said deed from Fesler to Morse and said deed from Morse to Rowland were instigated and inspired by said William Skirvin and said R. S. Rowland, who conspiring together thereby sought to defraud this plaintiff of his property, and sought to cast a cloud on the title thereof, and by the recording of said deeds did cast a cloud on the title of plaintiff to the said real property; that in truth and in fact said Fesler at no time had title to said real property, and the pretended deed from said Fesler to said Morse passed no title to Morse, and was not intended to vest title in Morse; that said deed from said Fesler to said Morse was prepared by said M. S. Waller, and no consideration whatever paid to said Fesler for said deed; that said pretended deed from said Morse to R. S. Rowland was inspired and a scheme concocted by defendant Skirvin and Rowland for the purpose of defrauding this plaintiff, and for the purpose of clouding title of this plaintiff to the said real estate, and same does operate as a cloud on the title of plaintiff; that in truth and in fact said Fesler knew nothing of said Morse, and said Morse had never seen said R. S. Rowland, but signed the deed in blank and said R. S. Rowland thereupon filled in said blank with his name, to wit, the name of R. S. Rowland; that said R. S. Rowland is confederating together with William Skirvin, J. H. Fesler, and J. R. Morse in his said acts and in holding title to said property in his name in furtherance of said wrongful acts, and said Skirvin and said Fesler and said J. H. Morse and said R. S. Rowland by their said acts are casting a cloud on title of this plaintiff; that said plaintiff by said wrongful acts of defendants is damaged in the sum of $7,500; that said real property is of the value of $25 per acre, and this plaintiff could sell said real property for $25 per acre, but is prevented from doing so by the wrongful acts of said Skirvin, Morse, Rowland, and said Fesler as hereinbefore stated, as no one can be induced to purchase said property because of the said claim so being asserted by said Skirvin, Morse, Rowland, and Fesler; * * * that said action of said Skirvin and Morse and Rowland and said Fesler have necessitated the employment of attorneys to bring this suit to remove cloud from said title, and said acts are malicious and done for the purpose of injuring, harassing, and annoying said plaintiff, and because of the annoyance so caused to this plaintiff, and, because of said malicious acts, this plaintiff should recover of said defendants exemplary damages which plaintiff now alleges in the sum of $10,000. Wherefore plaintiff prays that on trial hereof that he have judgment against said defendants for title and possession of and to said Antonio Julia survey, including each and every lot therein, and that the cloud cast on plaintiff's title by reason of claim of these defendants be removed, and that the aforesaid deed from the Alto Loma Investment & Improvement Company to M. B. Gerry and from said M. B. Gerry to J. H. Fesler and from J. H. Fesler to J. R. Morse and from said J. R. Morse and R. S. Rowland be declared null and void and of no effect, and.

further, that this plaintiff do have and recover of and from said J. H. Fesler and said William Skirvin and said J. R. Morse and said R. S. Rowland his actual damages as aforesaid in the sum of $7,500; and, further, that plaintiff do have and recover of and from said Skirvin and of and from said Fesler and of and from said J. R. Morse and of and from said R. S. Rowland jointly and severally the sum of $10,000 as exemplary damages by reason of the malicious and wrongful acts of said defendants as hereinbefore stated, and plaintiff further prays for such other, further, and general relief as he may be entitled to in law and equity."

The defendants Skirvin, Morse, and Rowland each filed an answer disclaiming any right, title, or interest in the land sued for. Plaintiff dismissed his suit as to defendant Fesler. Upon the trial in the court below judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for all of the land sued for and for removal of the cloud upon his title caused by the claims of the defendants, but no damages were adjudged in plaintiff's favor against any of the defendants. From that portion of the judgment refusing plaintiff's claim for damages he prosecutes this appeal.

Appellee Skirvin has filed a motion to strike from the record the statement of facts filed by appellant, on the ground that it does not appear from the certificate of the judge appended to said statement that the same was ever submitted to the defendant or his attorneys, or that any opportunity was given defendant or his attorneys to prepare and present a statement. The certificate of the judge is as follows: "Galveston, Texas, Decr. 11th., 1908. The within statement of facts having been presented to me by the plaintiff's attys., and no atty. for either of the defendants having been present at the trial and no statement being presented to me on behalf of the defendants, and having examined the statement herewith and finding the same in all things correct, the same is hereby approved as a true and correct statement of the facts given in evidence on the trial." In reply to this motion appellant has filed the affidavit of George T. Burgess, one of his attorneys, to the effect that after the statement was prepared and within the time prescribed by the statute he presented the statement to Mr. Charles J. Stubbs, one of the attorneys who filed the disclaimer for appellant, and requested to examine same, and, if he found it correct, to agree thereto; that Mr. Stubbs stated that neither he nor his firm represented the defendant in the matter of preparing such statement, and that he would have nothing to do with it. It is shown that the defendant Skirvin is a nonresident of the state, and it does not appear that he was present at the trial, and the certificate of the judge shows that he was not represented by any attorney on said trial. Upon this showing we think the certificate is sufficient, and the motion should be overruled.

The first assignment of error is as follows: "The court erred in refusing to give judgment for plaintiff for actual damages because the evidence showed that by the acts of the defendants the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $5,400, the face value of the purchase-money notes given by Skirvin in part payment of property in controversy." The statement under this assignment, which contains a summary of all the material facts shown in the statement of facts, does not sustain the assignment. There is no evidence that the plaintiff suffered any damage by reason of the fraudulent representations of the defendant Skirvin by which he was induced to cancel and surrender the notes due him by Skirvin. There is neither allegation nor proof that the property reconveyed to him in consideration of the surrender of the notes was not worth the amount of said notes, and, in any event plaintiff would not be entitled to keep the property and recover of defendants as actual damages the value of the consideration given therefor, it matters not how fraudulent the transaction may have been on the part of the defendant.

The second assignment complains of the refusal of the court to give plaintiff judgment for actual damages in the amount of the attorney's fees shown to have been paid by him in the necessary prosecution of this suit. It is well settled by the decisions of our Supreme Court that attorney's fees in suits of this character are not recoverable as actual damages. Landa v. Obert, 45 Tex. 539; Salado College v. Davis, 47 Tex. 135; Harris v. Finberg, 46 Tex. 79; Ry. Co. v. Oram, 49 Tex. 346; Vance v. Lindsey, 60 Tex. 290.

It is also well settled that exemplary damages cannot be recovered unless the plaintiff is shown to have sustained actual damages. Flanagan v. Womack, 54 Tex. 50; Girard v. Moore, 86 Tex. 675, 28 S. W. 945. No actual damages being shown in this case, plaintiff was not entitled to recover exemplary damages, and the third assignment of error, which complains of the refusal of the court to render judgment for plaintiff for exemplary damages, must be overruled.

This disposes of all the questions presented by appellant's brief, and, there being no error in the judgment of the court below, it is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Anderson County; B. H. Gardner, Judge.

Action by Minnie Lou Bradt and others against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

King & Morris, for appellants. Thos. B. Greenwood and A. G. Greenwood, for appellees.

FLY, J. This is a suit by the mother, widow, and minor children of Sam Bradt against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company and Thomas Freeman, receiver thereof, for damages resulting from his death. The cause was tried by jury and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellees for $20,000, apportioned as follows: To the widow, Mrs. Minnie Lou Bradt, $7,000; to the mother, Mrs. Jennie Bradt, $3,000; and to each of the two minors, $5,000. No complaint is made as to the amount of the verdict. The facts disclose that Sam Bradt, an engineer in the service of the railroad company, while in the faithful discharge of his duties, was so injured that he died; the injuries resulting from the derailment of the locomotive which he was running, through the negligence of the railroad company. Freeman was afterwards appointed receiver by a federal court.

The first, second, and third assignments of error attack the action of the trial court in overruling the general and certain special exceptions to the petition presented by the receiver. The position is taken that the receiver could not be sued without the consent of the federal court by which the receivership was created, and that, the cause of action having accrued prior to the appointment of the receiver, he was not a necessary or proper party. It was alleged in the petition that permission to sue the receiver had been obtained from the court appointing him, and there was no plea under oath denying the capacity or right of appellees to sue, and the allegation would be sufficient without proof. The exceptions attacked the power of the appellees to sue without an order from the federal court, and they were not verified by oath, and, in the absence of such verification, the allegation will be taken as true. Article 1265, Rev. St. 1895; Young v. Meredith, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 59, 85 S. W. 32.

The fifth assignment of error is overruled. The petition alleged, among other things, that the railroad company had failed to inspect its track and switch "and negligently and recklessly failed to discover the state of the switch and provide any warning to the said Sam Bradt of the fatally dangerous condition thereof." In connection therewith appellees were permitted to prove that colored lights had been used at switches by the railroad company to show how the switch was set, and that they were efficacious, but failed to have the switch in question so guarded. We think the allegation of a failure to give warning of the condition of the switch at night was sufficient to justify the admission of proof of a failure to have lights at the switch as had been the custom. In addition, appellants alleged that it was the duty of deceased engineer to ascertain whether the switch was properly set, and that certain targets, half red and half white, gave warning of the condition of the switch and charged deceased with negligence in not heeding the warning, and appellees in answer to that charge had the right to prove the failure to have the proper signals at the switch, which at night would consist of red and white lights. The evidence was admissible.

The evidence raised the issue as to the switch having been left open by some one in possession of a switch key, and it appeared that no one but employes had such keys. There was no lock on the switch, the displacement of which caused the derailment; but the lock securely locked was found near the switch, and the switch was partly thrown. There was nothing to indicate the intervention of an outside party. Under such circumstances it was not error to charge that negligence of a servant was negligence of the master. Appellees had charged that the death of Sam Bradt had been caused by the negligence of the railroad company, and, if there was any evidence tending to show that the negligence was that of a servant of the company, the court was authorized to instruct the jury that such negligence was the negligence of the master.

The evidence showed that Sam Bradt was an engineer in the employment of the railroad company and came to his death by a derailment of his train which was caused by a misplaced, unlocked switch. He was not shown to have been guilty of negligence. It was about 2:30 o'clock in the morning when the wreck occurred. There is no dispute that the switch was unlocked. Whose business was it to keep it in a secure condition? Undoubtedly it was the duty of the railroad company. It was negligence to have the switch in such condition that employes in discharge of their duty of running trains would rush to destruction. When appellees proved that the death of Sam Bradt had been caused by a displaced, unlocked switch, they made a case of negligence against the railroad company, because the duty rested on it to furnish safe appliances with which its employes could perform their duties, and the burden rested on it to account for the unsafe condition of the switch. It failed to do so, and the jury were justified in finding it guilty of negligence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Walker County; S. W. Dean, Judge.

Action by G. J. Sandlin against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

King & Morris, for appellant. Hill & Elkins and Lovejoy & Parker, for appellee.

McMEANS, J. Suit by appellee, G. J. Sandlin, against appellant, International & Great Northern Railroad Company, to recover damages for personal injuries received by appellee's wife, Mrs. Tilda Sandlin, while a passenger on appellant's train. Appellee alleged that the engine and some of the cars of the train, including the car in which his wife was riding, were derailed and were brought to a standstill by a sudden and violent stop, and that she was thrown violently down in the car, and thereby received the injuries complained of. Appellant's pleadings consisted of a general demurrer and general denial. A trial before a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for appellee for $16,000. The railroad company has appealed.

By its first assignment of error appellant complains of the following language used by appellee's attorney in the closing argument: "Gentlemen of the Jury: Who is operating this railroad now? The defendant company is not discharging its duty to the public. It is not keeping up its track for the purpose of preventing wrecks of the character of that in which plaintiff was injured, but is leaving that duty to a receiver." The language was objected to at the time, and a bill of exceptions saved. The attorney for appellee at once, upon objection being made, withdrew the remarks, stating to the jury that they were improper, and asked the jury not to consider them, and requested the court to instruct the jury to disregard them, which the court did. It appears from the bill of exceptions that the language above quoted was made in reply to the argument made by one of the appellant's attorneys to the effect that railroads are valuable to "your county and to your community. You seek to get railroads to your town, procuring for them rights of way, making to them donations, and in return they haul your people, buy your timber for ties, add value to your lands, and are of great use to you and should not be stricken down; and that defendant in this case should not be dealt a blow in doing so much for a community." It is conceded that the language complained of was improper. The jury was so told by the attorney who used it, and he also in that connection requested the jury not to consider his remarks, and at the same time the trial judge, by the request of the attorney, so admonished the jury. The attorney and the judge did all that could be done to avoid any injury to the defendant by the improper language used. As said in Brown v. Perez, 89 Tex. 286, 34 S. W. 727: "The district judge was in a position to observe the jury during the course of the argument, and could determine whether any injurious effect was produced upon their minds much better than we can by examination of the record, and we presume that if, in the opinion of the trial judge, injury had resulted, * * * he would have granted a new trial. We do not think, from the record as presented to us, that the error is such as to require a reversal of the judgment." Another reason that may be given for holding that the remarks, although improper, do not require a reversal, is that they were made in response to language used by appellant's attorney which were but little less, if not fully, as objectionable as that complained of. It certainly was no defense to plaintiff's suit that a railroad benefits a community through which it runs, by hauling its people, buying their timber for ties, and by adding values to their land; and it is equally certain that if such facts constituted a defense no such facts were proven. In making such an argument appellant's attorney urged before the jury matters which were improper for their consideration. "If counsel for one party pursues a line of argument not called for by the facts of the case, and in itself improper, and thereby invites a reply, the party so through counsel violating a proper course of procedure and the rules intended to secure the proper presentation of causes ought not to be heard to complain of the reply, and in such cases this court will not reverse a judgment on an assignment of error based on such facts." Railway Co. v. Garcia, 62 Tex. 289; Hogan v. Railway Co., 88 Tex. 683, 32 S. W. 1035; Jones v. Wright (Tex. Civ. App.) 92 S. W. 1011; Railway Co. v. Alleman (Tex. Civ. App.) 115 S. W. 74.

While testifying in his own behalf, the plaintiff was asked the following question: "What is the condition of your wife's lower limbs now?" To which he replied: "She suffers a great deal now. She is crippled and cannot walk. She has been in bed or either in the rolling chair, and suffering all the time since that accident. Her lower limbs are in a paralyzed condition now, and she hasn't any use of them and has no feeling in them." The question and answer were objected to on the grounds that the witness was not a physician, had not qualified as an expert, and therefore was not competent to speak on the subject, and that the testimony was immaterial, irrelevant, and prejudicial to defendant, and, the objection being overruled by the court, the ruling is made the basis of appellant's second assignment of error. The proposition following the assignment is: "It was error to permit appellee to testify that his wife was paralyzed without qualifying as a medical expert." The assignment is without merit and is overruled. The question did not call for the opinion of the witness, and the answer appears to be a statement of facts, and not an expression of an opinion or a conclusion. However that may be, it now appears to be well recognized that a nonexpert witness may give his opinion on questions of apparent conditions of the body or mind, intoxication, insanity, sickness, health, etc. Such testimony is received in the particular cases or instances mentioned because a mere description, without the witness' opinion, would convey an imperfect idea of the force, meaning, and inherent character of the thing described. Railway v. Flory (Tex. Civ. App.) 100 S. W. 222; Railway v. Clippenger (Tex. Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 158; Railway v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 90 S. W. 926.

By its third assignment appellant complains of the action of the court in admitting, over its objection, the testimony of Drs. Bush, Angier, Fowler, and Hendricks to the effect that, if plaintiff's wife was not in a situation to have a change of scenery and the like to divert her mind, her chances of recovery would be less than it would be under more favorable circumstances, and that, if she were not in such a situation as to have a change of scenery and the like to divert her mind, they would not say positively that she would ever get well. The proposition asserted under this assignment is that appellee could not recover damages which could be reasonably avoided by proper care and attention, and it was error for the court to permit evidence tending to show what would be the damages if appellee should fail to use reasonable efforts for the restoration of his wife's health, and that the admission of such testimony was prejudicial to appellant. It is manifest that the physicians had indicated that a change of scenery, or a diversion of her mind otherwise, would be beneficial to Mrs. Sandlin, and the question merely suggested what was self-evident, namely, that if she was not in a situation to have such a change she could not receive a benefit in that way. The only way the question could have become material would have been for appellee to have offered to show that his wife was not in a situation to have a change of scenery, or for appellant to have offered to show that she was; but neither did this. The evidence clearly was harmless and could not have affected the jury. If appellant desired to show that appellee could have, by proper care and attention, avoided the damages he sustained by reason of his wife's injury, it was incumbent on it to make such proof. Belcher v. Railway, 92 Tex. 597, 50 S. W. 559. The assignment is overruled.

Appellant's fourth assignment assails the third paragraph of the court's general charge to the jury, which is as follows: "Now, therefore, if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that an employé of the defendant company, intrusted with the duty in that regard, and in furtherance of the company's business, opened, or caused to be opened, a switch connecting the spur track and the main track at West Davidson Mill, and thereafter failed to close the same, and thus failing to close the same, if he did, he was guilty of negligence, and that such negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of the derailment of the train and injury to plaintiff's wife therein, if she was so injured, you will find a verdict for plaintiff." By its second proposition under this assignment appellant contends that, there being no evidence showing, or tending to show, that an employé of the company opened, or caused to be opened, the switch in question, and thereafter failed to close the same, it was error for the court to submit that issue to the jury. It is urged by the first proposition that it was reversible error for the court to submit an issue to the jury unless it is raised by both the pleadings and evidence. This brings us to a consideration of the evidence having a bearing on this issue.

The wreck occurred some time after 1 o'clock in the morning, and was manifestly caused by the switch at West Davidson Mill being so displaced as to be out of alignment for the main line and not far enough to connect with the spur track, thereby causing what is known as a "cocked" or "split" switch. Appellee having proved the derailment and consequent injury to his wife, it devolved upon appellant to negative every act or omission amounting to the want of care incumbent upon a carrier of passengers that could have been an efficient cause of the derailment, and this it attempted to do by offering testimony to prove that for the 17 hours next preceding the wreck the switch had not been opened or left opened by any of its employés intrusted with that duty, and in furtherance of the company's business. By its train dispatcher, Caldwell, was shown the times, that various trains passed West Davidson spur between 9 o'clock on the morning of December 27th and the time of derailment, as follows: A passenger train at 11 a. m., north-bound; a freight train at 11:30 a. m., south-bound; a passenger train at 1:50 p. m., south-bound; a freight train at 5:40 p. m., north-bound; an extra freight train at 6 p. m., north-bound; passenger train at 7:40 p. m., north-bound. The next train was the passenger train which derailed, which was south-bound. Employés on each of these trains, except the one derailed, testified that the switch was not thrown or used by any of the operatives of the respective trains, and at the time of the passing of their trains the switch was properly set and showed clear. All the crew of the north-bound freight train which passed the switch at 5:40 p. m. testified that they had orders to pick up a car off the spur track, but that they did not do so because the car was not properly loaded, and that while the train slowed down it did not come to a stop. Holland, the swing brakeman on this train, testified: That he got off the train at a point about 100 feet south of the gate across the spur track, where he expected to "cut" the train; that at the time he got off the train had not stopped; that it did not stop, but was running slowly; that the engineer whistled off-brakes; that he at once got back on the train; that only one other member of the crew got off on the ground, and he was the rear brakeman (Doyle) who got off the caboose to flag the train behind them. Dr. Rayburn and Miss Rich, who were at the switch when this train passed, testified that it passed without stopping and without any one getting off that they saw. It was shown by the sectionmen working that day near the spur that when they quit work at 5:30 p. m. they got on their hand car and went south to Lovelady, passing the switch at about 5:40, and passed it again, returning, at about 6:30. These witnesses testified that they did not notice anything wrong with the switch at either time. The testimony justifies the conclusion that the cocked switch would not have derailed a north-bound train, but would have derailed a train bound south. A hand car, being lighter, would be more easily derailed by a split switch. W. F. Morris, a passenger on the derailed train, testified: That he examined the switch immediately after the accident and found it in a half-thrown position, and he judged it was in that position when the train struck it; that he noticed the lock was not in the switch, but that he did not look for it; that later he saw one of the men who was looking for the cause of the accident pick the lock up from under the long tie on which the switch stand rested; that it was locked when picked up; that the switch stand showed no signs of having had any force applied to it; that the lock was found in the neighborhood of the stand; that it seemed to be in good condition, and saw no indication of its having been tampered with; that he noticed the switch staple into which the lock fastened, and its condition appeared to be normal, just about like all of them he had ever seen; that the switch lever was about halfway between the two slots on the switch plate and was not in a proper position to turn the train on either side.

We have not set out in detail the testimony bearing upon the issue, but enough, we think, to demonstrate that it was for the jury to say whether the prima facie case made by plaintiff, by showing the derailment and consequent injury to his wife, was rebutted by the testimony adduced by defendant to show that the switch was not left open by one of its employes. That the testimony referred to was sufficient to justify the charge complained of we think there is no doubt. With other evidence introduced the jury had before it testimony that there was to be moved a loaded car which was upon the spur track, which was connected by the switch with the main track; that a freight train crew had orders to pick this car up; that when the train reached the spur the swing brakeman, in the performance of his duties in connection with the picking up of said car, got off the train near the switch, and the rear brakeman also got off for the purpose of flagging a train that was following. It is true that the employes on this train testified they did not stop, and that none of them threw the switch; but whether they did or not was a question for the jury. Railway v. Runnels, 92 Tex. 306, 47 S. W. 971.

Or the jury may have believed that the section crew left the switch open. It was shown that they quit work at 5:30 p. m., passed the spur on a hand car going south at about 5:40, and returned about 6:30. The importance of this testimony becomes reasonably apparent when it is considered that three trains passed the switch near enough to the time the sectionmen said they passed it for it to have been necessary for them to have taken the spur track, or to have removed the hand car from the main line, in order to have gotten out of the way. One train passed at 5:40 going north; another going in the same direction passed at 6:00, and still another, going in the same direction, passed at 7:47. The time the sectionmen said they passed was 5:40. This was the very time that the evidence showed a train went by; the hand car going south, and the train north. Only 20 minutes later another train passed. It is true that they testified that they did not open the switch or leave it open; but if they did they would be actuated by the most powerful considerations to deny it, and this was a matter which the jury might properly consider. And the jury had before them the further fact that no violence appeared to have been done to the switch or any of the appliances, and the lock had no appearance of having been tampered with. It is pure speculation to suppose that a malicious person opened the switch. We think the testimony was clearly sufficient to justify the submission of the issue in the charge complained of. Railway v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 116 S. W. 109; Railway v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 121 S. W. 221; Railway v. Shapard (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 599; Railway v. Lytle (Tex. Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 900.

There is no merit in the third proposition under this assignment, that the charge complained of is upon the weight of the evidence, in that it assumes that the switch connecting the spur track and the main track was open. The testimony was so conclusive upon that point the court could well assume it as a fact. The assignment is overruled.

The remaining assignment of error complains that the verdict is excessive. There was testimony that appellee's wife is a nervous wreck, hopelessly paralyzed in her lower limbs, and an intense sufferer of both mental and physical pain, as a direct result of the injuries inflicted upon her in the wreck. There was other testimony indicating that under proper conditions and environment and with proper care she might recover in from three to five months from the time of trial. The verdict is large; but we cannot say from the evidence that it is so excessive as to indicate that the jury was actuated by passion, prejudice, sympathy, or other improper motive in fixing their award.

We find no reversible error in the record, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Affirmed.

TEXARKANA & FT. S. RY. CO. v. NECHES IRON WORKS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 23, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 105*)—FAILURE TO DELIVER—NOTICE OF SPECIAL DAMAGES.

When a consignee paid the freight on a car of coke in the carrier's yards at its destination, he informed the carrier that the consignee's supply of coke was running short, and that, unless it received the coke promptly, its plant would likely be shut down, as coke was necessary to run it. Held sufficient to charge the carrier with notice of special damages by loss of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 452½; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

2. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 44*)—DAMAGES—VALUE OF PROPERTY.

The general measure of damages for conversion of property is its market value at the time and place of conversion, with legal interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. § 260; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 113*)—RELEVANCY—MARKET VALUE.

Evidence of the price paid for property is not evidence of its market value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 271; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

4. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 40*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—VALUE OF PROPERTY.

Evidence as to the value of a car of coke at the time of its conversion held insufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. § 242; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

5. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 54*)—RECOVERY OF SPECIAL DAMAGES.

In a suit for a carrier's conversion of a car of coke, plaintiff, a manufacturing company, was not entitled to recover for loss of an order for work, where it appeared that the order was subsequently filled, and that all the profit was made out of it that would have been made if filled promptly.

Appeal from Jefferson County Court; Jas. A. Harrison, Judge.

Suit by the Neches Iron Works against the Texarkana & Ft. Smith Railway Company and another. There was a judgment for plaintiff against the defendant named, and it appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Hiram Glass and H. M. Whitaker, for appellant. Terry, Cavin & Mills and F. J. & R. C. Duff, for appellee G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. W. W. Cruse, for appellee Neches Iron Works.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This suit was brought by the Neches Iron Works against the appellant and the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company to recover the value of a car load of coke alleged to have been converted by the defendants, and to recover special damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of said conversion. The cause of action is thus stated in the petition: "That heretofore, to wit, on or about September 3, 1907, defendants owned, operated, and controlled each its certain line of railroad, extending into and about the city of Beaumont, Jefferson county, Tex., and was then and there and still is engaged in the business of running and operating a line of railroad and transporting freight on and over their said lines of road as common carriers for hire, and that on or about September 6, 1907, in consideration of the sum of $88 then and there paid defendants by plaintiff, which was freight charges demanded by the defendants upon one car of Milwaukee Salvoy coke, at which time the defendants promised and agreed to carry and deliver to the plaintiff promptly at its machine shops, in the city of Beaumont, Tex., its place of business, said one car of Milwaukee Salvoy coke, which was then and there in their possession in their yards in the city of Beaumont, Tex., having been shipped over their said line of railroad, and was then and there the property of this plaintiff, and was of the reasonable value of $199.04, and that at the time of the payment of said freight charges, as aforesaid, plaintiff told and informed defendants that its supply of coke was running short, and it was in immediate need of the delivery of this car of coke, and unless same was delivered to them promptly, which it requested to be done, that its supply would run out, and they would be delayed in their work, and would cause them damage, and that repeatedly thereafter, for the next 10 or 15 days, plaintiff did call defendants up over the phone and requested and insisted upon the immediate delivery of the said car of coke to them, each time informing them of the importance of having the same delivered at once, stating to them, unless they received same at once, they would have to close the shops, and would be damaged, and that they would hold them for it. But that afterwards, on or about September 6, 1907, defendants knowingly, unlawfully, and willfully took possession of said property, and knowingly and unlawfully converted the same to their own use and benefit. Plaintiff further charges that it was some 20 days after the payment of said freight charges before it learned that its said car of coke had been used, and that defendant could not deliver same, but that during all this time which intervened defendants negligently and fraudulently misinformed plaintiff and kept it believing that its car of coke would be delivered by telling it that they would trace it up and have it put over to him, when as a matter of fact it had been appropriated and could not be delivered." Other allegations of the petition claim that the special damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of loss of business caused by the failure of the defendants to deliver the coke amounted to the sum of $250.

The defendants answered by general demurrer and general denial, and specially excepted to the petition on the ground that the allegations of special damages were insufficient, in that there is no allegation that the defendants at the time they accepted the shipment of the coke had notice that such special damage would likely accrue if there should be a failure to deliver the coke. Defendants also excepted or pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the claim for special damages being insufficient, for the reason above stated, and the amount sued for as general damages being less than $200, the court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the case. The trial in the court below with a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the appellant for the sum of $208, the alleged value of the coke with interest thereon from the date of its conversion, and the further sum of $140 special damages. No judgment was rendered against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company. From this judgment the Texarkana & Ft. Smith Railway Company has appealed against plaintiff and its codefendant.

The court did not err in overruling the special exception to the petition and the plea of its jurisdiction. The petition alleged that at the time the defendants were notified that special damages would accrue if the coke was not delivered the car of coke was in possession of the defendants in their yards in the city of Beaumont. The general rule requiring notice at the time of making a contract for the delivery of property of the existence of peculiar conditions under which special damages are likely to accrue from its breach as essential to create liability of the promisor for such damages is not universal nor applicable to all cases, and it has been expressly held in a case similar to this case in all respects that notice given after the property reached its destination and is in the possession and control of the carrier charged with its delivery is sufficient. Bourland v. Railway Co., 99 Tex. 407, 90 S. W. 483, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 647. The evidence shows that at the time plaintiff's agent paid the freight on the shipment, and appellant agreed to deliver the coke at once, he informed the appellant that plaintiff's supply of coke was running short, and that, unless they received the coke promptly, the plaintiff's plant would likely be shut down, as coke was necessary for running the plant. At this time the car was in possession of appellant at Beaumont. This was sufficient to charge appellant with notice of the special damages claimed by plaintiff, and the court did not err in submitting that issue to the jury.

The only testimony as to the value of the car of coke at Beaumont at the time of its conversion is that of the witnesses Meagher and Wills. The witness Meagher after stating the value of the car of coke to be $199.04, which he fixed by the market and the invoice, on cross-examination stated that he got the value "entirely by the figures I took from my invoice, and the papers in my office. I never saw the coke. There is good coke and bad coke. I don't know whether that car was good coke or bad coke. I never saw it. The only thing I can tell about its nature and condition is the reputation of the house. I never saw that particular car of coke, and I don't know whether it was good or bad." And in answer to a further inquiry stated that he fixed the whole thing as to the class and amount of the coke by the invoices and his books. The witness Wills stated that the contract price of this coke with the concern from whom he purchased was $9.55 a ton. There was no other evidence as to the amount or value. It is well settled that the general measure of damages for the conversion of property is the market value of the property at the time and place of the conversion, with legal interest thereon. It is also settled that evidence of the price paid for property is not evidence of its market value. Under these rules, if the witnesses had testified that a car of coke of the quantity, class, and condition of that converted by the defendants cost the sum named by them, and from the fact that such was its cost in the open market they would swear that such was its market value, such evidence would clearly be inadmissible, and, if admitted without objection, we are not inclined to think it would be sufficient to sustain a finding as to the market value of coke. But, be this as it may, the evidence in this case is we think clearly insufficient because the witness does not testify as to the cost of a car of coke of the kind and quantity converted by the defendants, but says he does not know how much or what kind of coke was taken, and he only testifies that coke of this kind and quantity named in the invoice sent plaintiff would cost the amount named. We think this evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, and the assignment complaining of the judgment on this ground should be sustained. This testimony in effect amounted to nothing more than the production of the invoice.

The evidence is also insufficient to sustain the verdict for $140 special damages for loss on an order for work to be done for the Gulf Refining Company. The evidence shows that this order was delayed by the failure to receive the coke, but that it was finally filled by the plaintiff, and plaintiff's manager testified: "When we did get it out, we made whatever profit we were going to make on that particular work. We did not lose that work." It is clear that plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages for loss of this order when the testimony shows that it was subsequently filled and all the profit made out of it that would have been made if it had been filled promptly.

None of the assignments presented in the brief show any error against the appellant in the trial of the case as between it and its codefendant, the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, and the judgment in favor of said company should be affirmed. In announcing our decision and making the entry upon our trial docket, we inadvertently stated that the judgment of the court below was reversed and the cause remanded, when the entry and announcement should have been reversed and remanded as to appellee Neches Iron Works and affirmed as to the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company. This entry will be corrected and judgment entered as indicated, and it is so ordered.

Affirmed in part. Reversed and remanded in part.

BLACKWELL DURHAM TOBACCO CO. v. JACOBS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON (§ 12*)—VERIFIED ACCOUNT—EFFECT OF VERIFICATION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action on a sworn account for goods sold and delivered, defendant's sworn plea, by admitting the correctness of the item of the account, made a prima facie case for plaintiff, when put in evidence, though the plea also alleged that defendant was entitled to certain credits from the amount claimed as due, and the burden was upon defendant to establish such credits by other proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Action on, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1175*)—DISPOSITION—REVERSAL AND RENDITION.

Where the evidence on appeal, which consisted of the pleadings and admissions therein, shows that plaintiff was entitled to a larger judgment than that rendered, the Court of Civil Appeals will reverse and render such judgment as the trial court should have rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4573, 4580; Dec. Dig. § 1175.*]

Appeal from Grimes County Court; T. P. Buffington, Judge.

Action by the Blackwell Durham Tobacco Company against L. A. Jacobs. From a judgment for plaintiff for a less amount than claimed, it appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Geo. D. Neal, for appellant. Hood Boone, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. This is an action on a sworn account for goods sold and delivered to Jacobs; the account showing 4,850 pounds of tobacco sold at various dates for $3,055.50 as the debit and various items of credits amounting to $2,798.96, leaving a balance of debit of $256.04. The answer was a general denial, and a sworn plea, as follows: "That said itemized account aforesaid shows a balance of $256.04, when in truth and in fact the balance due and owing plaintiff by this defendant is only the sum of $13.54, which this defendant is ready and willing to pay. That plaintiff (defendant) admits that he bought the quantities of tobacco as set forth in said itemized account aforesaid at the price set out therein, to wit, 4,850 pounds, but that this defendant was entitled to a discount and rebate of five cents per pound on said 4,850 pounds tobacco. That said discount or rebate amounts in the aggregate to the sum of $242.50, which defendant alleges and says should have been credited to him on said itemized account aforesaid, for which reason defendant says that said account is not just and is untrue, and that there is only due plaintiff the sum of $13.54, which sum defendant is ready and willing to pay, as before alleged." The judge's findings of fact were that plaintiff's testimony consisted of the verified account, that defendant's evidence consisted of the sworn plea, and from this the conclusion of law: "Defendant having pleaded under oath that the account was unjust and untrue, the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to establish its case by other evidence; the prima facie character of the sworn account having been lost." The judgment was that plaintiff should recover on defendant's answer the sum of $13.54.

This judgment, we conclude, is erroneous. If the sworn denial of the account had been in the general terms of the statute, plaintiff unquestionably would have had to prove his account by independent testimony; but the sworn plea admitted that the goods were purchased by the defendant of plaintiff, and at the price which was stated in the account. The only respect in which the account was questioned was the omission therefrom of a certain credit that defendant claimed he was entitled to. Now, the very plea which was relied on to destroy the account as evidence in doing so admitted and established its correctness as far as it went. This admission made a prima facie case for plaintiff, and we are of opinion that it devolved upon defendant to show by testimony the existence of the credit he set up. This he did not do. The items of the account not having been controverted, but admitted by the plea itself, which was introduced as evidence, was sufficient proof of them. Shuford v. Chinski (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 141.

The cause was tried by the court, and it becomes our duty, according to the law as we think it applicable to the evidence, to render such judgment as the trial judge should have rendered, which is that plaintiff have judgment for the balance claimed.

Reversed and rendered.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. COUCH.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 23, 1909.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 112*)—MEASURE—BURNING PASTURE LAND.

The measure of damages for burning grass from pasture land is its rental value for pasturage, and the value of the grass burned cannot be based on the value of hay fed to stock because of the destruction of such grass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 281-283; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 549*)—PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION OF ERROR—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Where the statement of facts prepared by the trial judge, the parties having failed to agree, shows the proceedings on the trial, the questions and answers, and the exceptions made, and is filed within the time allowed for filing bills of exceptions, exceptions to the introduction of evidence so presented will be considered on appeal, and an objection that no proper bill of exceptions was reserved cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 549.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 485*)—FIRES—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railroad for grass and fruit trees burned, the evidence showed that plaintiff owned the premises, but that another was in possession "cropping on shares" and was authorized to use the fruit and let his stock graze upon the grass. The court charged that plaintiff would be entitled to recover for all damage sustained by the burning of the grass. Held, that the charge ignored the rights of the cropper, and entitled plaintiff to recover therefor, and should have confined recovery to the loss sustained by plaintiff only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

Appeal from Ellis County Court; J. T. Spencer, Judge.

Action by R. N. Couch against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas. Judgment for plaintiff, and the railway company appeals. Affirmed on the original hearing, without opinion; but, on motion for a rehearing, reversed and remanded.

Coke, Miller & Coke and G. C. Grace, for appellant. Tom Whipple, for appellee.

RAINEY, C. J. Appellee brought this suit to recover damages for grass, fence, posts, and fruit trees destroyed by fire set by one of appellant's engines. The damages claimed were $390. A trial before a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $250, from which the railway company appeals.

On the trial the plaintiff testified the value of the grass burned was $2.50 per acre. On cross-examination he testified that he did not know the rental value of pasture land such as his, and that his estimate of the value of the grass burned was based on the value of hay he fed to his stock because of the burning of the grass on his pasture. Appellant moved to exclude this testimony of the witness, which was overruled. This was error. The measure of damages for growing grass burned is its value at the time and place of burning, and its value cannot be determined by the value of hay necessarily fed to stock because of the destruction of such grass. The proof does not show the quantity of grass that was standing on the land when it was destroyed, nor whether it was more or less than the amount that was necessarily fed to the stock because of the burning, nor was the expense of cutting, etc., which is necessary in arriving at the value of hay that has been severed from the soil, shown. The land on which the grass was destroyed being used for pasturage, the damages were the value of such land for that purpose.

Counsel for appellee contend that we ought not to consider this assignment, as there was no proper bill of exceptions shown to have been reserved as required by law. The exception is shown in the statement of facts which was prepared by the judge trying the case—the parties having failed to agree—to which statement of facts the judge affixed the following certificate: "Counsel having failed to agree upon a statement of facts in the above-styled cause, I submit the foregoing as a correct statement of the material evidence, and of the exceptions reserved and approve and allow such statement and exceptions, and order the same filed as a part of the record in said cause." It has been the practice of the appellate courts of this state, which practice is upheld by various decisions, to consider exceptions to the introduction of evidence when presented as done in this case. The statement of facts shows the proceedings on the trial, the questions asked and answers given as to part of the evidence, and the exceptions made to the rulings of the court in relation thereto. There is no objection that said statement of facts was not filed within the time allowed for filing bills of exceptions. We are of the opinion that appellee's objection to the consideration of said exception should not be sustained.

The evidence shows that plaintiff owned the premises, but that one Owens was in possession "cropping on the shares." He was authorized to use the fruit that grew on the premises and to let his stock graze upon the grass that was destroyed. The court instructed the jury, in effect that plaintiff would be entitled to recover for all the damages sustained by the burning of the grass. While it appears that Owens' damages were small, yet he had substantial rights, which were ignored, and for which, under the charge, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. We think the charge should have confined a recovery to the loss sustained by plaintiff only, and not authorized a recovery for all the damages sustained.

Near the close of last term of this court we affirmed this case, believing no substantial error had been committed; but upon reconsideration of the case on motion for rehearing our minds have undergone a change, and we are now convinced that the failure to exclude the testimony stated was material error, and that substantial justice had not been reached.

Therefore the motion for rehearing will be granted, and the judgment of the lower court reversed, and cause remanded.

KOPPE et al. v. KOPPE.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 22, 1909.)

1. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 51*)—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF—FRAUD.

In an action to set aside a deed from plaintiff to his stepmother, being part of a transaction involving an exchange of land between them, for alleged advantage taken of him by her while occupying a relation of trust and confidence towards plaintiff, in order to recover, plaintiff must establish his cause of action by a preponderance of evidence; and, where the trust relation is shown, and evidence has been introduced by defendant, tending to show that the transaction in question was on an adequate consideration, it was error to charge that the burden of proof was upon defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the transaction was fair, and that no advantage was taken by defendant, and that the consideration paid was fair and adequate, since thereunder, if the jury was unable to determine, from the evidence, whether or not the consideration was adequate, they could find for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 108; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

2. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 8*)—VALIDITY OF TRANSACTION—BURDEN OF PROOF—RATIFICATION.

Defendant, in addition to the general denial, having specially pleaded that plaintiff, with full knowledge of all the facts, ratified the trade by executing a mortgage on the property conveyed to him in exchange, the burden was upon defendant to establish by a preponderance of evidence all the facts necessary to show the ratification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS CHARGE.

That the consideration paid to plaintiff was so inadequate as to make the transaction fraudulent not being shown by undisputed evidence, the erroneous charge was not harmless, since it could only be so if there were no conflict in the evidence upon the issue so submitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4219; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY—STATEMENT.

If plaintiff, alleged to have been defrauded by defendant into conveying land to defendant in exchange for other land, subsequently mortgaged the land given to him in exchange, and had no knowledge of the fraud when he executed the mortgage, the act could not be a ratification of the alleged fraudulent transaction, and hence an assignment of error complaining of an erroneous charge on such ratification, which did not show in the statement thereunder that plaintiff knew of the fraud, if any, when he executed the mortgage, did not raise the issue of ratification, and upon the state of the record any error in the charge on that issue would be harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

5. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 3*)—FRAUD—RATIFICATION.

If plaintiff, alleged to have been defrauded by defendant into conveying land to defendant in exchange for other land, with a full knowledge and understanding of all the facts, treated the property received by him as his own, appropriated it to his use by executing a mortgage thereon, his acts would constitute a ratification, regardless whether he knew specifically what his legal remedies were, and whether he knew that the execution of the mortgage would be a ratification of the transaction, it not being contended that he was of insufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and consequence of his acts, but only that his mind was wanting in intelligence, judgment, and experience, qualifying him to conduct a business transaction, and that he was wanting in shrewdness or capacity to form a correct idea of the value of money or property; this not amounting to such deficiency as to release him from the operation of the general rule that ignorance of the law excuses no one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 5, 7; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

6. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 8*)—FRAUD—EVIDENCE—VALUE OF LAND EXCHANGED.

In ascertaining the value of land exchanged with plaintiff to determine whether he had been defrauded by defendant only the market value of the property at the time of the transaction, if it had a market value at that time, could be considered, especially where plaintiff's property at the time of the exchange was largely indebted, making it necessary to ascertain the value of plaintiff's equity therein and find the excess, if any, in the market value of the property over and above its indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 142*)—RELEVANCY—VALUE OF LAND.

In ascertaining the value of land, evidence of the value of other lands belonging to the same tract is inadmissible, unless such lands are shown to be of the same character and in the same immediate neighborhood, and the surroundings and conditions of both are substantially identical, and the testimony as to the value of land situated 18 or 20 miles away, not shown to be of the same character, is inadmissible.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 416-421; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 478*)—OPINIONS—NONEXPERTS—MENTAL CAPACITY.

In an action to set aside a deed from plaintiff to his stepmother for alleged advantage taken of him by her, while she was occupying a relation of trust, where it was not sought to avoid the contract upon the grounds of mental incapacity, but allegations in the petition of mental weakness, ignorance, and want of business capacity were only auxiliary to the allegation that he trusted his stepmother to protect his interests, which trust was largely superinduced by his mental unfitness for the conduct of large business transactions, and that the trust had been taken advantage of by his stepmother in the transaction complained of, testimony of witnesses that they had known plaintiff for a long time, had often seen him and conversed with him, and that some of them had known of trades made by him, and that from their knowledge, thus obtained, he was in their opinion weak-minded, and had no appreciation of the value of money or property, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2242-2244; Dec. Dig. § 478.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 501*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—MENTAL CAPACITY—EXAMINATION OF NON-EXPERT.

The testimony was not incompetent because the witnesses failed to state specifically the acts of plaintiff and conversations had with him, on which their opinions were based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2297; Dec. Dig. § 501.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—MENTAL CAPACITY—CONCLUSIONS.

The testimony was not objectionable as being opinions involving a legal conclusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2168, 2170; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—MENTAL CAPACITY—LEGAL CONCLUSIONS.

Testimony of witnesses that plaintiff did not in their opinion have sufficient mental capacity to fully understand the transaction was inadmissible as involving a legal conclusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2168, 2170; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

12. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 3*)—VALIDITY—FRAUD—AVOIDANCE.

Fraud of one standing in a confidential relation in a transaction involving an exchange of land does not depend upon the defrauded party's sole reliance on the representations, and avoidance of the exchange is not precluded by the fact that he consulted a friend, and was also influenced by the friend to make the trade.

Appeal from District Court, Brazos County; J. C. Scott, Judge.

Action by William Koppe against Laura Koppe and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Doremus & Butler, for appellants. T. R. Batts, V. B. Hudson, and Hutcheson, Campbell & Hutcheson, for appellee.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This suit was brought by the appellee against the appellants, Laura Koppe, J. F. Robinson, and Augusta Kurten, to recover an undivided one-half interest in the estate of William Koppe, deceased. As preliminary to such recovery, it was sought to cancel a deed executed by the plaintiff to Laura Koppe on February 26, 1906, whereby plaintiff conveyed his interest in said estate to said defendant. It was further sought to cancel certain deeds from Laura Koppe to the defendants Robinson and Kurten, conveying to them, respectively, certain portions of the lands belonging to said estate. The following paragraphs of the petition sufficiently show the grounds upon which plaintiff sought to set aside the deed by which he conveyed his interest in the estate to the defendant Laura Koppe: "Plaintiff avers that the defendant Laura Koppe is the surviving widow of William Koppe, deceased, plaintiff's father, and that plaintiff is the child of William Koppe deceased by a former marriage, and is the only child descendant of the said William Koppe, deceased. Plaintiff avers that the defendant Laura Koppe is a shrewd, designing, far-seeing, calculating person, and she exercised over plaintiff's father a great and overwhelming influence, and plaintiff's father being conscious of the fact that plaintiff was a green, inexperienced, ignorant, and uneducated fellow, whose mind was wholly undeveloped, and he knew that plaintiff was wholly incapable of protecting and taking care of the large estate to which he would be entitled upon the death of his father, and plaintiff's father being desirous of providing for and leaving him in comfortable and easy circumstances, he did often, prior to his death, communicate his said wishes to the defendant Laura Koppe, and she did then and there set about and did induce plaintiff's father to give her an equal interest in said estate with this plaintiff, and, in order to secure said interest, promised plaintiff's father that she would diligently and faithfully guard and protect plaintiff's every interest, and would look after his welfare generally, and plaintiff's father, relying upon said promise made to him by defendant Laura Koppe, and believing that she would perform the services promised conscientiously and faithfully, and for the purpose of securing for plaintiff the assistance, protection, and help of the said Laura Koppe in looking after and taking care of his property, plaintiff's father did on the 11th day of November, 1902, make and publish his last will and testament, by the terms of which he bequeathed to Laura Koppe and this plaintiff an equal one-half interest each in his estate; that said will was after the death of said William Koppe, which occurred on the — day of —, 1902, duly probated by the probate court of Brazos county, and by terms of said will, and in the manner hereinbefore alleged, the said Laura Koppe acquired an undivided one-half interest in all of the property of the said William Koppe, deceased, plaintiff's father. Plaintiff avers that all of the property, both real, personal, and mixed, of which his father died seised and possessed, was community property between his father and this plaintiff's mother, or was the separate property of plaintiff's father, made and acquired long prior to his marriage to the defendant Laura Koppe, and no part of said property was community property between plaintiff's father and the defendant Laura Koppe. Plaintiff avers that immediately after the death of his father defendant Laura Koppe, in connection with Mr. Milton Parker of Brazos county, Tex., took charge of all of the estate, both real, personal, and mixed, belonging to his said father's estate and administered the same independent of the probate court, as by said will provided, and the said Laura Koppe being extremely avaricious and grasping in her disposition, and so unpleasant in her manner of the management of said estate, by desiring to acquire for herself the entire and absolute control and possession of said estate, did thereafter commence a course of conduct towards the said Milton Parker in the matter of the management and conduct of said estate and the spending of money belonging thereto which was so objectionable and annoying to the said Parker that he did thereafter file his application in the probate court of Brazos county, Tex., and did resign his trust as executor of said estate, which said application and resignation were filed on January 12, 1905, and plaintiff avers that, after said resignation of the said Parker aforesaid, the defendant Laura Koppe had absolute and entire and unqualified control of all of the property belonging to the estate of William Koppe, deceased, both real, personal, and mixed; and she did thereafter manage, control, and dispose of said property as she saw fit, without consulting this plaintiff, and without regard to his interest and welfare, and plaintiff, relying all the while upon her to look after his interest, believing that she was so doing. * * * Plaintiff, though of adult age, is wholly wanting in intelligence, judgment, and experience qualifying him to conduct a business transaction. His mind is naturally weak and wanting in shrewdness or capacity to form a correct idea of the value of money or property or to protect himself in a trade. He has never engaged in a business transaction of any size or magnitude. That he has lived since becoming of age on his father's plantation in Burleson county, Tex., working as a common laborer, receiving pay of $25 per month for his services, and, in addition to his lack of experience, his mind is dwarfed and undeveloped, all of which was fully known to the defendants Laura Koppe and J. F. Robinson. The said defendants Laura Koppe and J. F. Robinson, knowing of plaintiff's said condition, undertook to buy from him his interest in his father's estate and the land held in common between plaintiff and Laura Koppe, and finally persuaded and procured him to make to Laura Koppe the deed hereinbefore described on the 26th day of February, 1906, a copy of which has been here filed in this cause, marked 'Exhibit B,' paying the plaintiff for said property the sum of $2,500 in money, and giving him a deed to a tract of land belonging to said estate worth not exceeding $5,000, and plaintiff is informed, and so believes and so charges, the fact to be that the price paid to him for his interest in said property is grossly inadequate, for that his interest in said estate was at that time easily worth the sum of $75,000 over and above all debts, but so it is he alleges that he being ignorant of the matters, and having had no experience with large sums of money or trades of any magnitude, supposed at the time of the purchase that he was being paid a fair value, and especially supposed that he would not be overreached or mistreated in said trade by his stepmother, Laura Koppe, but he alleges that he was by said Laura Koppe aided and assisted by J. F. Robinson, grossly overreached, and his property sought to be taken from him by them for a grossly inadequate consideration, therefore he avers that no title passed by said deed, and same should be set aside and canceled and held for naught." Other paragraphs of the petition set out specifically and fully many acts and representations of the defendants Laura Koppe and J. F. Robinson, by which it is alleged they knowingly and fraudulently deceived plaintiff, and thereby fraudulently obtained from him the conveyance of his interest in the estate of his father. The defendants answered by general and special exceptions and general denial and by special pleas, the nature of which it is unnecessary to state here. The trial in the court below by a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The conclusion we have reached as to the proper disposition of this appeal renders a full statement of the facts shown by the evidence unnecessary and inappropriate. It is sufficient to say that the evidence was conflicting upon the issue of fraud raised by the pleadings, and, while there was ample evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury, there was also evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that defendant Laura Koppe acted in good faith in making the trade with plaintiff. Upon this state of the evidence the trial court gave the jury the following instruction: "If you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that at and prior to February 26, 1906, the defendant Laura Koppe occupied a position of advantage over the plaintiff, either because of the weakness of his mind or judgment, which prevented him from understanding his rights, or the nature and extent of the transaction in which the deeds were exchanged, if you find from a preponderance of the testimony that such a condition of mind or judgment existed, or if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that prior to and at said date the said Laura Koppe occupied a position of advantage over the plaintiff because of his confidence and reliance upon her, if you find that such relation of trust and confidence existed, and that at the time said deed was executed she did occupy a position of advantage over the plaintiff on account of the existence of said conditions or either of them, then you are instructed that the burden of proof is on the defendant Laura Koppe to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the transaction of date February 26, 1906, in which the plaintiff executed his deed to her in exchange for her deed to him and the $2,500 in money, was fair and open, that no advantage was taken in the course of said trade by her, that the plaintiff understood the nature and value of his rights in the property conveyed to her, and that the consideration paid to the plaintiff was fair and adequate—that is, reasonably of the same value as the land conveyed to her—and if you have found that the conditions, or either of them above set out, conferring a position of advantage on the said Laura Koppe, existed, unless you so find the facts to be in regard to said transaction as submitted to you herein as to fairness and adequacy, then you will return a verdict for the plaintiff for the cancellation of said deeds of February 26, 1906." Under an appropriate assignment of error appellant assails this charge upon the ground among others, that it erroneously places the burden of proof on the defendant upon the issue of whether the consideration paid plaintiff for the conveyance of his interest in the Koppe estate was fair and adequate. We think the assignment should be sustained. Unless plaintiff was injured by the transaction of which he complains, he is not entitled to have it set aside.

The allegation that the consideration received by him for his conveyance of the property to the defendant was inadequate was an essential part of plaintiff's position, and proof of this allegation was necessary to his right to relief. Such inadequacy of consideration being an essential part of his case, the burden rested upon him to establish such fact by a preponderance of the evidence, and the burden of proof upon this issue could not be shifted to the defendant at any stage of the proceedings. The authorities cited by appellee do not sustain his contention that the charge was correct. The statement of Judge Niell in the opinion in the case of Wells v. Houston, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 69 S. W. 183, that "there are certain relations of trust, such as parent and child, guardian and ward, trustee and cestui que trust, attorney and client, where the danger of allowing persons holding such relations with other to deal with them is so great that the presumption ought to be and is against the transaction; and the person holding the trust or influence ought to be and are required to vindicate it from all fraud," cannot be taken as holding that in a case of this character, when the trust relation is shown and evidence has been introduced by the defendant tending to show that the transaction sought to be set aside was based on an adequate consideration, it would be proper to instruct the jury that the burden was upon the defendant to show the adequacy of the consideration. No such question was before the court in the case cited, and the learned judge who wrote that opinion only announced the rule which is well settled by authority that proof of a trust relation of this character is prima facie evidence of fraud in the transaction, and from which the existence of such relationship the necessary and essential fact of inadequacy of consideration might be presumed. This is but a rule of evidence under which the existence of one fact may be presumed upon proof of another, and is not in conflict with the settled rule that the burden is upon the plaintiff to make out his case by a preponderance of the evidence, and that, while the weight of the evidence may shift from side to side during the progress of a trial, a plaintiff is never relieved of this burden, and, when all the evidence is in, unless the jury find that the plaintiff has made out his case by a preponderance of the evidence, their verdict should be for the defendant. Under the charge given by the court, above set out, if the jury were unable to determine from the evidence whether or not the consideration given plaintiff was adequate and fair, they were told to find a verdict for plaintiff, when the law is that, unless the plaintiff establishes the cause of action asserted by him by a preponderance of the evidence, the verdict should be for the defendant. If the defendant seeks to defeat a prima facie case made by the plaintiff by proof of an independent fact, in avoidance of the right of recovery, of course, the burden is upon him to establish such fact, and the jury be so instructed. This distinction is aptly illustrated in the present case. In addition to the general denial, the defendant specially pleaded that plaintiff with full knowledge of all the facts ratified and affirmed the trade by executing a deed of trust upon the property conveyed him by defendant Laura Koppe in consideration of his conveyance to her of his interest in the estate. Upon this issue the burden was upon the defendant to establish by a preponderance of the evidence all of the facts necessary to show the ratification, and the court properly so charged the jury. The rule that, when the defendant seeks to defeat the prima facie case made by the plaintiff by evidence tending to show that some fact necessary to establish such prima facie case is not true, the burden does not rest upon him to establish the nonexistence of such fact by a preponderance of the evidence, but in such case, unless the jury find from a preponderance of all the evidence that the facts necessary to establish plaintiff's right to recover are true, they should find for the defendant, is firmly fixed by the decisions of our Supreme Court, and it is therefore unnecessary to ascertain what the rule is in other jurisdictions.

The leading case upon this subject is that of Clark v. Hills et al., 67 Tex. 141, 2 S. W. 356. This case has been uniformly followed and approved by the Supreme Court. Railway Co. v. Burns, 71 Tex. 481, 9 S. W. 467; Scott v. Pettigrew, 72 Tex. 329, 12 S. W. 161; Jester v. Steiner, 86 Tex. 419, 25 S. W. 411. The case of Railway Co. v. Johnson, 92 Tex. 591, 50 S. W. 563, is not in conflict with the views above expressed. While the charge approved in that case instructed the jury that, if they found certain facts alleged by the plaintiff to be true, they constituted a prima facie case of negligence against the railroad, "and, in the absence of rebutting evidence sufficient to overcome such prima facie case," the defendant would be liable, the jury were further told, in effect, that to find for the plaintiff they must find from the evidence that the rebuttal testimony offered by the defendant was not true. The court in approving this charge expressly holds that it did not shift the burden of proof from the plaintiff to the defendant. This certainly cannot be said of the charge complained of in this case. This error in the charge would only be harmless in a case in which there was no conflict in the evidence upon the issue so erroneously submitted, and we cannot say that the undisputed evidence in this case shows that the consideration paid plaintiff by the defendant was so inadequate as to make the transaction fraudulent, and the appellee does not so contend.

Upon the issue of ratification pleaded by the defendants the court instructed the jury as follows: "Upon the defendant's plea of ratification, you are instructed that if you believe from the evidence that at the time and under the circumstances when plaintiff made and executed his deed of trust to A. G. Board plaintiff was fully advised of his interest which he had sold by deed of February 26, 1906, and was fully advised of the existence of the fraud perpetrated by defendants, or either of them, upon him, if any such you have found under any preceding paragraph of this charge, and knew and had sufficient capacity to understand the wrong done him, if he had been wronged, and he knew he was entitled to relief, and the relief to which he was entitled, you will find your verdict in this case for the defendants against the cancellation of the deed, even though you should find that they had originally defrauded plaintiff; and, unless you so find that said mortgage was executed with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances affecting plaintiff's rights in his deed of February 26, 1906, and that he knew that in executing his said mortgage he was ratifying the previous transaction, you will disregard the evidence as to the execution of the said mortgage, and the circumstances connected therewith, and if you have found under the other paragraphs of this charge that the deeds of February 26, 1906, should be canceled and said transaction set aside, you will return your verdict for the plaintiff accordingly." This charge is assailed upon the following grounds: "(a) It requires the jury to believe that the plaintiff knew the value of the interest that he sold and the existence of the fraud perpetrated upon him, and also the relief to which he was entitled. (b) Said charge also required the jury to believe the plaintiff knew by the execution of the mortgage he was ratifying the transaction with Mrs. Koppe; whereas, the relief to which the plaintiff was entitled, and whether his acts amounted to a ratification or not, were questions of law, and did not depend upon plaintiff's knowledge or intention." The assignment complaining of this error in the charge cannot be sustained, because it does not appear from the statement thereunder that the defendant knew of the fraud, if any was perpetrated upon him, at the time he executed the mortgage. The statement made by appellee in answer to the assignment tends to show that he had no such knowledge at the time the mortgage was executed. Upon this state of the record the issue of ratification is not raised and any error in the charge on that issue would not be prejudicial to the defendants.

In view of another trial, it is necessary that we pass upon the questions presented by the assignment. We think each of the objections to the charge urged by appellant is valid. If, with a full knowledge and understanding of all the facts, appellant treated the property received by him as his own and appropriated it to his use and benefit by executing a mortgage or deed of trust thereon, such acts would constitute a ratification regardless of whether he knew specifically what his legal remedies were, and regardless of whether he knew that the execution of the mortgage was to be a ratification of the transaction. It is not alleged that appellant was of insufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and consequence of his acts. All that is claimed in the petition is that his mind was wanting in "intelligence, judgment, and experience qualifying him to conduct a business transaction, that he is wanting in shrewdness or capacity required to form a correct idea of the value of money or property, and that his mind is dwarfed and undeveloped." Neither the pleading nor evidence show plaintiff to be so deficient in mental capacity as to relieve him from the operation of the general rule that ignorance of the law excuses no one. The doctrine of ratification of a contract obtained by fraud is thus stated by

Mr. Pomeroy: "Where a party originally had a right of defense or of action to defeat or set aside a transaction on the ground of actual or constructive fraud, he may lose such remedial right by a subsequent confirmation, by acquiescence, and even by mere delay or laches." 2 Pom. Eq. Juris. p. 964. Treating of this subject of ratification by acquiescence, the author says: "A second mode by which the remedial right may be destroyed, and the transaction rendered unimpeachable, is acquiescence. The term 'acquiescence' is sometimes used improperly. It differs from confirmation on one side, and from mere delay on the other. While confirmation implies a deliberate act, intended to renew and ratify a transaction known to be voidable, acquiescence is some act, not deliberately intended to ratify a former transaction known to be voidable, but recognizing the transaction as existing, and intended, to some extent at least, to carry it into effect, and to obtain or claim the benefits resulting from it. The theory of the doctrine is that a party having thus recognized a contract as existing, and having done something to carry it into effect and to obtain or claim its benefits, although perhaps only to a partial extent, and having thus taken his chances, cannot afterwards be suffered to repudiate the transaction and allege its voidable nature. It follows that mere delay, mere suffering time to elapse without doing anything, is not acquiescence, although it may be, and often is, strong evidence of an acquiescence; and it may be, and often is, a distinct ground for refusing equitable relief, either affirmative or defensive. An acquiescence is thus a recognition of and consent to the contract or other transaction as existing, the requisites to its being effective as a bar are knowledge or notice of the transaction itself, knowledge of the party's own rights, absence of all undue influence or restraint, and consequent freedom of action. A conscious intention to ratify the transaction, however, is not an essential element. When a party with full knowledge, or at least with sufficient notice or means of knowledge, of his rights, and of all the material facts, freely does what amounts to a recognition of the transaction as existing, or acts in a manner inconsistent with its repudiation, or lies by for a considerable time, and knowingly permits the other party to deal with the subject under the belief that the transaction has been recognized, or freely abstains for a considerable length of time from impeaching it, so that the other party is thereby reasonably induced to suppose that it is recognized, there is acquiescence, and the transaction, although originally impeachable, becomes unimpeachable in equity." 2 Pom. Eq. Juris. par. 905.

The question as to whether the plaintiff was defrauded in the transaction which he seeks to set aside could only be determined by an ascertainment of the value of the property conveyed and of that received by him, and in the ascertainment of this only the market value of the property at the time of the transaction, if it had a market value at that time, should be considered. This would be the rule in all cases of this character, but it is specially necessary that this rule should be applied in this case, because the undisputed evidence shows that at the time the transaction occurred the Koppe estate was largely indebted to various persons, and the only fair method of ascertaining the value of plaintiff's equity in said estate would be to find the excess, if any, in the market value of the estate over and above its indebtedness. This rule was generally recognized and enforced upon the trial of the case, and both parties introduced a number of witnesses who testified as to what was the market value of the property of the estate at the time the transaction complained of occurred. The fact that the property had a market value at that time was fully established by the testimony of numerous witnesses introduced by both sides. Such being the state of the evidence upon this issue, the trial court, over the objection of the defendants that testimony as to the intrinsic value of the property was not admissible, permitted the plaintiff's attorney to introduce the following testimony: "Q. Now, what was the intrinsic value in February, 1906, of that Koppe plantation in Burleson county?" To this question defendants thereupon in open court objected, on the ground that any evidence as to the intrinsic value was immaterial and irrelevant to any of the issues in the case, and because plaintiff, having established that there was a market value for said land, was limited to proof of market value, which objections were overruled; and the following testimony was by the court allowed to be introduced: "Q. What was the intrinsic value of it—not with reference to your knowing of any sales. Just state what it was worth according to your idea. A. About $30 per acre." The court erred in overruling the objection to this testimony, and the assignment complaining of such ruling should be sustained.

It was also error to admit testimony as to the value of other Brazos river lands not belonging to the Koppe estate, unless such lands were shown to be of the same character and were in the same immediate neighborhood and the surroundings and conditions of both were substantially identical, and the testimony of the witness Kennedy as to the value of land situated 18 or 20 miles from the lands of the Koppe estate, and not shown to have been substantially identical in class, conditions, and surroundings, should not have been admitted. Upon this issue as to the value of the property, the question to be determined was its value at the very time of the transaction, and the charge requested by the defendants so instructing the jury should have been given.

In support of the allegations of plaintiff's mental weakness, ignorance, and want of business capacity before set out, he introduced a number of witnesses who testified, in substance, that they had known him for a long time, had been with him often, conversed with him on many subjects, and some of them had known of trades made by him, and that from their knowledge of plaintiff thus obtained in their opinion he was weak-minded, wanting in business capacity, and had no appreciation of the value of money or property. All this testimony was objected to by the defendant on the grounds that the witnesses had not stated sufficient facts upon which their opinion was based to authorize them to express an opinion upon plaintiff's mental capacity, and that, even if the facts stated were a sufficient basis of their opinion, such opinion was a conclusion of law and fact and was therefore inadmissible. We do not think these objections to the testimony should be sustained. The plaintiff does not seek to avoid the contract upon the grounds of mental incapacity, and, as we understand the petition, the allegations of mental weakness, ignorance, and want of business capacity are only auxiliary to the allegation that he entirely trusted and relied upon the defendant, Laura Koppe, to look after and protect his interest in his father's estate, and that this trust and confidence, which was largely superinduced by plaintiff's mental unfitness for the conduct of large business transactions such as the management of his father's estate, was abused and taken advantage of by the defendant in the transaction complained of in the petition. We think that in support of these allegations the evidence objected to was admissible. The condition of mind alleged in the petition could best be shown by the opinion of those whose intimacy with plaintiff, with his habits of life, thought, and conversation would enable them to form a correct opinion of the degree of his intelligence and his mental powers, and the opinion of such witnesses is not inadmissible because they fail to state specifically and in detail the acts of the plaintiff and conversations had with him upon which their opinions are based. That a nonexpert witness may give his opinion upon a question of this character when the facts upon which he bases his opinion are stated is well settled. Garrison v. Blanton, 48 Tex. 299; Cockrill v. Cox, 65 Tex. 669; Field v. Field, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 87 S. W. 726; Wells v. Houston, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 69 S. W. 183; Brown v. Mitchell, 88 Tex. 350, 31 S. W. 621, 36 L. R. A. 64; Railway Co. v. Roberts (Tex.) 108 S. W. 808. In the two cases last cited, the distinction is shown between the opinion of a witness involving a conclusion of law and one which is only a fact conclusion, and it is held that it is not competent for a witness to give his opinion when such opinion involves a legal conclusion, such as the capacity to make a will or a contract, or as to what would be a reasonable time for a railroad company to transport stock from the place of shipment to the place of destination, because such question is a mixed question of law and fact, and the very question for the jury to be determined by them under the instruction of the court. The evidence before mentioned does not come under the rule announced in these cases, and is not subject to the objection that the opinion of the witness involves a legal conclusion. There was testimony introduced, however, which is obnoxious to this rule. One or two of the witnesses were permitted to state that the plaintiff did not in their opinion have sufficient mental capacity to fully understand the transaction complained of. This testimony was, we think, inadmissible under rule announced in the cases last cited.

The trial court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury that if plaintiff in making the trade with the defendant was influenced by and acted on the advice of his friend, Mr. Milton Parker, with whom he consulted before concluding the transaction, they should find for the defendants.

If the plaintiff trusted and relied upon the defendant as claimed by him, the fact that he consulted his friend, Mr. Parker, before concluding the trade, and was also influenced by him in accepting defendant's offer, would not defeat his right to recover. He is not required to show that he relied entirely and solely upon the representations of the defendant. If the relations of trust and confidence existed between him and defendant as alleged, and that confidence was abused and plaintiff defrauded, it is no defense to this suit to say that plaintiff consulted others as to the advisability of the trade and was to some extent influenced by their advice. In order to relieve the defendant, the proof must show the relation of trust and confidence did not exist between plaintiff and herself, and that plaintiff did not rely upon her representations. We think the charge given by the court upon this issue was correct and the requested charge was properly refused.

We have not discussed all of the assignments of error because to do so would serve no useful purpose, and would greatly add to the length of this opinion. What we have said disposes of all the material questions presented. If any error is shown which has not been discussed in this opinion, it is immaterial, and not such as is likely to occur upon another trial.

For the error before pointed out, the judgment of the court below is reversed and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

SAXTON et al. v. CORBETT et al.†.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 20, 1909.
On Motion for Rehearing. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 41*)—PRIOR POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—DEFECT IN DEFENDANTS' TITLE.

Where, in trespass to try title, plaintiff showed a superior right to defendants by prior possession, and defendants undertook to defeat plaintiff's prima facie title, or to substantiate their own title by proving a chain of title from the state, plaintiff was entitled to show that one of the links in defendants' chain was insufficient without defeating his own prima facie right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. § 41.*]

2. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 41*)—PATENT TO THIRD PERSON—EVIDENCE.

Mere proof of a patent to a third person to the land in controversy did not show an outstanding title in such patentee sufficient to bar plaintiff's recovery based on possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

3. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 45*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In trespass to try title to 640 acres of land, defendants, other than M. and G., disclaimed as to the west half of the tract, and defended, by pleas of not guilty and limitations, as to the east half. M. disclaimed except as to the west half of the 640 acres to which he claimed title, and G. claimed as tenant of the whole tract for the other defendants. Held, that an instruction that all of the defendants except M. had been in possession under color of title for three years, and that the jury should find that all of the defendants except M. had been in possession of the east half of the tract, was not objectionable as a charge that defendants were entitled to judgment for the 320 acres claimed by them as matter of law, since the charge only applied to the east half of the tract which was not claimed by M.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. § 67; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 216*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN TRIAL COURT—INSTRUCTIONS—THEORY OF CAUSE.

Where, in trespass to try title, an issue was tried on the theory of a reconveyance to the patentee of the whole tract, but there was no request to submit the question whether the reconveyance was one of a part of the land, defendants could not object on appeal that the submission of the issue on the assumption that the reconveyance, if made, governed the entire tract, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 216;* Trial, Cent. Dig. § 630.]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 272*)—ENTRY—TIME.

District court rule 66, prohibiting the entry of judgment over objection within two days of the adjournment of the court for the term, does not apply to judgments entered by the court on verdicts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 512, 513; Dec. Dig. § 272.*]

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 71*)—COLOR OF TITLE—OUTSTANDING TITLE.

Where a patentee of certain land conveyed to a third person before conveying to defendant's prior grantors, and it was not shown that there had been any reconveyance of such outstanding title, defendants had not color of title from the sovereignty of the soil and could not therefore claim under the three-year statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 422; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

7. NEW TRIAL (§ 103*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence which is immaterial and would not affect the result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 215, 216; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

8. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 35*)—PLEADING—EVICTION—DATE.

Where plaintiff alleged that on or about January 1, 1905, he was lawfully seised and in peaceable possession of the land in fee, and that on that date defendants unlawfully entered on the premises and with force and arms ejected plaintiff therefrom and unlawfully withheld; and still withholds, from plaintiff the rightful possession, plaintiff was not confined to the dates of the possession and eviction pleaded, but was entitled to prove that the eviction occurred in 1901.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

9. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 53*)—POSSESSION BY TENANT—ABANDONMENT—NOTICE.

Where plaintiffs had possession of certain land in controversy through tenants, a hiatus during which no one was in possession, between the abandonment of the property by the tenants and defendants' entry, was insufficient to establish plaintiffs' abandonment or a surrender of their possessory rights; neither plaintiffs nor their agent having had notice that the tenants had departed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 266, 267; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

10. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 50*)—POSSESSION BY TENANT—ATTORNMEN TO STRANGER.

Where a landlord is in adverse possession by means of tenants, the tenants' attornment to a third person without the knowledge or consent of the landlord will not destroy the landlord's possession.

11. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 25*)—PRIOR POSSESSION—ACTION—TIME.

It is not essential to a recovery of land by force of a prior possession that the action be brought within a reasonable time after eviction; a delay of five years not being sufficient to bar the right as a matter of law.

12. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 25*)—ACTION—DELAY—EFFECT.

Delay in bringing an action to try title to land based on plaintiff's prior possession operates merely as evidence that plaintiff had in fact abandoned his prior possession without animus revertendi, in cases where the possession was not continued when the adverse entry took place, in which the question of intent to return becomes important; unreasonable delay in itself not being a bar to the action.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Trespass to try title by W. C. Corbett and others against Fannie Burr Saxton and others, in which certain of the defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff Corbett on special issues, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hunt, Myer & Townes and B. F. Louis, for appellants. Rowe, Lewis, Boyd & Norton, T. C. Rowe, and Fisher, Sears & Campbell, for appellees.

JAMES, C. J. An action of trespass to try title, brought by W. C. Corbett against appellants, involving the title to 640 acres of land, the east half of the Malcolm McAuley 1,280-acre survey in Harris county. The defendants, except M. McCollum and John Gant, disclaimed as to the west half of said 640 acres, and defended, by the pleas of not guilty and the statutes of three and five years' limitations, the east half thereof; and they pleaded, also, by a cross-action against plaintiff and their codefendant, McCollum, alleging fee-simple title in themselves to said east half of the 640 acres; also alleging title in themselves by virtue of the three and five years' statute by limitations; and further alleging that plaintiff and McCollum assert some pretended title thereto which constitutes a cloud on plaintiffs' title, which they pray to have removed. McCollum pleaded similarly, except that he claimed only the west half of the 640 acres. John Gant answered, in substance, that he had been in possession of the 640 acres since December 30, 1904, not claiming any interest therein for himself, but as tenant of the other defendants. Plaintiff pleaded not guilty to the said cross-action. The court rendered judgment for plaintiff Corbett upon a verdict deciding special issues.

Conclusions of Fact.

The evidence developed the following facts: The land (1,280 acres) was patented to Malcolm McAuley. Plaintiff Corbett did not connect himself with this title; but the evidence showed such prior possession of the land by him and invasion of this possession by defendants as in our opinion would warrant a recovery by him, in the absence of any title in the defendants. Defendants showed a chain of title in themselves from and under Malcolm McAuley through sundry mesne conveyances. In this chain of title a vital question of fact arose whether or not the deed from McAuley to B. A. Noland and H. G. Pannell dated July 4, 1842, passed any title, upon the following testimony: There was testimony to show that prior to said conveyance McAuley had conveyed the east half of the survey to one Wm. Young, and there was testimony by circumstances which in our opinion was sufficient to make it an issue of fact whether or not the title so conveyed to Young was reacquired by McAuley, so that we conclude that there was evidence which supports the finding by the jury that such title was not resumed or reacquired by him. Upon the issue of title in defendants by limitations, the jury, by the court's direction, found for the defendants, except McCollum, on title by the three years' statute as to the east half of the 640 acres. This finding, we may here note, was not given any effect, evidently upon the theory that it was nullified by the finding that McAuley had already conveyed this land, when he made the deed to Noland and Pannell. Other facts will be stated where necessary in the course of the opinion, which follows.

Conclusions of Law.

The first, second, and third assignments of error are, in substance, that the circumstantial evidence upon the issue of a reconveyance or surrender of this land by Young to McAuley was such as compelled the conclusion that it was in fact so reconveyed or relinquished. These assignments are disposed of by the conclusions of fact we have expressed on this subject.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth assignments of error present the question embodied in this proposition: Where plaintiff relies solely on prior possession, and proves a conveyance by the patentee to that of the remote grantor of defendants, but fails to connect himself with it for the purpose of showing a superior outstanding title, he thereby refutes or abandons his presumption of title by prior possession. Our views are against the proposition. Without trying to reconcile or explain what has been written in the various opinions of our courts on this subject, we shall state what our view is.

The plaintiff in this case showed a superior right to defendants to this land, by reason of his prior possession. The fact of his prior possession, and the fact that it had not been abandoned when defendants entered, has been determined by a verdict, on evidence we regard as sufficient. Now defendants say that this does not entitle him to a recovery by superior right, because the patent to McAuley and the conveyance by McAuley to Young, which plaintiff himself proved, would establish that the title to the land is outstanding and not vested in plaintiff, and therefore the presumption of title which goes with his prior possession, is repelled. It has been expressly held that the mere proof of a patent to a third person does not have this effect. As stated in House v. Reavis, 89 Tex. 626, 35 S. W. 1003: "The presumption which is raised in favor of the title of the possessor of land necessarily includes the presumption that the state has parted with the title to the land to some one, and that the possessor has acquired that title; otherwise the presumption of title in fee could not exist. It therefore follows as a necessary and logical conclusion that to prove that such title had passed out of the state establishes no fact which is not included in the presumption of title in the plaintiff; that is, that some person had acquired title from the state prior to that of the plaintiffs." We are of opinion that no reason is apparent why the rule should be otherwise when it is shown that the patentee in turn conveyed it to some third person. If the presumptions are not disturbed by proof of a patent to some one not appearing to be connected with the parties to the litigation, there is no sound reason for holding that they are disturbed when the patented title is shown to have passed one or more steps further, but not connecting with the parties. We think also that it is immaterial by whom such proof is introduced. This does not change its effect. Especially do these principles seem to be applicable in this case. Defendants undertook to defeat plaintiffs' prima facie title from prior possession or to substantiate their own title set up by their cross-petition, by proving a chain of title, if admitted, as it was, had the effect of defeating plaintiff. Plaintiff naturally and with perfect right was entitled to show, if he could, that one of the links in this chain was not effective to pass title, which he did successfully, thereby defeating the claim of title in defendants, both documentary and by limitations. To hold that, by making such necessary proof to negative the claims of title in his adversary, he defeated his own prima facie right based on the independent fact of their prior possession, would be unreasonable, if not preposterous. Plaintiff had no occasion in this purpose to go any further than to show the conveyance by McAuley to Young. Neither plaintiff nor defendant offered any proof that went to show that plaintiff was not in privity with said title.

The eighth assignment asserts that the following instruction, in view of another instruction to find for the defendants except McCollum, misled the jury into assuming that the rights of defendants had been disposed of in their favor, and that the instruction, which is as follows, applied only to McCollum, who had shown no record title: "You are further instructed, as a matter of law, that all of the defendants except McCollum had been in possession of the property under what the law terms color of title for three years next before the beginning of this suit, and you will say: 'We, the jury, find under instruction of the court that all the defendants except McCollum had been in possession by tenant of the east half of the east half of the McAuley survey under color of title for three years next before this suit was brought.'" It is urged that the jury could not have arrived at any other conclusion than that said defendants were to have a judgment for their 320 acres, and that the above special issue was intended to apply only to the 320 acres claimed by McCollum. We see no reasonable basis for this contention. The charge expressly applied only to the east half of the east half of the survey, which was not claimed by McCollum, and, unless we credit the jury with want of ordinary intelligence, they could not have been misled.

The ninth assignment complains of the following submission to the jury: "Do you or do you not find as a fact established from all the facts and circumstances in evidence that William Young, at some later date, reconveyed said land to Malcolm McAuley?" Inasmuch as the evidence showed that Young had paid McAuley half of the purchase price and gave notes for one-half, and McAuley afterwards conveyed one-half (the east half of the 640 acres) to Noland and Pannell, and died without having conveyed the other one-half, appellants say the jury might have found that Young had reconveyed only one-half of the land, and kept the other half, and that therefore the submission, which contemplated that the jury should find a reconveyance of all or nothing, was error. It appears that the theory upon which the issue was tried was that the reconveyance, if any, affected the whole, else some indication of a trial on the opposite theory would have appeared upon the record. Nothing so appears, not even a request to submit a question in accordance with this assignment.

The tenth assignment presents the following proposition: "Where a cause is taken under advisement by the court more than three days before the end of the term, the court is not authorized under rule 86 to enter judgment therein, over objection of a party to the suit before judgment, within two days of its adjournment, and such a judgment is reversible error, whether the party objecting is injured thereby or not." These facts appear from the bill of exceptions: The verdict was rendered on May 9, 1908, and the court took time to deliberate on what judgment to evolve therefrom. Arguments on this subject were had at various times until June 10th, when the judge announced that he had decided to enter judgment in favor of defendants (except McCollum) for the 320 acres claimed by them, but that if he changed his views he would notify defendants' counsel. The term ended on June 13th by operation of law. The judge on the morning of the 12th announced to counsel for plaintiff his decision against said defendants, but the judge was in doubt whether or not he also at same time announced same to said defendants' counsel, but he certifies with positiveness that he had reached and made the final conclusion prior to any motion by defendants' counsel to not enter any judgment, thereby invoking said rule. Without regard to the question of appellants' diligence in making the motion or objection, we hold that the rule was not intended to apply to judgments entered by the court upon verdicts.

The eleventh is that the court erred in not rendering judgment upon that portion of their cross-action which relied on adverse, peaceable, and continuous possession of the 320 acres under title and color of title from the sovereignty for three years. We are of opinion, as already stated, that if said defendants' remote grantor, McAuley, had conveyed the land prior to the conveyance from him that appears in defendants' chain of title, the statute of three years was not available. In view of the finding that such prior conveyance of the land was in fact made, the court properly ignored that feature of the case.

The twelfth assignment contends that said defendants should have had a new trial because D. F. Rowe testified, on the issue of abandonment of prior possession on which plaintiff relied, that he had a serious spell of sickness in the fall of 1900 and was away at Hot Springs until after the 1st day of January, and that he was sick at home a month before he left, and defendants did not discover until after the trial certain record evidence which showed conclusively that the testimony was not true. Assuming that defendants were in a position to avail themselves of this as newly discovered evidence in reference to a new trial, still we are of opinion that no error was committed in refusing a new trial for the reason that it was immaterial in view of the clear evidence that the tenants did not leave the premises until later in January. As in appellees' brief, proof that Mr. Rowe was actually in Houston during the fall of 1900 could not possibly have affected the question of plaintiffs' abandonment of the premises, and that suit was brought in a reasonable time if a new trial had been granted, because of the fact that plaintiffs were actually in possession by tenants during that time.

The thirteenth assignment we overrule because we conclude that the evidence was such as made it a proper issue for the jury whether or not the prior possession had been in fact abandoned by plaintiff when defendants entered upon it through their tenant Mabry. Furthermore, while the motion for new trial asked that the particular finding be set aside, it was not for the reasons specified in this assignment.

Appellants' proposition under the fourteenth and fifteenth assignments is as follows: "Where plaintiff relies upon title by presumption from prior possession alone, the pleading of the date of such possession and eviction being in effect the pleading of plaintiff's title specially, he should be held to prove the same at the time alleged in his petition, and proof of any other date will constitute a variance." Plaintiff alleged: That upon or about the 1st day of January, 1905, he was lawfully seised and in peaceable possession of the land holding the same in fee simple; that on or about said last-mentioned date the defendants unlawfully entered upon said premises and with force and arms ejected plaintiff therefrom and unlawfully withheld, and still withhold, from plaintiff the rightful possession thereof. In this case the eviction was proved to have occurred in 1901. We think plaintiff was not confined to the dates of the possession and eviction as stated in the petition. Travis v. Hall, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 95, 65 S. W. 1077.

The foregoing portion of this opinion deals with the assignment of error made by the defendants except McCollum. We now direct our attention to his brief.

What has been said disposes of McCollum's first, second, fourth, eighth, and ninth assignments.

His third, fifth, sixth, and seventh assignments assert these propositions: "(1) In order for the plaintiff to recover upon the presumption of title from prior possession, it is essential that such possession shall extend to the time when adverse possession is taken by the defendant, and be not abandoned, and if there is any lapse of time between the taking of possession by the adverse parties and the possession of the parties relying thereon for recovery, and such lapse is not accounted for, plaintiff cannot recover. (2) In a case where the question to be determined is whether or not the prior possession claimed by the plaintiff has been abandoned, it is error for the court to require as a prerequisite to such abandonment that the lessor should have notice or knowledge that his tenant had left the land. (3) Where one relies upon prior possession as presumptive evidence of title, and such prior possession has been lost, in order for a party to recover upon the strength of such prior possession, an action must be brought within a reasonable time after losing such possession to regain it. In this case the uncontradicted evidence showing that no action was brought to recover possession prior to the filing of the suit for title, and a period of nearly five years having elapsed from the time such possession was lost until such suit was filed, and such delay not being accounted for in any way, the plaintiff will be deemed to have abandoned his claim to such possession."

The first and second of the above propositions relate to the first question propounded to the jury, which was as follows: "Do you, or do you not, find as a fact established by the evidence that at the time Mabry went into possession of the land in controversy the plaintiff, with knowledge or notice that his tenant had left the place, had abandoned the prior possession of said property? You will answer this question by saying, if you find that the prior possession of said place had been abandoned, 'We find that plaintiff had abandoned his possession when Mabry took possession'; but if you find that it had not been abandoned as above explained, you will say, 'We find that plaintiff had not abandoned his possession when Mabry went into possession.'" It appears from testimony that plaintiff had possession in 1898 by tenant, and this occupancy by the tenant until he died and by members of his family continued until near March 1, 1901, when they, without notifying anybody, left the place, but left some household effects in the house, and that Mabry went into possession for the defendants in the latter part of the same month. By this time plaintiff did not become informed of the vacancy or of this entry. There was evidence that plaintiff claimed the property and had no intention of abandoning the possession. The lapse of time between the going out of plaintiffs' tenant and the entry by defendants was brief, and the testimony is in accord with the idea that such going out was unknown and unexpected by plaintiff, and that he and his agent were not aware but that his tenants were still there, when defendants entered and took possession. It seems to us that notice to plaintiff was essential to the question of his abandonment, whether the vacancy was for the period mentioned, or for a somewhat longer period, as might have been found from some of the testimony. Of course, his intention to abandon might have concurred in point of time with the abandonment by his tenant, or the tenant's abandonment might have become his at some intermediate time; but it is difficult to see how this could have been the case, unless he knew of the tenant's act. Jackson v. Denn, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 200. In Cobb v. Robertson, 99 Tex. 138, 86 S. W. 748, 87 S. W. 1148, 122 Am. St. Rep. 609, the same principle is stated: "Had the tenants in this case, without knowledge or consent of the landlord, actually attorned to plaintiffs, this, under the law, would not have destroyed the landlord's possession."

The third of the above propositions is also overruled. Appellants rely on a declaration in the opinion in Burroughs v. Falmer (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. 846, which they quote: "It is true that possession of land under a claim of right is prima facie evidence of title in the possessor. This rule of evidence is usually applied in cases where the possessor is ousted and seeks, within a reasonable time, to recover the possession of which he has been deprived." Also quoting from Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 261, 8 Sup. Ct. 461, 31 L. Ed. 430: "It therefore appears that prior possession is sufficient to entitle a party to recover in an action of ejectment only against a mere intruder or wrongdoer, or a person subsequently entering without right. Another qualification of the rule is that the action to regain the prior possession must be brought within a reasonable time after it has been lost. If there had been delay in bringing the suit, the animus revertendi must be shown and the delay satisfactorily accounted for, or the prior possessor will be deemed to have abandoned his claim to the possession." We are not aware of any decision in this state which holds authoritatively that the right to recover by force of a prior possession does not exist unless action is brought in a reasonable time after the eviction. It would seem that, if such possession presumes title as against one having no title, it ought to be available so long as title has not been adversely acquired by limitations. However, what is or is not a reasonable time is ordinarily a question of fact, and a delay of five years in bringing the action is not a bar as a matter of law. The quotation from Sabariego v. Maverick is followed by this: "Thus in Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 171, it was held that where there was a prior possession of 11 years, and then an entry by the defendants under a title adverse to such possessory title, the omission to bring a suit for 13 years with knowledge of the adverse entry and continuance of possession under it, would authorize a jury to find an abandonment of claim by the prior possessor." Again, further on in the same opinion, and as a conclusion, the Supreme Court states: "It follows that in cases where the proof on the part of the plaintiff does not show a possession continuous until actual possession by the defendant, or those under whom he claims, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that his prior possession had not been abandoned."

Thus it would appear that delay in bringing an action operates merely as evidence that a plaintiff had in fact abandoned his prior possession without the animus revertendi, in cases where his possession was not continued when the adverse entry took place, in which cases the question of animus revertendi becomes important. We do not believe it was ever intended that the fact of unreasonable delay should of itself be a bar to the action, but that it is a circumstance for the jury to consider on said question. We overrule the said assignments.

The judgment is affirmed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

The case of Bates v. Bacon, 66 Tex. 348, 1 S. W. 256, is discussed in House v. Reavis, 89 Tex. 626, 35 S. W. 1063, and explained thus: "In Bates v. Bacon the plaintiff showed by his evidence that he had no title, and that his possession was under a title that was absolutely void, and therefore no presumption of title could arise out of his possession under a void title." We do not consider the case of Mann v. Hossack (Tex. Civ.

App.) 96 S. W. 709, as in conflict with our opinion.

The motion, with increased vigor, contends that the testimony showed conclusively that the land was in some manner reconveyed by Young to McAuley. It may be that circumstances might so unerringly point to such a conclusion that no other result would be sustained. There were no acts disclosed on the part of Young which might be taken to mean a disclaimer. There was no possession of the land until in recent years. There was nothing to show that Young ever knew of the resumption of ownership by McAuley. We do not question that there was evidence that would have warranted the jury in finding that Young reconveyed to McAuley as the most reasonable and probable result of the circumstances and difficulties surrounding the matter; but that this result is what the law will declare from them we clearly cannot hold, in view of what is said by the Supreme Court in Herndon v. Vick, 89 Tex. on page 475, 35 S. W. 141, in reference to a combination of circumstances much stronger in favor of the presumption than what we have in this case.

An effort is made in this motion for rehearing to introduce an issue not relied on nor asked to be submitted in the trial court and not assigned as error in this court. The point sought to be made is that the testimony shows, as a matter of law, that appellants, or those under whom they hold from McAuley, are entitled to a judgment for the land as innocent purchasers for value. This issue, if it had been relied on, was dependent for its solution upon circumstances, and whatever presumption may have attached to the circumstances was a presumption of fact, to be considered and passed on by the jury. It could not, as a matter of law, be held that Noland & Pannell and subsequent assignees were innocent purchasers. The deed to Noland & Pannell was executed in 1842 after the act of 1840 (Hartley's Dig. arts. 2765, 2767), which was construed by the Supreme Court in Kimball v. Houston Oil Co., 100 Tex. 336, 99 S. W. 852, as at that time imposing the burden of proof of such an issue on appellants. The issue, however, was not relied on by appellants in the trial court, and it is too late to seek to rely on it here.

A motion is made for a writ of certiorari to require the clerk of the district court to send up the originals or copies of certain papers on file there, which papers are described in a general way, but not copied, in the statement of facts. The papers have not been ordered by the district judge to be sent here with the record, and we therefore doubt our power to require them sent up, and doubt our right under the circumstances to consider anything on this appeal except the statement of facts as made up and approved by the judge; but, in any event, we should deny the certiorari for the reason that its purpose is in aid of the issue of innocent purchaser, which, as before stated, is a matter not properly before us.

The motion for rehearing, the motion to certify a question to the Supreme Court, and the motion for certiorari are overruled.

SMITH BROS. v. FLANDERS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 935*)—TRIAL COURT—DENYING MOTION TO VACATE JUDGMENT.

Where a record on appeal does not contain the testimony upon which the trial court overruled a motion to vacate the judgment, made upon the ground that the case was tried on appeal from justice's court without notice that an appeal had been perfected and in absence of defendants, it cannot be said by the Supreme Court that there was error in overruling the motion.

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 370*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—DEFENSES—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

A failure of the consideration for drafts as between the drawer and drawee would not affect the right of a bona fide purchaser of the drafts for value before maturity, without notice thereof, to recover thereon against the drawee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 963; Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

Appeal from District Court, Shelby County; James I. Perkins, Judge.

Action by Lewis Flanders against Smith Bros. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hugh B. Short, for appellants. Bryarley, Carter & Walker, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit instituted by appellee in the justice's court on five drafts drawn by the American Standard Jewelry Company of Detroit, Mich., on appellants, and by them accepted; each of the drafts being for $30. They were drawn on June 16, 1905, and were due, respectively, in 3, 5, 7, 9, and 10 months after date. In the justice's court judgment was rendered in favor of appellants, and the cause was appealed to the district court, where judgment was rendered in favor of appellee for $210 and all costs of suit. Appellants pleaded failure of consideration, but did not attempt to establish the plea by the evidence, and the uncontroverted evidence showed that the drafts were accepted by appellants, and were purchased for value by appellee, in due course of business, before their maturity.

The only assignment of error is as follows: "First. The trial court erred in failing to sustain the defendants' motion to set aside the judgment rendered against them and to grant them a new trial upon the grounds that said case was tried in the district court after having been tried in the justice court, wherein a judgment was rendered for appellants for costs, without appellants having been notified that any appeal had been perfected from said judgment by appellee, and in the absence of appellants or any one authorized to represent them, and without any knowledge upon the part of appellants the said appeal had been perfected, when said motion and the record shows that appellants have a good ground of defense to appellee's demand, and upon the trial in the justice court before a jury sustained said defense by testimony, after having pleaded a good defense to said demand—that is to say, fraud and failure of consideration—whereby the pretended contract is vitiated, and the statement of facts shows that no testimony whatever was introduced in support of either of these pleas, but that the only testimony was that of the plaintiff in his behalf." Appellants had in some way found out that the cause had been appealed to the district court, whether they were given formal notice or not, for the judgment recites that they appeared and announced ready for trial, and the statement of facts filed in this court was agreed to by their attorneys. It is true that one of the appellants swore to a motion to set aside the judgment, in which it was recited that their senior counsel, C. B. Short, died pending the appeal to the district court, and that Hugh B. Short had represented them without authority, but the court that heard the matter was satisfied that there was no merit in the motion; and, in the absence of the testimony on the subject, it cannot be held that there was error in overruling the motion.

The evidence, showing that appellee was a purchaser, in good faith, without notice and for value, of the acceptances before maturity, cannot be affected by a failure of consideration as between the drawer of the bills and the acceptors.

The judgment is affirmed.

BELL v. NOE.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Sept. Term, 1909.)

COURTS (§ 246*)—INTERMEDIATE COURTS—JURISDICTION—HOMESTEAD.

Under Acts 1907, p. 233, c. 82, § 7, providing that the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals shall extend to all cases, except where the amount exceeds $1,000 and ejectment suits, etc., the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of an appeal in an action asserting rights in a homestead, which is not an action of ejectment, since a homestead cannot exceed $1,000 in value.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Hamblen County; Hugh G. Kyle, Chancellor.

Action by Mrs. Catherine Bell against J. C. Noe to establish certain homestead rights in certain lands. On appeal to the Supreme Court, the case is transferred to the Civil Appeals, as being without the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Park & Park, for complainant. McCanless & Tate, for defendant.

NEIL, J. The bill in this case, as finally amended, seeks only to assert complainant's right to a homestead in certain land described. This estate cannot exceed $1,000 in value. The appellate jurisdiction is therefore exclusively in the Court of Civil Appeals. Acts 1907, p. 233, c. 82, § 7. This is not an ejectment suit.

An order will be entered directing the transfer of the cause.

STATE ex rel. DAVIS v. EVANS.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Sept. Term, 1909.)

1. QUO WARRANTO (§ 57*)—OFFICE—MATTERS CONSIDERED.

In a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto to test the right of defendant to hold over the office of county superintendent of public schools, in which relator claimed that he was duly elected to the office, but defendant claimed that relator did not have the certificate of the board of education required by Acts 1895, p. 70, c. 54, which rendered him ineligible, the court could not consider relator's contention that his failure to have a certificate was due to a mistake in an examination question presented to him, which, if it had been correctly stated, he would have answered correctly, and received a certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 62*)—DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER—INELIGIBILITY OF OFFICERS—BOARD OF EDUCATION.

School Law (Acts 1873, p. 41, c. 25) § 8, creates the office of county superintendent of public schools, and provides that he shall be a person of literary and scientific attainments. Acts 1895, p. 70, c. 54, amendatory thereof, prescribes the same qualification, and also provides that applicants for the office shall before election be examined by the board of education and receive a certificate of qualification as a condition to eligibility. Held, that the amendatory act was not unconstitutional, as delegating legislative power to the board, in that the act stated the qualifications so generally that the board must practically make the qualifications, where by the amended act the subjects to be taught in the public schools were laid down, and section 8 necessarily refers thereto.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 46*)—SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS—QUALIFICATIONS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Such amendatory act is mandatory, and not directory, as shown by the clear intention of the Legislature, especially since the provision of the original act gave the county court power to remove the superintendent for inefficiency.

superintendent of public schools, submits to the determination of the court his eligibility to the office to which he had been elected, he cannot thereafter contend that, because he had been elected and taken oath of office, etc., defendant should test his right to office by some independent proceeding.

5. QUO WARRANTO (§ 55*)—EVIDENCE—QUALIFICATION OF CLAIMANT OF OFFICE.

In quo warranto to test defendant's right to hold over the office of superintendent of public schools, relator cannot contend that defendant was a usurper, in that he did not take an oath to support the Constitution, where it does not affirmatively appear that such oath was not taken.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Claiborne County; T. A. R. Nelson, Chancellor.

Proceedings in the nature of quo warranto by the State of Tennessee, on relation of John P. Davis, against Frank Evans. From a decree for defendant, relator appeals. Affirmed.

Jourolmon, Welcker & Smith, for appellant. Carr & Jones, for appellee.

NEIL, J. This is a proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto, to test the right of the defendant to hold the office of county superintendent of public schools for Claiborne county, holding over at the expiration of his regular term, which ended on the first Monday in January, 1909. The relator charges that on the day last mentioned he was regularly elected by the county court, the constituent body, to the office, by a vote of 12 in his favor to 7 in favor of the defendant, only 19 justices being present and voting. He alleges that he was declared duly elected; that he gave the bond required by law, and took the oath of office, but the defendant refused to turn over to him the books and papers appertaining thereto, alleging, as ground for such action on his part, that the relator was not eligible to the office, and therefore that his election was void. The point of ineligibility in controversy, as appears from the bill, is that the relator was not in possession of the certificate from the State Board of Education, required by chapter 54, p. 70, Acts 1895. It is alleged that the relator really possessed the qualifications required by the act, and that he was entitled to the certificate which it is the business of the board to issue, and that his failure to receive it arose out of a mistake on the part of the board in stating one of the questions submitted for his examination. It is alleged that the question—one in mathematics—was improperly stated by the board, and if properly stated he could, and would, have given a correct answer, and would then have received the certificate. These are matters, of course, with which we can have no concern in the present proceeding. Aside from all this, however, it is insisted that the act in question is unconstitutional, and for that reason, if for no other, the relator was duly elected, and was entitled to the office. The purpose of the bill is to question the right of the defendant to hold over, the charge being that he is a usurper of the office in his attempt to hold over, and, incidentally thereto, it is alleged that the relator is the person entitled to administer the duties of the office, because of his said election.

There is no controversy in the record that the relator was elected in the manner above stated, and that, if he was eligible to the office, the defendant is a usurper, and should be restrained from further interference.

The case turns upon the constitutionality of the act above referred to. This act purports to amend section 8 of the general school law, which is chapter 25, p. 41, of the Acts of 1873.

Section 8, as it appears in the original act, reads as follows:

"Sec. 8. Be it further enacted, there shall be a county superintendent for each county, who shall be elected by the county court at its April or July term, 1873, and after 1874 he shall be elected biennially in January, and no member of the county court shall be eligible to said office. He shall be a person of literary and scientific attainments, and, when practicable, of skill and experience in the art of teaching, shall hold his office for two years, and shall receive such pay for his services as may be allowed him by the county court, to be paid upon the order of the chairman or judge of the county court by the county trustee. He shall be subject to removal from office for misbehavior or inefficiency at any time, by the county court: Provided, that the causes for such removal shall be communicated to him in writing."

We have written in italics the part of this section which was amended by chapter 54 of the Acts of 1895. In this act the language above italicized is stricken out and the following substituted:

"Said county superintendent shall be a person of literary and scientific attainments, and of skill in the theory and practice of teaching: Provided, that preceding each biennial election, or any election to fill a vacancy for county superintendent of schools, each applicant shall file with the chairman of the county court a certificate of qualification given by the State Board of Education: Provided, that on the first Monday in October preceding each biennial election for county superintendent of schools, each applicant for said office shall undergo a public examination at the county seat of the county in which he or she is an applicant, by and before a commission of three residents of the county, said commission to be previously appointed by the chairman of the county court,

and to be citizens who, by education and experience, are most eminently qualified to hold said examination, the same to be held under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the State Board of Education: Provided, that if qualified as attested by said examination, said applicant shall receive a certificate of qualification by the State Board of Education."

It is insisted in behalf of relator that this amendment devolves legislative power upon the State Board of Education, because it is a legislative function to prescribe the qualifications of public officers. It is argued that the language of the Legislature in stating the qualifications required, that he "shall be a person of literary and scientific attainments, and of skill in the theory and practice of teaching," is so general as to leave it practically within the power of the State Board to declare the qualifications necessary for the office, since they can exact a very high grade of attainments, or may be content with a very low grade, and they may indicate the different subjects upon which proficiency may be required within the wide range covered by the words "literary and scientific attainments."

There is plausibility in the objection, but no real force. The act of 1873, which is amended, laid down, in section 31, the subjects to be taught in the public schools. It was with reference to these, of course, that the provisions of section 8 were enacted. It is noted that section 8, as originally written, prescribed, in substance, the same general qualifications. They meant, of course, a reasonable degree of attainment in literature and science, in respect of the subjects that were to be taught, to the end that the county superintendents might be able to exercise proper judgment in the selection of teachers and in the oversight of their work. Before section 8 was amended, the duty was devolved upon the county court of judging the qualifications of the county superintendent to be elected. Under the amendment means were provided, through boards composed of skilled persons, of ascertaining whether a candidate could come within the description, or list of qualifications, indicated by the act. There was in this no delegation of legislative power, but simply the provision of administrative agencies for the purpose of aiding in the execution of the purpose of the Legislature. The Legislature itself prescribed the necessary qualifications, and the boards created and referred to simply determined whether given persons came within those requirements, or were possessed of those qualifications. It was impracticable for the Legislature itself to lay down, with precision, the degree of efficiency in literature and science that the county superintendents should possess. In the nature of things, this must be left somewhat indeterminate, and it was highly proper that the ascertainment of the exact degree of learning necessary to carry carry out the purpose of the act should be left for the action of competent boards. See, on the general principle, the following authorities: Leeper v. State, 103 Tenn. 500, 523, 526, 53 S. Saratoga, etc., Gas Co.*, 191 N. Y. 123, 83 N. E. 693, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713, 718, et seq. The case of Wright v. Cunningham, 115 Tenn. 445, 91 S. W. 293, cited by complainant's counsel, is not at all in conflict with the principle we have invoked as the basis of the present decision.

We need not pursue the subject. We are of the opinion that the amendment is clearly constitutional.

It is insisted that the terms of the amendment are not mandatory, but only directory. We think this is a mistaken view. It was the clear purpose of the Legislature to make eligible for election only such persons as could comply with the conditions indicated. This general purpose is emphasized by the provisions of the original section giving the county court power to remove the county superintendent for inefficiency.

There are some points of alleged unconstitutionality insisted upon other than the one above referred to, but we do not think they deserve special consideration in this opinion. Suffice it to say that we have examined them, and find no merit in them.

It is insisted that since the relator was elected by the county court, and had executed bond, and had taken the oath, he should be permitted to take and administer the office, and the burden of establishing his ineligibility should be cast upon the defendant, and be presented by him in some independent litigation. Whatever force might be in this, as an original suggestion, it cannot be considered here, because the relator himself submitted in his bill, to the determination of the court, the question of eligibility.

It is insisted that, at all events, the defendant should be declared a usurper because, when he was inducted into office, in 1907, he did not take the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and of the state of Tennessee, but that he took only the oath of office. We do not think there is any sufficient allegation in the bill upon this subject (Gibson's Suits in Chancery, § 455), and, if there was, it does not affirmatively appear that he did not take the oath referred to, and for these reasons the point suggested is not well taken (State v. Allen [Tenn. Ch. App.] 57 S. W. 189; Staggs v. State, 3 Humph. 372). In saying this, we are not to be understood as holding that the inadvertent omission to take the oath referred to would result in a deprivation ipso facto of the defendant's official character.

On the grounds stated, we are of the opinion that the decree of the chancellor, in favor of the defendant, must be sustained.

BROWN v. CRYSTAL ICE CO.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Sept. Term, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 3*)—COMPELLING INSPECTION OF CORPORATE BOOKS—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY.

The remedy of a stockholder, denied permission to inspect the corporate books, is by mandamus, though a mandatory injunction may be made effectual, as mandamus is a more direct remedy, and can be conditioned by such restrictions as the court may deem necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 8, 9, 34; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 3*)—COMPELLING INSPECTION OF CORPORATE BOOKS—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY.

The remedy by mandatory injunction to compel a corporation to permit a stockholder to inspect the corporate books is not concurrent with the remedy by mandamus, notwithstanding the act of 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 119, c. 97), giving the chancery court jurisdiction of all cases at law, except actions for unliquidated damages to persons, property, or character, as the remedy by mandamus is in the nature of a prerogative writ, to be granted only in the high discretion of the court, and to be applied to those cases as to which no other remedy exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 8, 9, 34; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 146*)—PETITION IN NAME OF STATE—AMENDMENTS.

Where, in mandamus, objection is made on the ground that the name of the state is not used, the court may, on application, allow an amendment inserting the name of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 287; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

Appeal from Chancery Court, Hamilton County; T. M. McConnell, Chancellor.

Suit by Bowdre Brown against the Crystal Ice Company. There was a decree of the Court of Civil Appeals, reversing a decree of the chancellor, dismissing the bill, and remanding the cause for answer, and defendant brings certiorari. Judgment of the chancellor, dismissing the bill, affirmed, and the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals reversed.

See 113 S. W. 360.

R. B. Cooke, for plaintiff. Pritchard & Sizer, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The bill in this case was filed by a stockholder of the defendant corporation to obtain an inspection of the books. After alleging his character of stockholder, the complainant avers the president assured him that the dividend for the current year would be "eight times the amount of the fixed charges," while in fact only a 5 per cent. dividend was declared; that, being greatly desirous of finding the cause of the disparity, he applied to the officers of the corporation for leave to inspect the books; that this was granted him, in a gingerly way, but, when he took from his pocket a small memorandum book and attempted to make some memoranda, the corporation books were taken from him, and he was not permitted to proceed further. The bill thereupon closed with the following prayer: "Let a mandatory injunction be served on the defendant, its officers and agents, requiring them to allow complainant to examine the books of said company, and to make such notations as he chooses to make thereof. Let the defendant, its officers and employees, be enjoined from interfering with complainant in his examination of said books, and on the hearing let said injunction be made perpetual. Grant general relief."

The defendant demurred to the bill on the ground that complainant's remedy for the case stated therein was a petition for mandamus, and that the court had no jurisdiction to grant the injunctive relief sought.

The demurrer was sustained by the chancellor; but, on appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals, the decree of the chancellor was reversed, and the cause remanded for answer and further proceedings. The case was then brought to this court by certiorari.

We are of the opinion that the Court of Civil Appeals was in error. By the great weight of authority the relief sought must be obtained through mandamus proceedings. State ex rel. v. Williams, 110 Tenn. 549, 75 S. W. 948, 64 L. R. A. 418; Clark on Corporations, § 135; Clark & Marshall on Corporations, pp. 1653-1655; High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies, § 308; Cook on Corporations, §§ 513, 514; Thompson on Corp. § 4431; note to Weihermayer v. Bitner, 45 L. R. A., at page 457, and cases cited; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) p. 955; 26 Cyc. 349.

It is insisted that the remedy sought in the bill is concurrent with the remedy by mandamus; that since the act of 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 119, c. 97), giving the chancery court jurisdiction of all cases at law, except actions for unliquidated damages to persons, property, or character, no distinction should be made, but that any remedy under the control of the chancery court, proper to effectuate the purpose, may be used; and that a mandatory injunction is specially adapted to the purpose. We do not think that this suggestion is a sound one. The remedy by mandamus is a peculiar one, and, although the court of chancery has been given concurrent jurisdiction with the court of law, yet the remedy by mandamus has remained substantially the same in both courts as to the practice and the class of cases to which it applies. It is true that in a court of law the complaining party comes in by petition, while in the court of chancery this pleading is called a bill, yet in substance and in language they are the same. Likewise, in the court of chancery, as well as at law, an alternative writ issues and a return is made as at law, and the subsequent proceedings are about the same. Likewise, in its inherent nature, this remedy has preserved, in the court of chancery, the same marks it had in the court of law. It is regarded in both courts as in the nature of a prerogative writ, to be granted only in the high discretion of the court, and to be applied only to those cases as to which no other remedy exists.

We have in this state quite a large number of cases upon the subject, showing a variety of applications. It is frequently used to effectuate the jurisdiction of this court over inferior courts. The cases upon this subject are: State v. Cooper, 107 Tenn. 202, 64 S. W. 50; State v. Sneed, 105 Tenn. 711, 58 S. W. 1070; Vanvaby v. Staton, 88 Tenn. 334, 12 S. W. 786; State v. Greer, 3 Baxt. 78; Galloway v. Fleing, 2 Tenn. Cas. 615; State v. Elmore, 6 Cold. 528.

Treasurer of East Tennessee*, Peck, 425; King v. Hampton, 3 Hayw. 50, 60; Kennedy v. Woolfolk, 1 Overt. 453.

In none of these cases is there an intimation of any similarity between this remedy and that by injunction, or that they are at all interchangeable. In two of them the injunction was united with the mandamus to hold matters in statu quo until the mandamus could be made operative. Iron Companies v. Pace, supra, and Bates v. Taylor, 87 Tenn. 319, 11 S. W. 266, 3 L. R. A. 316. And such practice is no doubt useful and proper in some cases. It is true that the mandatory injunction might be made effectual in securing for a stockholder an examination of the books, by forbidding the officers and agents of the corporation from interfering with him in such examination; but the mandamus is a much more direct remedy, and can be conditioned by such restrictions as the court may deem necessary or proper to prevent injury to the books or undue inconvenience to the officers and agents of the corporation in the discharge of their duties (State ex rel

v. Williams, supra), and we deem it best to adhere to the recognized practice.

It is insisted that in Hawkins v. Kercheval, 78 Tenn. 535, the remedy administered was a mandatory injunction. This is a mistaken view. The court held in that case that the relief sought under the original bill by injunction could not be granted. The relief that was granted was under the amended bill, which the court construed to be an application for the writ of mandamus.

A question has been made as to whether it is necessary to present the bill in the name of the state. It was so held in Whitesides v. Stuart, 91 Tenn. 710, 20 S. W. 245. This seems the more logical rule, since the writ is in the nature of a prerogative writ (State ex rel. Weinberg v. Pacific Brewing & Malting Co., 21 Wash. 451, 58 Pac. 584, 47 L. R. A. 208-212, and authorities cited); but in most of our cases, prior to Whitesides v. Stuart, the name of the state was not used, and the same is true of some of the subsequent cases. No doubt the court would lend an easy ear to an application for amendment, so as to insert the name of the state in any case where objection is made on that ground.

On the grounds stated, the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals must be reversed, and the judgment of the chancellor, dismissing the bill, must be affirmed, with costs.

J. I. CASE THRESHING MACH. CO. v. WATSON et al.†

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Sept. Term, 1909.)

1. SALES (§ 479*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—REMEDY OF SELLER—SALE OF PROPERTY—FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH STATUTES—EFFECT.

The duty imposed on a conditional seller by Acts 1889, p. 117, c. 81, § 1, to advertise the property for sale upon regaining possession on the buyer's default, is absolute, and the failure by a nonresident seller to advertise by printed handbills invalidates a sale, and in effect rescinds the contract, so that the seller cannot recover the price, especially in view of section 4, authorizing recovery by the purchaser from the seller of the part of the consideration paid, if the seller fails to advertise the sale as provided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1435; Dec. Dig. § 479.*]

2. SALES (§ 479*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—REMEDY OF SELLER—SALE OF PROPERTY—MANNER OF SALE—SALE BY NONRESIDENT SELLER.

Acts 1889, p. 117, c. 81, § 1, provides that a conditional seller, upon regaining possession of the property on the buyer's default, shall, within 10 days thereafter, advertise it for sale by printed handbills, or written or printed notices posted on the door of the courthouse in the county in which the seller resides, and also at two public places in the civil district in which the purchaser resides. Held, that the statute provides two methods of giving notice of sale—one by printed handbills, applicable where the seller resides in another state or in another county than the buyer, and the other by posting notice on the courthouse door, etc., applicable where the parties live in the same county in the state; and a nonresident seller cannot give notice of a sale in the buyer's county in this state by posting notices, but must give notice by printed handbills.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Monroe County; T. M. McConnell, Chancellor.

Bill by the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company against Pryer L. Watson, administrator, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and bill dismissed.

McCroskey & Pease, for appellants. Young & Young, for appellee.

BEARD, C. J. The bill in this cause was filed to recover a balance alleged to be due on notes executed by one William Donahoo to the complainant company as the purchase price of machinery contracted and delivered by the complainant to him. To secure the payment of these notes the title to the machinery was retained by the vendor. The purchaser having died, the defendant P. L. Watson was appointed administrator of his estate. Upon the ground that his intestate, for just reasons, had abandoned the contract, he declined to recognize these notes as claims against the estate. Thereupon the complainant took possession of the machinery and made sale of the same. Failing to realize the full amount of the purchase-money notes at this sale, which, it is alleged, was made "under and in accordance with the act of the state of Tennessee of the year 1890, chapter 81, regulating conditional sales of personalty," this suit was instituted for the purpose stated above.

A number of defenses were set up in the answer of the administrator, among them being a denial that complainant had complied with the statute in question.

On this point the record shows that, immediately after taking possession of the property, it was advertised by the complainant for sale by printed posters that were put up in the civil district within which Donahoo lived and died, and where, also, his administrator lived; one of them being placed on the courthouse door in the town of Madisonville, located within that civil district, and others in public places in other parts of Monroe county, where the machinery was. It is insisted that in this there was a failure to comply with the requirement of the statute referred to.

Upon regaining possession of property by a vendor in a conditional sale, because of the failure of the vendee to pay the full purchase money, as provided in the contract of sale, "the statutory duty of within 10 days thereafter advertising the same for sale in the manner prescribed by the act is imperative, and a failure to discharge this duty in any important particular makes the vendor so reclaiming liable to the original purchaser for the part of the consideration theretofore paid." Whitelaw Furniture Co. v. Boon, 102 Tenn. 719, 52 S. W. 155. It is true that no part of the purchase money in the case at bar was paid, and the particular question presented in this case just cited does not arise here; but the principle there announced is equally controlling.

The insistence of the defendant on the point at issue is that no "notice of this sale was posted on the door of the courthouse of the county" where the "seller" resided, and that, this being so, the sale was ineffectual to place any liability upon the estate of Donahoo, the deceased.

The conditional vendor in the present case is a corporation, with its situs at Racine, Wis. To have posted notice of this sale on the courthouse door at that point would have been an idle ceremony. We are confident that the Legislature never contemplated that where a nonresident vendor made a conditional sale of personalty to a conditional vendee in this state, and then reclaimed the property because of the failure of the latter to comply with the terms of the purchase, in order to make a perfect sale under the act of 1889, notice of the same should be posted at the courthouse of the vendor. Such a requirement would be absurd. The provision as to the duty of the reclaiming vendor is found in section 1 of this act, which is in words as follows:

"That, hereafter, when any personal property is sold upon condition that the title remain in the seller until that part of the consideration remaining unpaid is paid, it shall be the duty of said seller, having regained possession of said property, because of the consideration remaining unpaid at maturity, to, within ten days after regaining said possession, advertise said property for sale, for cash to the highest bidder, by printed handbills, or written or printed notices, posted on the door of the courthouse of the county of which said seller resides; and also at two public places in the civil district in which said original purchaser resides (said notice to be posted at least ten days before the day of sale, and to contain a description of the property to be sold and time and place of said sale), unless the debt is satisfied before the day of sale, then it shall be the duty of said original seller, or his agent, at the time and place, as stated in said notices, to offer for sale said property, as provided above. * * *

This statute, though inartificially drawn, provides for two modes of giving notice by a reclaiming vendor, one by "printed handbills" and the other by posted notices, and we are satisfied contemplates two distinctly different cases, one that of a nonresident seller with a purchaser residing in this state, or a seller resident in a county in this state other than that in which the purchaser resides, and the other where the conditional vendor lives in the same county in this state with the conditional vendee. In the first of these cases, as has been indicated above, the posting of a notice at the courthouse door of the county of the vendor, residing in another state, or, in a county in this state other than that of the residence of the conditional vendee, would be idle and of no effect, so far as giving notice of the sale was concerned. To meet such case it therefore provides that notice of the sale may be given by "printed handbills." It is a matter of common knowledge what these are and the purpose they are to serve in the matter of a public sale. They are printed notices of such a sale, giving the time, place, and terms thereof, with a description of the property to be sold, distributed by hand, and it was the evident purpose of the Legislature that this should be done with reasonable diligence and good faith among persons living in the neighborhood where the property is and the sale is to take place. When this is done, all opportunity for unfair dealing, as regards the purchaser, and unjust advantage of him, is avoided.

The other class embraces the case of the conditional vendor who lives in the same county in this state with the conditional vendee, and the former chooses to make his sale in that county. In such a case the statute provides for the posting at the courthouse of the county, and also two public places in the civil district in which the purchaser lives. This method secures, not only notice to the vendee of the sale which was to take place, but gives publicity to his neighbors, so as to insure the utmost fairness in the sale advertised.

This section bears this construction, and it is only by adopting it that the Legislature can be relieved of the charge of having required of the nonresident vendor, as in the present case, a foolish and unnecessary act. In either case, we are satisfied that the non-compliance upon the part of the reclaiming vendor, in any respect, with the requirements of the statute would be ineffectual to convey the property sold, and equally ineffectual to place any other or further burden upon the conditional vendee.

In the present case the provision of the statute, for the benefit of the class to which the complainant belongs, was not availed of; but it saw proper to make advertisement under the other provision, with the result that, as a matter of law, no valid sale was made. In legal effect it was, as section 4 of the act has been construed, a rescission of the contract. This being so, the complainant was not entitled to maintain the present bill as against the administrator of the delinquent vendee.

It follows that the decree of the chancellor, in so far as it grants relief to the complainant, is reversed, and the bill is dismissed.

McDONALD et al. v. RANKIN.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. June 28, 1909.)

1. IMPROVEMENTS (§ 4*)—SET-OFF AGAINST RENTS—RECOVERY.

At common law, the true owner of land had a right to the land, and the right to enter on it when the possession was withheld, and to own the improvements placed thereon by any one, including a bona fide possessor, but equity adopted the doctrine requiring the value of the permanent improvements placed by a bona fide possessor to be offset against the rents and profits, whenever the true owner applied to equity for an accounting by the possessor of the rents and profits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Improvements, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 8; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. IMPROVEMENTS (§ 4*) — COMPENSATION — "POSSESSOR IN GOOD FAITH."

Under the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757), providing that any person, believing himself to be the owner at law or in equity under color of title, shall be entitled to compensation for improvements placed on the land, in order to recover for the improvements placed on the land of another, one must occupy the land in good faith under color of title, and in ignorance of his title being questioned by another claiming a better title, and though he knows the facts which prove the invalidity of his title, yet, if through mistake of law he believes his title good, he is a "possessor in good faith" within the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Improvements, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 824-825.]

3. LIS PENDENS (§ 24*)—PURCHASERS PENDING SUIT—TITLE ACQUIRED.

The doctrine of lis pendens applies to purchasers or others acquiring title from a party to a pending action, and generally does not apply to strangers to the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lis Pendens, Cent. Dig. § 38; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

4. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 53*)—VOID DECREE—TITLE OF PURCHASER.

A sale under a void decree confers no title, and the purchaser, though a stranger to the suit, is not an innocent purchaser so as to acquire title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

5. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID DECREE—RIGHT OF PURCHASER—IMPROVEMENTS.

The rule that a purchaser at a void judicial sale is not an innocent purchaser so as to acquire title applies only to the title itself, and does not apply to the rights, given to a party by the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757), to compensation for improvements placed on land of another, and a purchaser obtaining the title in good faith, and holding possession, without actual notice that his title is assailed by one claiming a better title, is entitled to compensation for the improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 110; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

6. LIS PENDENS (§ 26*)—COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS PENDING ACTION.

The provisions of the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757), granting to a bona fide possessor of the land of another a recovery for the value of the improvements made thereon by him, are based on public policy, and the doctrine of lis pendens cannot be applied to an occupying claimant of land who otherwise would be entitled to the benefits of the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lis Pendens, Cent. Dig. § 60; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

7. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID SALE—COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

A purchaser at a sale under a judicial decree, void because entered by consent in a cause in which an infant was a party, entered into possession under color of title, which was first adjudged valid, and he believed in the strength of his title, and he and his grantees under him had no knowledge of any one asserting a better title. The purchaser and his grantees made improvements on the land in good faith. Held, that he and his grantees occupied the land under color of title and in good faith, and were entitled to compensation for the improvements under the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

8. IMPROVEMENTS (§ 4*) — COMPENSATION — PROFITS.

The betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757), providing that the owner shall be allowed the rents of the land that shall have accrued within three years next before the commencement of the suit therefor, deprives the true owner of all the mesne profits that accrued prior to that time, but it gives to him the rents on the land in the exact condition in which they are for the period subsequent to the three years next before the commencement of the suit, the measure of rents recoverable being the fair rental value of the land in its improved condition during the period named in the act, which means the net rents resulting from deducting from the gross rental value the amounts expended for necessary repairs, and such other necessary expenses as under the custom of the country have been paid for salary of an overseer in the management and collection of the rents.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Improvements, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

9. IMPROVEMENTS (§ 4*) — COMPENSATION — PROFITS.

Where occupants of the lands of another were entitled to the value of the improvements placed thereon by their predecessor in possession and the predecessor would be chargeable with rents for certain years, the occupants should be charged with such rents, though they were actually received by the predecessor, who had since died, and whose estate was not brought into the restitution suit brought by the true owner; and where the value of the improvements exceeded the amount of the rents for those years, they should be charged with the entire rents of those years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Improvements, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

10. IMPROVEMENTS (§ 4*)—RENTS.

Though rents that accrued prior to the three years before the true owner sued for possession of the land and the rents from the occupants claiming under a void judicial sale are not recoverable under the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757), yet, on equitable principles, such rents should be set off without restriction against the claim of the occupants for reimbursement of the purchase money received by the true owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Improvements, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

11. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID SALE—RIGHT OF PURCHASER—PROFITS—INSURANCE MONEY.

An occupant of land under a void judicial sale, who is liable under the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757), to account to the true owner for the rents of the land, is not liable for insurance money received on a policy insuring a house destroyed by fire and rebuilt by the occupant, for the insurance money did not arise from the property, but was payable to the occupant by reason of a personal contract with insurer.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

12. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID SALE—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER—RECOVERY OF RENTS—INTEREST.

An owner of land, entitled to recover rents under the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757) from occupants under a void judicial sale, is entitled to interest on all rents from the time they were received by the occupants and those under whom they claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 96; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

13. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID SALE—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER—TAXES.

Occupants of land under a void judicial sale are entitled to recover all taxes paid on the land and the interest on the taxes paid by them, and those under whom they hold the land, from the time such taxes were paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

14. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID SALE—COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS—VALUE.

The value of improvements, placed on the land of another by a bona fide occupant thereof under a void judicial sale, is determined as of the time of the recovery by the true owner; that being the time the improvements are turned over to, and go into the usable possession of, the true owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

15. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID SALE—COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS—VALUE.

The value of improvements, placed on land by a bona fide occupant under a void judicial sale, is based on the enhanced value which the improvements at the time of the recovery by the true owner impart to the land; but the enhanced value of the land should arise solely by reason of the improvements themselves, and should be determined only by the ordinary considerations that apply to lands similarly situated, and the condition of the improvements at the time of the recovery, the difference in the value of the land without the improvements and the value of the land with the improvements in their then condition, should be considered together with the reasonable cost in making the improvements and their deterioration, but the value should not exceed the cost of making the improvements or replacing them at the time of the recovery, and in the condition in which they are at that time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

16. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 55*)—VOID SALE—RIGHT TO IMMEDIATE POSSESSION—PAYMENT OF VALUE OF IMPROVEMENTS.

Under the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. § 2755), providing that no writ shall issue for the possession of land in favor of the successful party until payment has been made to the occupant of the amount due him for the improvements and the taxes paid, an owner, entitled to the possession of land in the occupancy of one claiming in good faith under a void judicial sale, is not entitled to the possession of the land until an accounting of the rents and profits and the value of the improvements and the taxes paid has been had and a final determination made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

17. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 80*)—ORDERS APPEALABLE.

An order, in proceedings by the true owner to recover the possession of land and the rents thereof, brought against an occupant holding in good faith under a void judicial sale, which directs an accounting of the rents and profits, the value of the improvements by the occupant, and the taxes paid, and that the true owner shall not have the possession until the accounting has been had and a final determination made, is not a final order, and is not appealable.

18. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1176*)—DISPOSITION OF CASE ON APPEAL—REMAND.

Where a decree of the trial court involving title to land is reversed, the Supreme Court must remand the case to the trial court with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the order and opinion of the Supreme Court.

Appeal from Woodruff Chancery Court, Northern District; Josephus O. Marshall, Special Chancellor.

Suit by Sallie Spott Rankin against Cora McDonald and others to recover lands in the possession of defendants under a void judicial sale, and the rents and profits thereof. From the decree both parties appeal. Modified and affirmed in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

This cause has been before this court several times, and the various questions involved in and decided upon former appeals will be found in the following opinions: Rankin v. Schofield, 70 Ark. 83, 66 S. W. 197; Rankin v. Schofield, 71 Ark. 103, 66 S. W. 197, 70 S. W. 306, 100 Am. St. Rep. 59; Rankin v. Schofield, 81 Ark. 440, 98 S. W. 674; Rankin v. Fletcher, 84 Ark. 150, 104 S. W. 933; Schofield v. Rankin, 80 Ark. 86, 109 S. W. 1161. The questions which are presented upon the present appeal to this court involve the determination and adjustment of the rights of the parties to the improvements and taxes, and the rents and profits of the lands in litigation. These lands belonged to J. N. S. Gibson, who died in 1884, seised and possessed thereof. The original suit herein was instituted in the Woodruff chancery court on the 17th day of August, 1886, by the collateral heirs of J. N. S. Gibson, as plaintiffs in that suit, against the administrator of his estate, Bettie Harwell, who was at one time his wife, and Sallie Spott Gibson (now Rankin), the appellee in this appeal, who was his only child, as defendant in that case, for the purpose of partitioning said lands. At the January term, 1889, of that court a consent decree was rendered directing the sale of the property in controversy. For that purpose a commissioner was appointed, who made a sale of the property in the latter part of the year 1889. At that sale one L. B. McDonald, who was not a party, but a stranger, to the suit, became the purchaser of the property at the bid and price of $14,050. The commissioner made the report of said sale to said chancery court, and at its January term, 1890, that court duly approved and confirmed the sale, and directed the commissioner to execute to the said purchaser a deed for said land. The commissioner executed said deed to said McDonald, which was duly approved by and acknowledged in said court in the manner prescribed by law. L. B. McDonald went into possession of the lands under said deed in 1890 and made permanent improvements upon the lands. In 1896 he conveyed a portion of said lands to his daughter, Antoinette Bond, who is one of the appellants in this appeal; and in 1899 he conveyed the remaining portion of said lands to Cora and Jesse McDonald, who are his daughter-in-law and grandson, and who are the other appellants in this appeal.

In 1889, at the time that said consent decree was entered, Sallie Spott Rankin was a minor of tender years, and she came of age in June, 1899. On February 19, 1900, she prayed an appeal to this court from said consent decree, under which the sale of said lands was made to said McDonald, and on November 15, 1902, that decree was reversed by this court. Rankin v. Schofield, 71 Ark. 168, 66 S. W. 197, 70 S. W. 306, 100 Am. St. Rep. 59. On December 20, 1902, Sallie Spott Rankin filed a supplemental complaint in said cause against the said appellants, seeking therein to recover from them the possession of said lands and the rents and profits thereof, and process on said supplemental complaint was served on said appellants on January 8, 1903. An answer was filed by them, in which they claimed title to the lands under said commissioner's deed executed to said McDonald, and the conveyance from McDonald to them. A decree was rendered by the chancery court in their favor, and that decree was reversed by this court. Rankin v. Schofield, 81 Ark. 440, 98 S. W. 674. It was there found that Sallie Spott Rankin was the only child and sole heir of said J. N. S. Gibson, and the owner of said lands; and it was held that the said consent decree of the Woodruff chancery court ordering the sale of said lands was void, because it was entered solely by the consent of the parties, and without any consideration or judicial determination, and, said Sallie Spott Rankin being then an infant, her guardian had no authority to consent to such a decree, and also because the consent decree was not authorized by the issues raised in the pleadings. In that opinion this court expressly stated that it did not "undertake to determine the rights of the parties to a return of proceeds of sale of lands received by the appellant (Sallie Spott Rankin), rents of lands and improvements thereon, or other incidents consequent on the recovery of the same."

Upon the cause being remanded to said chancery court that court entered a decree setting aside the commissioner's conveyance, which had been executed in 1890 to said L. B. McDonald, and decreeing in favor of said Sallie Spott Rankin a recovery of said lands. It appointed a special master to take and state an account of the value of the improvements and amount of taxes paid on said lands by the appellants and those under whom they claimed, and also an account of the rents and profits of said lands and of the repairs made thereon. It also directed the taking of an account of the purchase money which was paid by said McDonald and received by the parties to the original proceedings. It provided that said accounts be taken and stated separately as to the lands conveyed to and claimed by said Antoinette Bond, and as to the lands conveyed to and claimed by said Cora and Jesse McDonald. That court further decreed: "It is further ordered that no writ of assistance or other process for the possession of said lands shall issue in favor of plaintiffs in said supplemental proceedings until the value of the aforesaid improvements and taxes shall have been ascertained, and any balance, if any there shall be owing to said defendants on account of said improvements, after setting the value and amount of such improvements off against any amount that may be coming to said plaintiffs on account of rents and profits, less the cost of repairs, shall have been paid. In taking the account of rents the master will ascertain the amount commencing with the first year, to wit, 1890, and ascertain what rents were received by L. B. McDonald for that year, or what he might by the exercise of ordinary diligence—that is, the diligence which a man of reasonable capacity would exercise in his own business—and will charge him with the rents thus received, or which he might have received, for that year. He will next ascertain the cost of all necessary repairs upon said lands for that year, and deduct the amount thereof from the amount of rents, in like manner, for each year covered by the period aforesaid. In taking the account for improvements he will ascertain and state specifically each permanent improvement which he finds to have been made, and the nature and character thereof, and value such improvements added to said premises. He will also find as separate item what amount such improvement may have added to the rental value of said premises. The master will proceed as early as practicable to take and state such account. Whereupon said plaintiffs renewed their motion filed herein, to wit, on the 3d day of January, 1903, for writ of restitution, which motion is by the court overruled at this time, on the ground that the court is of the opinion that the defendants herein are entitled to an accounting for the value of permanent improvements placed upon said premises and taxes, and that no writ of restitution should be issued until the master aforesaid shall make his report, and the same shall have been approved by the court."

A great deal of evidence was taken by the master relative to these matters submitted to him, and he made a detailed report of his findings relative thereto. The findings of the master as to the values and amounts of the items submitted to him are well sustained by the evidence, and his work has been done so well and thoroughly in this respect that neither party has made any objection thereto in that regard. Their objections are based solely upon the rights of the respective parties to recover the respective items. The special chancellor approved these findings, but altered the report of the master by allowing certain items and disallowing others. Upon a final hearing the special chancellor entered a decree in favor of Antoinette Bond in the sum of $2,095.50, the same being a net balance which he found to be due upon improvements made and taxes paid upon that portion of the lands conveyed to her, and in favor of Sallie Spott Rankin, and against Cora and Jesse McDonald in the sum of $4,662.81; the same being a net balance found by him to be due on the mesne profits of that portion of the lands which were conveyed to Cora and Jesse McDonald. In the above amounts there were not included any rents for the year 1908 in any of said lands. From this decree all the parties have appealed to this court. Sallie Spott Rankin also prayed a separate appeal from that portion of the decree refusing to give to her the immediate possession of all the lands. The two appeals have been consolidated in this court, and the cause is now docketed, and will be referred to, with Antoinette Bond and Cora and Jesse McDonald as appellants and Sallie Spott Rankin as appellee.

Moore, Smith & Moore, for appellants. Gustave Jones, H. F. Roieson, Harry M. Wood, N. W. Norton, P. R. Andrews, and Rose, Hemingway & Rose, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. (after stating the facts as above). The matters that are now involved in this case, and which are presented to us on this appeal for our determination, relate to the respective rights of the parties to a recovery for improvements and taxes upon the one side, and the rents and profits of the land on the other. The determination of these matters depend principally, if not entirely, upon whether or not the betterment act applies to this case. It has been decided that the appellee is, and has been ever since the death of her father, the true owner of all said lands. According to the common law, the true owner of land had a right to the land, and that included the right to enter on it when the possession was withheld, and to have and own the improvements placed thereon by any one, which were considered to be but a part of the land itself, and the true owner had also a right to all the rents and profits issuing from the land. No distinction was made between a bona fide and mala fide possessor. As to the true owner, the possession of the occupying claimant was wrongful, and he could acquire no rights in another's property by his wrongful acts. But it soon became apparent that this rule was harsh and unjust when lasting and permanent improvements, which actually increased the value of the lands, were placed thereon by an innocent and bona fide holder, and offset the value of the rents and profits. To cure this harsh rule the courts of equity adopted the doctrine of requiring the value of the permanent improvements in such cases to be offset against the rents and profits whenever the owner of the lands applied to such court of equity for an accounting by the possessor of the rents and profits. This doctrine was applied in pursuance of the great equitable principle that "he who seeks equity must do equity." The rights thus recognized by the courts of equity were founded upon the principle that the occupant who thus went into possession of the land in ignorance of the invalidity of his title, although technically a possessor in bad faith, because he might have discovered such defect, yet he was not to be placed in the position of one who fraudulently takes possession without any title and keeps the true and known owner out of possession. But these rights accorded to such an occupant were only of an equitable nature, and his remedies could only be enforced in a court of equity. The reason and justice of recognizing such rights resulted in the enactment of statutes which granted them as substantive rights, which could be enforced in the very courts that determined the title to the land, and also gave to the occupant a recovery for the amount of the value of the improvements in excess of the value of the mesne profits. Green v. Bidle, 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. Ed. 547; 8 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 1241; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 799a, 799b; Warvelle on Ejectment, §§ 546, 557; Jones v. Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co., 86 Fed. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108; New Orleans v. Christmas, 131 U. S. 191, 9 Sup. Ct. 745, 33 L. Ed. 99; Byers v. Fowler, 12 Ark. 292; Cunningham v. Ashley, 18 Ark. 182, 63 Am. Dec. 62; McCloy v. Arnett, 47 Ark. 458, 2 S. W. 71. The Legislature of the state of Arkansas in 1883 enacted the statute commonly known as the "Betterment Act," which is embraced in sections 2754-2757, Kirby's Dig. That statute defines (A)

the qualifications of the occupant who is entitled to its benefits; (2) it fixes the value of the improvements and taxes which it grants to such occupant; (3) and the amount of the mesne profits which are recoverable by the owner.

1. It is contended by the counsel for appellee that L. B. McDonald and the appellants claiming under him are not such occupants as are described in the betterment act; and they base their contention upon the ground that said McDonald purchased the land during the pendency of this suit, under a decree which was declared to be void by this court. The question which is thus presented for determination is, What is the character of the occupancy which the possessor must have in order to fall within the provisions of this statute? The statute describes such occupant to be "any person, believing himself to be the owner, either in law or equity, under color of title, (who) has peaceably improved, or shall peaceably improve, any land which upon judicial investigation shall be decided to belong to another." It thus appears that the person must occupy the land under color of title, and with the honest belief that he has title to the land. In the case of Fee v. Cowdry, 45 Ark. 410, 55 Am. Rep. 560, the court described such occupant as being "one who not only supposes himself to be the true proprietor of the land, but who is ignorant that his title is questioned by some one claiming better right to it." In Beard v. Dansby, 48 Ark. 183, 2 S. W. 701, in describing the requirements which such occupant should possess, this court said: "Good faith, in its moral sense, as contradistinguished from bad faith, and not in the technical sense in which it is applied to conveyances of title, as when we speak of a bona fide purchaser, meaning thereby a purchaser without notice, actual or constructive, is implied in the requirement that he must believe himself to be the true proprietor. It must be an honest belief, and in ignorance that any other person claims a better right to the land." It was held in Shepherd v. Jernigan, 51 Ark. 275, 10 S. W. 765, 14 Am. St. Rep. 50, that where a party improved lands in good faith, and under the belief that he was the true owner, he is entitled to the benefits of this betterment act, and that such notice as might be gained from the registry of the deed is not sufficient to preclude him from those benefits. This court, in the case of Bloom v. Strauss, 70 Ark. 483, 69 S. W. 548, 72 S. W. 563, held that a bona fide occupant, who held under a last will which was defective upon its face, could claim the benefit of this statute. In the case of Brown v. Nelms, 86 Ark. 368, 112 S. W. 373, this court held that one who had purchased under a probate sale which was declared void was such an occupant as could claim the benefits of this statute. In that case the purchaser at the judicial sale had been the appraiser of the land that was sold, and upon that account it was held that such sale was fraudulent in law, and on account of such fraud it was void. But the court found that the purchaser acted in good faith, and in an honest belief that he would obtain a good title to the land, although he knew the facts which constituted the legal fraud and made the sale invalid. That was a judicial sale, under which a purchase was made, and the parties in interest had a right to appeal therefrom, or to institute proceedings to avoid said sale, which they did, so that in that case the occupant was a purchaser during the pendency of the proceedings, under a sale which was afterwards declared void; and this court held that the provisions of the betterment act applied in that case. Cowling v. Nelson, 76 Ark. 146, 88 S. W. 913. From all these cases it will be seen that the cardinal requisite that the occupant should possess is good faith, and an honest belief in the title under which he occupies the land, and an ignorance of his title being questioned by another who claims a better right, in order for him to be entitled to the benefits of the statute. He may know the facts which prove the invalidity of his title, yet if, through mistake of the law, he still believes that title good, he can hold in good faith within the meaning of the betterment act.

The doctrine of lis pendens applies to purchasers, or others acquiring title from a party to the action, and generally it does not apply to strangers to the suit. But where the decree under which the sale is made is wholly void by reason of some jurisdictional defect, it can confer no title. The purchaser in such instance, although a stranger to the suit, cannot in law be an innocent purchaser so as to acquire the title. But whether this doctrine is founded upon notice, or upon public policy, it only applies to the title itself which is thus acquired, and does not apply to the rights and benefits which are given to the party under the betterment act. The occupant holding under a tax deed which, on account of some jurisdictional defect, is declared void, or holding under a sale made under a decree in some tax proceeding which is declared void, although he knows, or has means of knowing, of these jurisdictional defects in his title, has yet been held to come within the terms of this statute. The constructive notice of the invalidity of the title which will deprive the purchaser at such a sale from acquiring the title as an innocent purchaser does not affect the rights of such a purchaser under the betterment act if he obtained the title in good faith and held possession without actual notice that his title was assailed by one claiming a better title. Ordinarily there is greater confidence placed in a purchase at a judicial sale than at any other sale, on account of the great confidence reposed by the people in the proceedings of our courts. But if the doctrine of lis pendens shall apply to defeat such purchasers of the benefits of the betterment act, they are placed at a greater disadvantage than a purchaser at any other sale. The doctrine of lis pendens, it is said, results not so much from notice, but is largely founded upon public policy. And so likewise, the provisions of the betterment act, which grant to the bona fide possessor of the land a recovery for the value of the improvements made thereon by him, have resulted from public policy. The policy thus advanced by this statute should prevail, and the public policy thus announced by the legislative will would not be subverted by applying the doctrine of lis pendens to those occupying claimants of land who otherwise would be entitled to the benefits of this act.

In this case it is conceded that the purchaser, McDonald, went into possession of the land under color of title, and that title was held to be valid by this court in the first hearing of the cause involving that question. The evidence tends to show that the purchaser believed in the strength of that title, and, until these supplemental proceedings were instituted and the summons served on them, he and the appellants had no knowledge of any one questioning that title, or asserting a better title to the land. The special chancellor found that these occupants held the lands under color of title in good faith, and in the honest belief that they had a perfect title to the land, and these findings appear to be well sustained by the evidence. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the facts of this case bring it within the terms of the betterment act. The appellants are therefore entitled to the value of all improvements made prior to January 8, 1903, the time that the summons was served herein on them, and to all taxes paid by them and those under whom they claim; and the appellee is entitled to recover all mesne profits that shall have accrued within three years next before the commencement of this supplementary suit.

2. Before the passage of the betterment act the courts adopted various measures for estimating the value of the improvements that should be allowed to the occupant, and the mesne profits that should be allowed to the true owner. Some allowed the first cost of the improvements, with interest, others fixed their value at the time of the notice received by the possessor of the title of the true owner, while others fixed their value at the time of the recovery. So likewise they differed in the amount of the mesne profits that should be recovered by the owner; some allowing the rents only on the lands, without the improvements, and others on the lands as they were improved. Haskins v. Spiller, 3 Dana (Ky.) 573; Barnett v. Higgins, 4 Dana (Ky.) 565; Evetts v. Tendick, 44 Tex. 570. The betterment act conferred upon the occupant certain substantive rights, and for the true owner it fixed the definite mesne profits which he could recover. As is said in the case of Brown v. Nelms, 86 Ark. 368, 112 S. W. 373, the betterment act is "one to adjust equities between the owners of the lands and persons who have occupied the same under color of title, believing themselves to be the owners—bona fide occupants. * * * In other words, when the occupant holds in good faith under color of title, the owner can recover the land and mesne profits for three years, and the occupant can recover the value of his improvements and amount of taxes." These are the rights of the parties as fixed by this statute. The statute says that the owner shall be allowed the rents of the lands that shall have accrued within three years next before the commencement of the suit. It deprives the true owner of all the mesne profits that accrued prior to that time, but it gives to him the rents on the lands in the exact condition in which they are for the period subsequent to three years next before the commencement of the suit.

It is urged by the appellants that they should not be charged with the rents and profits arising from the improvements made by them, but only for the rents on the lands in the condition in which they were when McDonald took possession. To sustain their contention counsel for appellants especially rely upon the case of State v. Baxter, 50 Ark. 447, 8 S. W. 188; but that case is but a continuation of the case of State, Use of Garland County, v. Baxter, 38 Ark. 462, which was a suit instituted in 1881, long prior to the passage of the betterment act. The principles applied in that case were based upon an accounting which allowed rents without restriction. It was an action to set aside a lease obtained by the occupant for a long term, and under which he had made improvements on the land, which lease was subsequently set aside for fraud; it had no application to the terms of the betterment act. The various rules that have been formulated by courts of equity in attempting to make equitable adjustments of the rights of the occupant on the one hand, to the value of the improvements and the taxes paid, and on the other hand, of the owner to the rents and profits, were based upon such principles of equity as in the opinion of those courts were right. In the uncertainty of these decisions the betterment act was enacted to definitely fix these respective rights, and it fixed, as a substantive right for the owner of the land, the rents of the lands for the period therein named, with the improvements which the lands then possessed. The general rule adopted by the courts for the measure of damages in cases for the recovery of mesne profits is the fair rental value of the lands during the period of the withholding. Analogous to that ruling, the measure of rents and profits which are recovered under the betterment act is the fair rental value of the lands in their improved condition during the period named in the betterment act. This means the net rents; that is to say, the amounts expended for necessary repairs, and for such necessary expenses as under the custom of the country have been paid for salary of an overseer in the management and collection of the rents, should be deducted from the gross rental value. This is on the theory that the owner would have had to have done this. Warvelle on Ejectment, § 543; Wallace v. Berdell, 101 N. Y. 13, 3 N. E. 769; Hodgkins v. Price, 141 Mass. 162, 5 N. E. 502.

It is urged by appellants that Cora and Jesse McDonald should not be charged with the rents for the years of 1900 and 1901, because the rents for those years were actually not collected or received by them, but by W. L. McDonald, who has since died, and whose estate is not brought into this restitution suit. But these appellants became entitled to the value of the improvements, for which they are allowed a recovery, which were placed upon the lands, not by them, but by him under whom they claim, and he would be chargeable with these rents. To the extent of the fund so received by them for such improvements it is but equitable that they should be charged with said rents; and, inasmuch as the value of the improvements exceeds the amount of the rents for those years, they should be charged with the entire rents of those years. The rents of the lands that accrued prior to December 20, 1899, cannot be recovered by the appellee, by virtue of the betterment act; but, upon equitable principles, these rents should be set off without restriction against the claim of appellants for reimbursement of the purchase money received by the appellee. The appellants are entitled in equity to recover such portion of the purchase money paid under said invalid sale for said land which was actually received by the appellee, for the reason that the appellee now recovers the land, which was the sole consideration for the money so paid, and it is but equitable that reimbursement should be made therefor. But during the years prior to 1900, those paying the purchase money received the rents and profits from these lands, and therefore, upon equitable principles, those mesne profits for the full period, and without restriction, should be applied on such claim for reimbursement of the purchase money.

It is urged by the appellants that for the years prior to 1900 they should not be charged with the mesne profits from improvements made by them, but only with the profits of the lands in the condition that they were when McDonald took possession. But it is unnecessary to pass upon this contention, for the reason that, according to the value of the rents as found by the master, and which finding is approved, the rents of the lands, with only said original improvements, would exceed the largest amount of said purchase money that can be claimed to have been received by the appellee; and this is true when the purchase money and the rents are apportioned to the respective tracts occupied by the respective appellants.

Upon the tract of land occupied by appellant Bond a house was burned and rebuilt by the occupant. This house had been insured by the occupant for a number of years for $1,050, and the insurance money was collected by the occupant. This sum was by the master charged to the appellant Bond as a part of the rents, but was disallowed by the special chancellor. The contract of insurance was a personal contract of appellant Bond, and the consideration was paid solely by her. The insurance money, therefore, did not in law arise from the property, but was payable to the appellant Bond by reason of her personal contract with the insurance company. She was therefore not chargeable therewith. Roesch v. Johnson, 69 Ark. 30, 62 S. W. 416; Langford v. Searcy College, 73 Ark. 211, 83 S. W. 944.

The appellee is entitled to recover interest on all rents from the time they were received by appellants and those under whom they claim. 15 Cyc. 208; Nunn v. Lynch (Ark.) 115 S. W. 926. Likewise the appellants are entitled to recover all taxes, and the interest on all taxes, paid by them and those under whom they hold the land from the time such taxes were paid.

3. Under the evidence in this case all the improvements were made prior to the service of the summons in this supplemental proceeding, and therefore the occupying claimants must be paid the value of those improvements. The value of the improvements is determined at the time of the recovery, for that is the time that they are turned over to and go into the usable possession of the holder of the title. In Summers v. Howard, 33 Ark. 490, this court, in speaking of the time when the value of the improvements should be estimated, said: "Such allowances [for improvements] are made upon the ground that the improvements do in fact pass into the hands of the plaintiff as a new acquisition; and they can only be a new acquisition to him to the extent of their value at the time he recovers or obtains possession of them, and therefore their value at that time is to be allowed, and nothing more." Warvelle on Ejectment, § 553; 15 Cyc. 222; Greer v. Fontaine, 71 Ark. 605, 77 S. W. 56. The value thereof is based upon the enhanced value which these improvements at the time of the recovery impart to the land. But such enhanced value of the land should arise solely by reason of the improvements themselves, and should be determined only by the ordinary considerations that would apply to lands that are similarly situated. The condition of the improvements at the time of the recovery should be taken into consideration. The difference in the value of the land without the improvements and the value of the land with the improvements in their then condition would be a just sum to allow therefor. In any event no value that the land might impart to the improvements should be considered in estimating the value of such improvements. The reasonable cost in making the improvements, their deterioration, if any, or the reasonable cost of making them at the time of the recovery in their then condition, may well be taken into consideration in arriving at the value of such improvements.

In determining the value of these improvements the master found the amount of the cost thereof at the time of the recovery, and then added 50 per cent. thereof to such cost, on the theory that, under the testimony, the value of the land was thus enhanced by these improvements in excess of their cost. This estimate of the value of the improvements was approved by the special chancellor. This is an arbitrary mode of fixing such valuation, rather than one based on the actual value of the betterment and amelioration of these improvements to the land. The value of the improvements should not exceed the cost of making them or replacing them at the time of the recovery and in the condition in which they are at that time. New Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624, 21 L. Ed. 215.

The special chancellor properly refused to grant to Sallie Spott Rankin the immediate possession of the land at the time of her application. The betterment act is applicable to this case, and that statute provides that "no writ shall issue for the possession of the land in favor of the successful party until payment has been made to such occupant of the balance due him for such improvements and the taxes paid." Kirby's Dig. § 2755. Until the accounting of these matters was had, and a final determination thereof made, the possession of the lands should not have been given to her. Such an order was also on this account not such a final order from which an appeal would lie. Crittenden, Ex parte, 10 Ark. 333; Fitzpatrick v. Phillips, 41 Ark. 85; Davie v. Davie, 52 Ark. 224, 12 S. W. 558, 20 Am. St. Rep. 170; Cohn v. Huffman, 52 Ark. 436, 12 S. W. 1071; Hargus v. Hayes, 83 Ark. 186, 103 S. W. 163; Brown v. Norvell, 88 Ark. 590, 115 S. W. 372. In the final decree of the Woodruff chancery court it was ordered and decreed that the appellee recover all the lands; that a writ of restitution issue to her for the immediate possession of the lands which were claimed by appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald, and that a writ of restitution should be issued to her for the lands claimed by the appellant Antoinette Bond, after the payment of said sum, which was the amount of the balance of the value of the improvements made on said land, and found by the court as still due to said appellant. Under the findings of the chancellor this portion of the decree relative to the possession of the lands was correct. But as hereinafter directed, a restatement of the accounts of the matters upon which the findings of the court were based will be ordered by this court. And if as a result of such an accounting it shall be found that nothing is due to either of the appellants upon the improvements and taxes upon the respective tracts, then immediate writs of restitution will issue to the appellee for such tract or tracts.

The findings of the special chancellor and the decree rendered by him are in the main in accord with this opinion; but in some particulars it does not conform with it. The decree will therefore be reversed. But we are of the opinion that the findings of the special master of the Woodruff chancery court are amply sustained by the evidence as to the values and the amounts of taxes, rents, interest, and all other matters submitted to him and set out in his report, except as to the improvements; and as to the improvements we are of opinion that his findings of the actual cost thereof at the time of the recovery will give the true values thereof with which amounts the appellants should be credited, and that the only error committed in that regard was in adding to such cost the additional sum of 50 per cent. of such cost. We are of opinion that a restatement of the account as to all matters involved herein and submitted to said special master can be made from the evidence taken by the special master, so that it will conform with this opinion and without taking any additional testimony. For this reason we do not think it necessary to remand this cause in order to make such a restatement of these accounts; but we deem it advisable that a special master be appointed by this court for the purpose of making a restatement of said accounts from the evidence as appears in the report of the special master (and which is a part of the record of the case) which will conform with this opinion. To that end therefore a special master will be appointed by this court. Said special master will be directed to take the evidence contained in the report of John G. Haralson, the special master of the Woodruff chancery court, and which is a part of the record herein; that from said evidence he make and state an account of the improvements, taxes, and mesne profits of the lands, together with interest on the taxes and mesne profits between the respective parties to this suit, and in accordance with this opinion. In making and stating said accounts he will make and state separate accounts of all the above matters relative to the lands that were in the possession of the appellant Antoinette Bond, and which are called in said special master's report the "Bond" place, and relative to the lands that were in the possession of the appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald, and which are called in said report the "McDonald" place. And this cause will be continued for the further orders of this court after said report of the special master of this court shall be taken, made, and filed in this court. And thereupon this cause will be remanded to the Woodruff chancery court, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the opinion of this court.

BATTLE and HART, JJ., dissent to so much of this opinion as allows to appellee rents on improvements made by appellants and those under whom they claim.

On Rehearing.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The appellants and appellee herein, respectively, filed motions herein for a rehearing. After due consideration of said motions we are of the opinion that the motions should be overruled, except as herein indicated.

By our opinion in this case the findings of the special chancellor were in all things approved, except only as to his finding of the value of the improvements made on the lands by appellants and those under whom they claim. As to the value of those improvements, we held that the sole error in the finding of the special chancellor was in adding to the cost thereof the sum of 50 per cent. of such cost; and we held that, "as to the improvements, we are of opinion that his findings of the actual cost thereof at the time of the recovery will give the true amounts thereof, with which amounts the appellants should be credited." The appellee has filed a motion in which she states that, according to the finding of the special chancellor, the said cost of the improvements made on the land claimed by appellant Bond amounted to $5,865, to which the special chancellor added $2,932.50 being 50 per cent. of same, and which latter finding was only disapproved; that if the amount of the final balance found by the special chancellor as due to the appellant Bond, to wit, $2,591.88, should be deducted from this disallowed item of credit of $2,932.50, it would represent the true final amount due to appellee from appellant Bond on the accounting, to wit, $340.62; that the said cost of the improvements made on the lands claimed by appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald amounted to $2,520, to which the special chancellor added $1,260, being 50 per cent. of same, and which latter item was only disapproved; that if to the final balance found by the special chancellor as due by the appellants McDonald, to wit, $4,662.81, should be added this disallowed item of credit of $1,260, it would represent the true final amount due to appellee from the appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald upon the accounting, to wit, $5,922.81, and the appellee asks that the portion of the order in our former opinion which refers the restating of an account to a master be set aside, and that the opinion and the decree be modified as above stated. Upon further examination of the report of the special master and the findings of the special chancellor, we are of the opinion that the above correctly states the cost of the respective improvements, at the time of the recovery, made on the two tracts, and that in fixing the value of said improvements at said amounts the rights of appellants cannot be prejudiced. The value of said improvements is therefore found as above stated. It follows that upon said final accounting of the improvements, taxes, and mesne profits there is due by the appellant Antoinette Bond to the appellee the sum of $340.62, and that there is due by the appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald to the appellee the sum of $5,922.81, and that these should have been the findings of the special chancellor, and a decree rendered in favor of appellee for these respective amounts and a recovery of the lands. The order heretofore made herein for the appointment of a master and the reference to him for a restatement of the account is set aside. The former opinion of this court is modified so as to conform with this additional opinion.

That portion of the decree of the Woodruff chancery court which grants to the appellee the restitution of the land claimed by the appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald and recovery against said appellants of $4,662.81 is modified so that it will decree in favor of the appellee the recovery of said lands claimed by appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald, and a recovery against said appellants of the sum $5,922.81; and the decree of the chancery court as to said appellants Cora and Jesse McDonald, thus modified, is affirmed. That portion of the decree which finds in favor of the appellant Antoinette Bond for a balance due on improvements and postponing the restitution of the lands claimed by said appellant Bond is reversed; and said portion of the cause is remanded to the Woodruff chancery court, with directions to enter a decree in favor of appellee for immediate recovery of said land claimed by appellant Bond and a recovery against said Bond for the sum of $340.62. We do not enter a decree in this court in favor of appellee and against the appellant Antoinette Bond in accordance with the above opinion for the reason that the title to land is herein involved, and that portion of the decree is reversed. Where the decree of the lower court involving title to land is reversed, this court thereupon remands the cause to the lower court, with directions to enter a decree in that court in accordance with the order and opinion of this court. In the McDonald branch of this case the lower court entered a decree in favor of the appellee for the land, and that much of that portion of the decree we have affirmed. We have only modified in that branch of the case the amount of the damages that appellee should recover. Therefore that portion of the decree can be modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

KING v. BYRNE et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 47*)—PERSONS ENTITLED—CHILD OMITTED FROM WILL. Under Kirby's Dig. § 8020, providing that, where testator in his will omits to mention the name of a child or the legal representatives of such child living at the time of the execution of the will, he shall so far as regards such child be deemed to have died intestate, and it shall be entitled to such proportion of the estate as if testator died intestate, the great granddaughter of testator cannot recover where she was not living when the will was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 126-130; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 47*)—PERSONS ENTITLED—OPERATION OF WILL.

Under such statute, the great granddaughter could not recover if her mother was living when the will was made; the grandchildren being mentioned by class in the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 126-130; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 71*)—ESTABLISHMENT OF RIGHT TO SHARE—CHILDREN OMITTED FROM WILL.

The burden is on one claiming under Kirby's Dig. § 8020, relating to children omitted from will, to show his right to recover.

Appeal from Lafayette Chancery Court; E. O. Mahoney, Chancellor.

Suit by Blanche King against L. A. Byrne and others. From a decree dismissing the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. L. King, for appellant. L. A. Byrnes, for appellees.

BATTLE, J. This suit was brought by Blanche King in the Lafayette chancery court against Lawrence A. Byrne, C. L. Byrne, J. V. Brame, and Henry Moore for the recovery of lands. She alleged in her complaint that Alexander Byrne died seised and possessed of personal and real property and left a last will and testament, and thereby devised and bequeathed to his wife, Frances Byrne, all his property for and during her natural life and one-fifth of his estate remaining at the death of Frances Byrne to his granddaughter, Irene Lewis, who died leaving the plaintiff, Blanche King, her only child and heir surviving; and alleged that Irene Lewis was the granddaughter of Frances Byrne, and that she (Lewis) died leaving plaintiff her only child and heir surviving as before stated; that Frances Byrne made a will on the 4th day of September, 1888, without naming plaintiff or providing for her therein, which was duly probated and admitted to record; and that Frances Byrne died seised and possessed of certain real estate. She did not allege that any of the estate of Alexander Byrne remained after the payment of his lawful debts, or that she (plaintiff) was living at the time Frances Byrne executed her last will and testament. She asked for a decree for one-fifth of the real estate of which Alexander and Frances Byrne severally died seised and possessed.

The defendants answered, and denied that any of the estate of Alexander Byrne remained after the payment of his lawful debts, and that plaintiff was living at the time Frances Byrne executed her last will and testament.

Upon the final hearing of the cause, the court dismissed plaintiff's complaint for want of equity; and she appealed to this court.

It was not claimed or shown that any of the estate of Alexander Byrne, deceased, remained after the administration of his estate and the payment of his debts. We take that fact as conceded. It is not alleged or shown that plaintiff was living when Frances Byrne made her will. She claims that she is entitled to share in the property of Frances Byrne, deceased, on the theory that she died intestate as to her; Mrs. Byrne not having named or provided for her in the will, which so far as it affects this cause is as follows:

"3d. After all of my funeral expenses and debts have been fully discharged, then all of the remainder of my property, personal and real, moneys, credits, choses in action, of whatever name, nature or description, which may come to my ownership, by bequest, devise or purchase, I hereby bequeath and devise absolutely unto my two sons, Lawrence A. and Cassius L. Byrne, to be shared in by them equally, and to be taken by them absolutely, at my death.

"While I have bequeathed and devised all my property absolutely to my said two sons, it is my wish that they shall, from time to time, contribute, out of my said estate, such sums of money or property, to my grandchildren, as they may require or need, to relieve their wants, leaving my said two sons to use their own discretion, as to the time and manner of such contributions, believing that they will do what is right and equitable in the premises."

The following is the statute upon which appellant bases her claim: "When any person shall make his last will and testament, and omit to mention the name of a child, if living, or the legal representatives of such child born and living at the time of the execution of such will, every such person, so far as regards such child, shall be deemed to have died intestate, and such child shall be entitled to such proportion, share and dividend of the estate, real and personal, of the testator as if he had died intestate," etc. Kirby's Dig. § 8020.

Appellant cannot recover under this statute because it is not shown that she was living at the time the will was made. If her mother, Irene, was living then, she could not recover because the latter was mentioned by class (grandchildren) in the will. Brown v. Nelms, 86 Ark. 368, 112 S. W. 373. It is alleged by plaintiff, and not denied by the defendants, that appellant's grandmother, Mary Lewis, born Byrne, the daughter of Alexander and Frances Byrne, is dead, but it is not alleged or shown when she died.

The burden was upon the plaintiff to show that she was entitled to recover, and she has failed to do so. Decree affirmed.

BURNSIDE v. UNION SAWMILL CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 16*)—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

An injunction should not be granted where plaintiff has a full, adequate, and complete remedy at law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 52*)—REMOVAL OF TIMBER—REMEDY AT LAW.

Plaintiff, who purchased certain standing timber from a grantee of defendant, was not entitled to an injunction restraining defendant from interfering with the cutting and removal of the timber, since plaintiff might sue at law for possession or for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 52*)—INSOLVENCY OF DEFENDANT.

The complaint not alleging defendant's insolvency did not show that the mischief sought to be enjoined would be remediless at law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 36*)—DISPUTE AS TO RIGHTS.

That the parties placed different constructions on various provisions of a timber deed as to the timber conveyed did not warrant equitable relief, since a court of law could construe the deed as well as a court of equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 82-84; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Appeal from Union Chancery Court; E. O. Mahoney, Chancellor.

Action for injunction by the Union Sawmill Company against J. W. Burnside. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

R. L. Floyd and N. C. Marsh, for appellant. Gaughan & Sifford, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The Union Sawmill Company, who was the plaintiff below, instituted this suit against J. W. Buckner, defendant below, in December, 1908, in the Union chancery court, seeking to enjoin the defendant from in any manner interfering with or preventing the plaintiff or its agents from cutting and removing 100,000 feet of standing pine timber. In its complaint it alleged that in 1906 the defendant had by deed sold to the Geo. W. Miles Timber & Lumber Company the pine timber 12 inches in diameter standing on certain lands, and that the Geo. W. Miles Timber & Lumber Company thereafter sold said timber to plaintiff; that the timber involved in this suit is standing on the above lands inside of an inclosed field containing tracts of cleared land; and that defendant claims that he did not sell the timber in such field, and further claims that plaintiff is not entitled to any timber that was less than 12 inches in diameter at the date of the deed, and refuses to permit plaintiff to cut the said timber and remove same. It is further alleged that plaintiff will make profit out of the manufacture of the timber, which, on account of many contingencies, especially a fluctuating market, cannot be ascertained in a suit for damages. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the grounds that it does not show that plaintiff will suffer irreparable damage, and that it does not allege the insolvency of the defendant; that it is without equity, and does not state a cause of action. The court overruled this demurrer over defendant's objection. Upon a trial of the cause, the court granted the injunction as asked for in the complaint. The defendant has appealed to this court.

Under the allegations of the complaint in this case, the plaintiff had a full, adequate, and complete remedy at law, and in such case an injunction should not be granted. 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 352. If the plaintiff became the owner of the property involved in this suit by virtue of a purchase thereof from a grantee of the defendant, and the defendant withheld possession thereof, the plaintiff has the right to sue at law for its possession or for damages. Where there is a failure to deliver or convey property, the value of such property is the measure of the damages sustained; and the right to recover such damages in a suit at law would be a full and complete remedy for the wrongful withholding of such property. 13 Cyc. 168.

The complaint does not allege the insolvency of the defendant, and therefore does not show that the mischief sought to be enjoined would be remediless at law. And there was no evidence tending to show that the defendant was not perfectly solvent. This case is in this particular analogous to those cases where it is sought to enjoin the cutting of timber on land. In those cases, it has been held that, under rights analogous to the rights alleged in the complaint in this case, an injunction would not be granted in the absence of any allegation of the defendant's insolvency. Ex parte Foster, 11 Ark. 304; Myers v. Hawkins, 67 Ark. 413, 56 S. W. 640; Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Newport Land Co., 75 Ark. 286, 87 S. W. 432; Haggart v. Chapman, 77 Ark. 527, 92 S. W. 792.

The fact that the parties place different constructions on the timber deed in regard to its various provisions would not be ground for equitable relief. A court of law can construe the deed equally as well as a court of equity. And there are no other allegations in the complaint sufficient to show that the plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if an injunction is not granted.

It follows that the lower court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The decree of the lower court is reversed, and this cause is remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint with leave to be given to the plaintiff to amend the same, if he is so advised, and to proceed not inconsistent with this opinion.

CAMPBELL v. HYDE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 7*) — ARREST BY POLICE OFFICER—WARRANT.

Defendant, a police officer, on information from parties, who knew the facts, that plaintiff had violated a peace ordinance, made affidavit before the mayor for a warrant of arrest, charging plaintiff with disturbing the peace. The warrant was issued, and plaintiff was arrested by defendant. Held that, the warrant being fair upon its face, the defendant was protected from liability for false imprisonment in serving it; it not being necessary that the warrant should have been in all respects regular. It was sufficient if it appear to have been lawfully issued, and such as he might lawfully serve.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-10; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 7*)—PROTECTION BY PROCESS—PROCESS—FAIR ON FACE.

A process is fair on its face which proceeds from a court or magistrate, or body having authority by law to issue process of that nature, and which is legal in form, and on its face contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise the officer that it issued without authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-10; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 7*)—MALICIOUSLY—PROBABLE CAUSE—MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

While a person who procures a warrant may be liable to an action for malicious prosecution if he acts maliciously and without probable cause, he is not liable to an action for false imprisonment.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; J. W. Phillips, Special Judge.

Action by J. E. Hyde against W. W. Campbell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and dismissed.

Appellee sued appellant for false imprisonment alleging that on or about the 23d day of November, 1907, in the city of Newport, Jackson county, Ark., defendant did forcibly, falsely, maliciously, and against his will arrest without warrant or other legal process, and imprison him and restrained him of his liberties for three days, or thereabout; that by reason of said false arrest and imprisonment maliciously committed by appellant against appellee he suffered great shame, was greatly injured in his good name, reputation, and standing, and otherwise suffered great injury, to his damage in the sum of $10,000, for which amount he prayed judgment. Appellant filed an answer, in which he denied the allegations of the complaint, and for defense set up the following: That he was a police officer of the city of Newport, Ark., and as such it was his duty to serve warrants of arrest on persons charged with violating the criminal laws in said city, and with violating the ordinances of said city; that on the 23d day of November, 1907, there was instituted before the mayor of said city a charge against appellee for disturbing the peace by cursing and threatening to fight, and being drunk in Aaron Keedy's hotel, also on the streets of said city, all in said city, and on or about the 20th day of November, 1907; that the mayor of said city issued a warrant of arrest for appellee, and placed the same in the hands of appellant for service; that in pursuance of said warrant, and acting thereunder, appellant went to the place where appellee could be found, and served said warrant on him, after which time they walked together to the mayor's place of holding court; that at said place appellee was turned over to the marshal of the city of Newport, Ark., according to the rules and regulations governing the police department of said city, after which time appellant had nothing further to do with appellee; that the only connection appellant had with said transaction was the serving of said warrant of arrest on appellee; that said warrant was duly and regularly issued before said arrest by said mayor; that appellant did nothing in the premises but what it was his duty to do as an officer; that said warrant was served in a gentlemanly manner; that appellant did not imprison appellee at all, and that all of his acts and doings in relation to said arrest were strictly in pursuance to said warrant and the law, and in due performance of appellant's duties as a peace officer of said city; and that he did not in any manner mistreat appellee, and concluded with a prayer for judgment in his behalf.

Appellee, among other things, testified that on or about the 23d day of November, 1907, appellant arrested him, and took him up the streets of Newport and delivered him to Mr. Baird at the Hose House. He did not carry appellee into the mayor's court then. Appellant never said anything about a warrant when he arrested appellee; said: "You will have to go before the mayor." Appellee's friend put up $5 for his first appearance. Then appellee got the money back, thinking he could give bond. Carothers, the city marshal and chief of police, then said, "I will go with you wherever you ask me to," and appellee replied, "You will have to go to jail then." Carothers locked appellee up, and in a little while appellee made his bond and was released from custody. Appellee was not shown any warrant by appellant. Appellant, after arresting him, delivered him to Carothers, and Carothers for a short time, while appellee was unable to make the bond, put appellee in jail. The appellant was there the morning they took appellee out of the mayor's court and put him in jail. Appellee admitted that appellant was a police officer of the city of Newport at the time he made the arrest. Various ordinances were introduced showing that appellant had authority to arrest persons for violating the city ordinances, and making appellant a conservator of the peace within the city. An ordinance was introduced showing that it was the duty of appellant after making arrests to deliver the persons arrested to the city marshal.

There was testimony on behalf of appellant showing that appellant received information from parties who knew the facts that appellee had violated a peace ordinance of the city of Newport; that appellant upon this information made affidavit before the mayor for a warrant of arrest, charging appellee with disturbing the peace contrary to the ordinances of the city. Thereupon the mayor issued the warrant for the arrest of appellee, and appellant arrested appellee upon this warrant. The appellant, among others, presented the following prayers for instructions: "(5) The defendant was an officer of the city of Newport at the time of the alleged arrest, and as such had full power and authority to make the arrest in question. (6) You are instructed that the mayor had jurisdiction to issue the warrant in question, and further instructed that an officer is fully protected in serving a warrant that is fair on its face. (7) Before you can find for the plaintiff, you must believe and find from the evidence that the defendant arrested the plaintiff without any warrant, and that the defendant imprisoned the plaintiff. (8) The defendant was fully justified in serving the warrant on the plaintiff, if he had such warrant, and this is true although you may believe that the plaintiff may have previously been arrested on a warrant issued by a justice of the peace. (9) If the defendant had a warrant fair on its face, issued by competent authority at the time he arrested the defendant, he was fully justified in making such arrest, and your verdict should be for the defendant." "(12) If the defendant, W. W. Campbell, upon information received from credible persons of such a nature a person would ordinarily believe to be true, made an affidavit charging the offense of disturbing the peace, and if defendant, believing in good faith and without any carelessness on his part that the plaintiff Hyde had committed such offense, and a warrant fair upon its face was thereupon issued by the mayor, then the defendant, W. W. Campbell, would be protected in acting under such warrant as if the affidavit upon which the warrant was issued had been made by some other person in good faith. (13) You are instructed that under the evidence in this case the defendant, W. W. Campbell, was authorized to make the affidavit to procure the issuance of the warrant in question." The above prayers were refused, and appellant duly objected and excepted to the court's ruling.

The court gave the following: "Gentlemen of the jury, in this case I instruct you under the testimony that you must find a verdict for the plaintiff." "(2) You are instructed that one who causes, instigates, participates in, or sets in motion, a wrong is liable for the damages resulting therefrom, and it is not a justification or excuse that others were likewise connected with the wrong. (3) Your verdict being for the plaintiff, you will assess such damages as will fully compensate plaintiff for his loss of time, for the shame and humiliation sustained by him; for the disgrace and injury to his reputation and standing in the community caused by such arrest and imprisonment, considering all the surrounding circumstances. All these matters should be considered by you in arriving at the amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled. (4) The plaintiff having been unlawfully arrested by the defendant, you are instructed that he thereby became liable for all damages growing out of such unlawful arrest, whether committed by him or by any other officer, until he was discharged. The damages that the plaintiff is entitled to are just, actual damages." The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, appellee, fixing his damages at $100. Judgment was rendered for that sum, which appellant seeks to reverse by this appeal.

Jeffery & Grant and Campbell & Suits, for appellant.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). The court erred in instructing the jury to return a verdict in favor of appellee and in the instructions given. The court also erred in refusing appellant's prayer for instructions. This court, in Trammell v. Russellville et al., 34 Ark. 106, 36 Am. Rep. 1, said: "It is established doctrine that process, fair on its face, will protect from liability the officer executing it. It is not meant that it shall in all respects be regular; but that it shall appear to have been lawfully issued, and such as the officer might lawfully serve. That process may be said to be fair on its face which proceeds from a court or magistrate, or body having authority by law to issue process of that nature, and which is legally in form, and on its face contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise the officer that it issued without authority. When such appears to be the process, the officer is protected in making service; he is not concerned with any illegalities that may exist back of it. That the marshal and his deputy were protected from liability by the warrants we think is clear." Judge Caldwell, speaking for the Circuit Court of Appeals, in Carman v. Emerson, 71 Fed. 264, 18 C. C. A. 38, announced the following: "The writ was in due form, and served within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in a lawful manner, by an officer authorized by law to serve it. The rule has long been settled that no imprisonment by virtue of a legal writ in due form, issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, and served in a lawful manner, is false imprisonment. It matters not that upon a presentation of all the facts it appears that the writ was improvidently or wrongfully issued. The existence of such facts does not make the writ void or illegal, or impair its efficacy as a complete defense to an action for false imprisonment brought against the officer serving it, or the party who procured it to be issued and instigated its service. In such cases, if the party procuring the issuance of the writ acts maliciously and without probable cause, he may be liable to an action for malicious prosecution, but he is not liable to an action for false imprisonment."

It follows that upon the undisputed facts of this record the appellant is not liable for false imprisonment. The court erred in so holding, and for the errors indicated the judgment must be reversed, and the cause is dismissed.

JACKSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. RAPE (§ 40*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial for rape, the reputation of prosecutrix for unchastity is admissible to show her consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-59; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 337*)—IMPEACHMENT.

The credit of prosecutrix as a witness in a trial for rape may be impeached by evidence that her general reputation for truth or immorality renders her unworthy of belief, but not by particular wrongful acts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1129-1131; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 830*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

Accused requesting an instruction submitting an issue must request a correct instruction or the refusal to give it is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2012, 2017; Dec. Dig. § 830.*]

4. RAPE (§ 59*)—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial for rape, the prosecutrix testified that the rape occurred at night at a place she believed to be remote from human habitation, and that her resistance was overcome through fear, and accused testified that the intercourse was voluntary, the court on proper request must charge that the failure to make an outcry might be considered in connection with the other facts as showing want of resistance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 97; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

5. RAPE (§ 59*)—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial for rape, the state mainly relied on the testimony of prosecutrix, and accused testified that the intercourse was voluntary, that thereafter he took her to a neighbor's house, that she made no complaint, that he subsequently met her, and that her manner to him was friendly, the refusal to charge that the failure to make immediate complaint, and that she remained friendly for some time, could be considered on the question whether the intercourse was by consent, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 96; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Sam Jackson was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

H. A. Parker, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HART, J. Sam Jackson was indicted, tried before a jury, and convicted of the crime of rape in the Monroe circuit court. The case is here on appeal.

Counsel for appellant assigns as error the refusal of the court to give the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that if they find from the testimony that the victim or prosecutrix is a woman of immoral character that the jury should consider this fact for two purposes: (1) It goes to her credibility as a witness. (2) The jury may consider it upon the question of consent." This instruction was based upon the evidence adduced at the trial tending to show that the prosecutrix was a woman of unchaste character. The instruction was properly refused in the form in which it was presented. Her reputation for chastity may not be put in issue to shake her credit as a witness, but only to show her consent, and so no rape. Her credit as a witness may be impeached by evidence that her general reputation for truth or immorality renders her unworthy of belief, but not by evidence of particular wrongful acts. The reason for admitting evidence concerning her chastity is that a jury might more readily infer assent to the intercourse in an unchaste woman than in a virtuous one. Hence the instruction was not correct in the form in which it was presented. Maxey v. State, 66 Ark. 523, 52 S. W. 2; State v. Stimpson, 78 Vt. 124, 62 Atl. 14, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153; 1 Wigmore on Evidence, §§ 199, 200; 3 Rice on Evidence, p. 605. Appellant under the authorities, supra, was entitled to an instruction on the bad reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity as affecting the question of her consent. But it was the duty of appellant to ask a correct instruction. Mabry v. State, 80 Ark. 345, 97 S. W. 285; Allison v. State, 74 Ark. 454, 86 S. W. 409, and cases cited; Snyder v. State, 86 Ark. 456, 111 S. W. 465; Western Coal & Mining Co. v. Burns, 84 Ark. 74, 104 S. W. 535.

Counsel for appellant urges upon us a reversal because the court refused to give the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of Estella Williams, when she thought a rape was about to be committed on her, to make an outcry; and that, if she failed to do so, the jury can consider this fact as showing want of resistance." The court properly refused the instruction in the form in which it was presented. The prosecutrix testified that the rape occurred in the nighttime at a place she believed to be remote from human habitation, and that her resistance was overcome through fear. Appellant testified that the intercourse was voluntary. Hence it cannot be said that it was the duty of the prosecutrix to make an outcry; for this would have invaded the province of the jury in expressing an opinion on the evidence. If a proper instruction on the question had been asked, the court should have told the jury that the failure to make an outcry might be considered by the jury in connection with the other facts and circumstances adduced in evidence as tending to show want of resistance.

Counsel for appellant also complains that the court refused to instruct the jury as follows:

"(7) The court instructs the jury that, if they find from the evidence that Estella Williams failed to make complaint immediately after the alleged commission of said offense, the jury may consider this upon the matter as to whether she gave her consent or not.

"(8) The court instructs the jury that, if they find from the evidence in this case that the defendant and the prosecutrix remained friendly for some time after the alleged outrage, this can be considered whether the sexual intercourse was by consent or not."

These instructions, or one of similar import, should have been given. 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) pp. 862, 863, and cases cited. Appellant testified that after he had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix he carried her to a neighbor's house, and that, after sitting around the fireside for some time, she went to bed without making any complaint; that he met her on two different occasions after this before a charge of rape was preferred against him; and that her manner toward him was friendly and cordial. It is the natural instinct of a woman to complain of an outrage of this kind at the first opportunity, and to have a feeling of aversion against the perpetrator of it. The theory of the state was that she was overcome by fear of appellant. This view was presented to the jury by the court by a proper instruction. Appellant's theory was that his intercourse with the prosecutrix was by her consent. He was entitled to have this view presented to the jury. The state relied mainly upon the testimony of the prosecutrix for a conviction. The testimony of the appellant was in direct conflict with her testimony. Hence the refusal to give the instructions was prejudicial to the appellant. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Choctaw Mercantile Co., 80 Ark. 438, 97 S. W. 234; Little Rock Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Goerner, 80 Ark. 158, 95 S. W. 1007, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97; Smith v. State, 50 Ark. 545, 8 S. W. 941;

Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405.

Other assignments of error are pressed for our determination, but, as they relate to matters that will not likely arise upon a new trial of the case, they need not be considered.

For the error in refusing to give instructions Nos. 7 and 8, requested by appellant, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. June 28, 1909.)

1. VENUE (§ 63*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Kirby's Dig. § 7996, provides that a party may obtain a change of venue on a petition stating that he believes that he cannot obtain a fair trial in the county where the action is pending on account of the undue influence of his adversary, etc. The petition shall be verified and supported by the affidavits of at least two credible persons that affiants believe the statements of petitioner are true. Section 7998 provides that on presenting the petition, which may be resisted, the judge may order a change of venue, etc., provided that where plaintiff sues in a county other than that of his residence, or where the occurrence of which he complains took place, unless compelled to do so to get service on defendant, defendant shall have the right to a change of venue on presentation of his petition duly verified. Held that, where the conditions contained in the proviso to the latter section exist, defendant is entitled as of right to a change of venue, and his verified petition need not be supported by affidavits.

2. DEATH (§ 47*) — ACTIONS — COMPLAINT — STATUTES.

A complaint, alleging that the death of plaintiff's husband was caused by the negligence of defendant railroad in failing to block its frogs and guard rails as required by law, states a cause of action under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644), giving a right of action for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, and not under section 2864, giving a right of action for death caused by the negligence of the servant operating defendant's instrument of transportation.

3. DEATH (§ 11*) — STATUTES — CREATION OF NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644), giving a right of action for death caused by wrongful act, etc., where the injured person would have been entitled to recover had death not ensued, does not create a new cause of action, but simply transmits one that therefrom existed, and would have ceased to exist on the death of the injured party but for the provisions of the section.

4. DEATH (§ 7*)—STATUTES—CAUSE OF ACTION —NATURE.

Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644), giving a right of action for damages for death caused by wrongful act where the injured person would have been entitled to recover had death not ensued, does not inflict a

5. DEATH (§ 35*)—ACTIONS—JURISDICTION.

An action may be maintained in Arkansas under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644), giving a right of action for damages for death caused by wrongful act; such statute being substantially similar in import and character to the Arkansas statute on the subject.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 301*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—DEPRIVATION OF DEFENSE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Act. Mo. Feb. 28, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 181), § 1, requires all corporations, etc., operating railroads in the state to maintain the best known appliances to fill or block all switches, frogs, and guard rails on the roads, in all yards, etc., to prevent, as far as possible, the feet of employes or other persons from being caught therein. Section 2 provides that the contributory negligence of any person injured or killed by reason of noncompliance with the act shall not relieve the railroad from liability in an action for damages. Held, that the act is within the police power of the state, and is not unconstitutional because depriving a railroad of the defense of contributory negligence, and thereby depriving it of its property without due process of law.

7. COMMERCE (§ 10*)—REGULATION BY STATE—STATUTE.

Since Congress has not required railroads engaged in interstate commerce to fill or block switches, frogs, and guard rails on their roads, Act. Mo. Feb. 28, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 181), requiring railroads so to do, does not conflict with Act Cong. April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. 65, c. 149), commonly known as the "employer's liability act," whereby Congress assumed jurisdiction over injuries to employes engaged in interstate commerce.

McCulloch, C. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County; Brice B. Hudgins, Judge.

Action by Ruth E. McNamare against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

This is an action by Ruth E. McNamare, widow of F. McNamare, against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company to recover damages for alleged negligence in killing her husband while in the employment of said railway company. The material facts upon which the suit is based are as follows: On the 18th day of February, 1908, plaintiff's husband was in the employment of the defendant as a brakeman on one of its freight trains, running from Cotter, Ark., to Crane, Mo. On said date one of the defendant's freight trains upon which her said husband was a brakeman was running north on defendant's railroad at or near Melva, Mo., and the conductor ordered her husband, who was in the rear of said train, to walk over the cars and notify the engineer to head-in on a switch in the yards at Melva for the purpose of allowing a passenger train to pass. In obedience to the order, McNamare went forward and notified the engineer. The engineer, instead of heading into the switch, went to the other end of it for the purpose of backing into it. It was the duty of McNamare to assist in operating the switch. For that purpose, as the engine approached the switch stand, he jumped off of it. His foot was caught in an unblocked frog on guard rail, and was held so firmly that he could not unloose it so as to get out of the way of the train. The train ran over him, severing his legs from his body, which resulted in his death. In getting off of the engine he jumped on the side next to the switch, instead of on the opposite side, as he was required to do by the rules of the company. There was a jury trial and verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $7,500. From the judgment entered on the verdict the defendant has appealed.

E. B. Kinsworthy, S. D. Campbell, and T. T. Dickinson, for appellant. Jones & Seawell and Hamlin & Seawell, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above).

1. Counsel for appellant assign as error the action of the court in refusing to grant it a change of venue. In its petition for a change of venue appellant states: "That it verily believes that it cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial in this, Marion, county, on account of the undue prejudice against the petitioner in said county. It further says the plaintiff is not a resident of Marion county, Ark., but is a resident of the state of Missouri; that her cause of action, if any she has, and the occurrence of which she complains, did not take place in Marion county, Ark., but occurred in the state of Missouri, and plaintiff was not compelled to institute her suit in Marion county in order to get service on the defendant"—and ends with a prayer to grant it an order changing the venue of this case to some other county in the state of Arkansas, against which there was no valid objection, and for all other proper relief.

The facts are that appellee came to Marion county after the suit was brought, a few weeks before the date of the trial, and resided there at the time of the trial. At the time her husband received the injury complained of, they resided at the town of Cotter, in Baxter county, Ark., through which county appellant's line of railroad also extended. The injury complained of occurred in the state of Missouri. The action was not commenced in the county of the plaintiff's residence, nor in the county where the occurrence she complains of took place, and it was not necessary to bring the suit in Marion county in order to get service on the appellant. Hence, upon presentation of its petition duly verified, appellant was entitled as a matter of right to a change of venue.

We will quote the two sections of our statutes relative to the question: Section 7996 provides: "Any party to a civil action trial by jury may obtain an order for change of venue therein by a motion upon a petition stating that he verily believes that he cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial in said action in the county in which the same is pending on account of the undue influence of his adversary, or of the undue prejudice against the petitioner, or his cause of action, or defense, in such county. The petition shall be signed by the party and verified as pleadings are required to be verified, and shall be supported by affidavits of at least two credible persons to the effect that affiants believe that the statements of the petitioner are true." Section 7998: "Upon presenting the petition, which may be resisted, and notice to such judge, he may make an order for the change of venue in such action if, in his judgment, it be necessary to a fair and impartial trial, to a county to which there is no valid objection, which he concludes is most convenient to the parties and their witnesses; provided, that, in case where the plaintiff shall have instituted suit in a county other than that of his residence, or of the county where the occurrence of which he complains took place, unless compelled to do so in order to get service on the defendant, the defendant shall have the right to a change of venue upon presentation of his petition duly verified."

The language, "upon presenting the petition, which may be resisted," plainly contemplates the petition duly verified and the supporting affidavits. This is so for the reason that it provides for a resistance, which could not be done and which would not be necessary to be done unless a petition for change of venue duly verified and with supporting affidavits as required by the statute had been filed. In short there would be nothing to resist unless the requirements of 7996 had been complied with. The proviso contained in the latter part of section 7998 is a limitation upon the preceding part of the section. Where the conditions contained in the proviso exist, they defeat the operation of the first part of the section. In other words, the proviso conditionally limits the operation of the statute relative to a change of venue. It provides that, when the conditions exist, the change of venue shall be granted as a matter of right upon presentation of the petition duly verified. If the Legislature had intended that the supporting affidavits should accompany the petition as a prerequisite to the granting of a change of venue, it would have used the language "upon presentation of his petition duly verified together with the supporting affidavits"; but the expression of the one excludes the use of the other. In the case of St. Louis South- western Railway Co. v. Furlow, 81 Ark., at page 499, 99 S. W. 690, the court said: "The statute plainly means that if the plaintiff commences an action in a county other than that of his residence, or other than that of the county in which this occurrence of which he complains took place, unless he is compelled to do so in order to get service on the defendant, the latter shall have the right to a change of venue upon presentation of his petition in proper form, duly verified, containing allegations of the statutory grounds of prejudice or undue influence and supported by the affidavits of two credible witnesses." The use of the words, "and supported by the affidavits of two credible witnesses," used by the court, was not necessary to a proper determination of the issue under consideration, and the views we have expressed in the present case are in harmony with the rest of the opinion.

2. Appellee alleges in her complaint that she is entitled to maintain this action under section 2864 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637). Counsel for appellant contend that section 2864 is penal in its character, and that the courts of one jurisdiction will not enforce the penal statutes of another. The allegations of the complaint do not state a cause of action under section 2864, but do state a cause of action under section 2865 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri. The right of action given in section 2864 is for a death caused by the negligence of the servant operating the defendant's instrument of transportation, whether it be a locomotive, car, train of cars, steamboat, its machinery, stagecoach, or other public conveyance, while the right of action given in the two sections next following is for a death caused by the negligence of the defendant, which may mean his own negligence, as, for instance, in furnishing an unsafe vehicle, or it may mean his negligence through his servant in some particular other than the particular specified in section 2864, for which, if the person injured had not died, he would have had a cause of action. Casey v. Transit Co., 205 Mo. 721, 103 S. W. 1146; Crohn v. Kansas City Home Telephone Co., 131 Mo. App. 313, 109 S. W. 1068. The complaint in this case alleges that the death of McNamare was caused by the negligence of appellant in failing to block its frogs and guard rails as required by the act approved February 28, 1907. See Laws Mo. 1907, p. 181. Hence it states a cause of action under section 2865, and not under 2864, of the Missouri Revised Statutes. Section 2865 does not create a new cause of action, but simply transmits one that theretofore existed, and would have ceased to exist upon the death of the injured party but for its provisions. Strotzman v. St. Louis, Iron M. & Sou. R. Co., 211 Mo. 227, 109 S. W. 769. Section 2865, Rev. St. Mo. 1899, is as follows: "Whenever the death of a person shall be caused by a wrongful act, neglect or default of another, and the act, neglect or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then, and in every such case, the person who, or the corporation which would have been liable, if death had not ensued, shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured."

It will be seen that the recovery permitted by this statute, giving a right of action for death by wrongful act, is not a penalty inflicted by way of punishment, but is merely compensatory for the damages sustained by the widow, to whom under the Missouri statutes the right of action was transmitted on the death of her husband. It is well settled that an action under such statutes may be maintained in another state having a statute substantially similar in import and character, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Halst, 71 Ark. 258, 72 S. W. 893, 100 Am. St. Rep. 65, and numerous cases cited in note to the case of Ralsor v. Chicago & Alton Ry. Co., on page 806 of 2 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cases. Counsel for appellant urges upon us that the statutes are not substantially similar in their character. As we have already shown, the statute of Missouri under which the suit was brought is similar to ours in that it is not a suit for a penalty, but for damages as compensation; and also that it does not create a new cause of action, but simply provides for the survival of the cause of action where death ensues. There is no objection that the right of action is enforced by the widow as provided by the laws of Missouri instead of by the personal representative for the benefit of the estate; and for the beneficiaries of the deceased, as provided by our statutes. In Dennick v. Railroad Company, 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. Ed. 439, the United States Supreme Court said of a similar action: "It is indeed a right dependent solely on the statute of the state; but when the act is done for which the law says the person shall be liable, and the action by which the remedy is to be enforced is a personal and not a real action, and is of that character which the law recognizes as transitory and not local, we cannot see why the defendant may not be liable in any court to whose jurisdiction he can be subjected by personal process or by voluntary appearance, as was the case here. It is difficult to understand how the nature of the remedy, or the jurisdiction of the courts to enforce it, is in any manner dependent on the question whether it is statutory right or a common-law right. Wherever, by either the common law or the statute law of a state, a right of action has become fixed, and a legal liability incurred, that liability may be enforced and the right of action pursued in any court which has jurisdiction of such matters and can obtain jurisdiction of the parties." To the same effect, see Boston & M. R. Co. v. McDuffey et al., 79 Fed. 934, 25 C. C. A. 247. Therefore we are of the opinion that under the principles above declared the suit can be maintained in this state.

3. It is next contended that the act approved February 28, 1907 (Laws Mo. 1907, p. 181), is unconstitutional. The act reads as follows:

"Section 1. That all companies or corporations, lessees or other persons owning or operating any railroad or part of railroad in this state, are hereby required, on or before the first day of September, nineteen hundred and seven (1907), to adopt, put in use and maintain the best known appliances or inventions to fill or block all switches, frogs and guard rails on their roads, in all yards, divisional and terminal stations, and where trains are made up, to prevent, as far as possible, the feet of employes or other persons from being caught therein. Any company or corporation, lessees or other person, owning or operating any railroad, or part of a railroad in this state, who shall fail to do any act or thing in this section required to be done, or shall cause any act or thing not to be done, or shall aid or abet any such omission, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this law, and shall forfeit and pay the sum of ten dollars ($10.00) for every such offense, and each day shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. At every term of a court of record of this state having criminal jurisdiction, the judge thereof shall direct and charge grand juries to make special inquiry as to violation of this law.

"Sec. 2. When any employé or other person shall be injured, maimed or killed, by reason of the noncompliance with the provisions of this act then in any action for damages which may be instituted against any railroad company, corporation or lessee for such injuring, maiming or killing, proof of contributory negligence or carelessness on the part of any employé or other person so injured, maimed or killed, shall not relieve such railroad company (corporation) or lessee from liability."

Counsel first urged that the act is unconstitutional because it takes away the defense of contributory negligence from the railroad company and thereby deprives it of its property without due process of law. The rule on that subject as laid down by Mr. Elliott is as follows: "There are many modern statutes requiring the performance of specified acts and denouncing a penalty against persons who fail or refuse to perform the designated acts. In some of the books it is suggested that the doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply where the injury is caused by a violation of the statute. The overwhelming weight of authority is, however, that the doctrine does apply, unless the statute abrogates the rule of the common law. Principle and authority, as we believe, require the conclusion that, although the violation of a statute may give a right of action to one who is injured thereby, it does not, unless expressly or by necessary implication so declared, give a right of action to one who is himself guilty of contributory negligence." Elliott on Railroads, vol. 3, § 1315. See, also, Labatt, Master & Servant, vol. 2, §§ 951, 952; Quackenbush, Adm'r, et al. v. Wis. & Minn. R. Co., 62 Wis. 411, 22 N. W. 519. Here the act expressly deprives the railway company of the defense of contributory negligence. The policy of the law on which the defense is excluded is that it is in the nature of a penalty for the neglect of the railroad company to comply with a regulation of the Legislature deemed necessary for the lives of its employes. We are of the opinion that such acts fall within the police power of the state, and are within the scope of legislative authority.

Again it is urged by counsel for appellant that Congress by act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. 65, c. 149), has assumed jurisdiction over injuries to employes engaged in interstate commerce, and that such jurisdiction is exclusive. In the case of Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific R. Co. v. State, 86 Ark. 412, 111 S. W. 456, this court held that the Arkansas statute requiring railroad companies to equip certain freight trains with at least three brakemen, in so far as it relates to interstate commerce, is not in conflict with any act of Congress on that subject, and is valid until Congress legislates on the same subject. The court, speaking through Chief Justice Hill, said: "There is no direct interference with the legislation of Congress relied upon by the act in question. Each may stand. Each covers its own field, and there is no apparent ground of conflict possible in the operation of the two acts, for they do not reach the precise subject-matter." So, in the present case, it may be said that Congress has not required railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce to fill or block all switches, frogs, and guard rails on their roads or in their yards, and there is no conflict therefore between the act now under consideration and the act of Congress of April 22, 1908, commonly known as the "employer's liability act."

4. Counsel for appellant also contend that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of whether the place where McNamare received the injuries which resulted in his death was a yard on appellant's line of railroad, and urges that the court should have declared as a matter of law, under the evidence adduced, that such place was not a "yard" within the meaning of the act of Missouri of February 28, 1907, above quoted. The case seems to have been tried on the theory that the act does not contemplate that all switches, frogs, and guard rails on the road shall be filled or blocked, but that only such as are in yards, divisional and terminal stations, and where trains are made up fall within the provisions of the act. Inasmuch as the question of filling or blocking frogs, switches, and guard rails on all parts of the road may arise on a new trial of the case, and for the reason that neither the Supreme nor appellate courts of the state of Missouri have to our knowledge construed the act, we will refrain from considering this assignment of error.

5. Other assignments of error are urged upon us for our consideration; but they are upon questions of evidence and on the improper remarks of counsel in their argument to the jury, and they need not arise on a retrial of the case. Hence we will not now consider them.

For the error in not granting appellant a change of venue as indicated in the opinion, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

MCULLOCH, C. J. I concur in the judgment of reversal, because I think the trial court erred in hearing evidence as to the existence of the grounds for change of venue set forth in the petition, and in overruling the petition; but I do not concur in that part of the opinion which holds that "where the plaintiff shall have instituted suit in a county other than that of his residence, or of the county where the occurrence of which he complains took place, unless compelled to do so in order to get service on the defendant," the change may be granted on presentation of a verified petition without supporting affidavits. I think the statute means that under such circumstances the petition must be verified, and must also be supported by the affidavits of at least two credible persons, as provided in section 7996 of Kirby's Digest, but that the grounds of the petition cannot be inquired into. This was what we stated in St. L. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Furlow, 81 Ark. 496, 99 S. W. 689, to be the proper construction of the statute. Section 7996 of Kirby's Digest provides in general terms what a party shall do in order to obtain a change of venue, and it requires the supporting affidavits of at least two credible persons. Section 7381 of Sandels & Hill's Digest, which was amended by the act of April 13, 1899, reads as follows: "Upon presenting the petition and notice to such judge, he shall make an order for the change of the venue in such action to a county to which there is no valid objection, which, in his judgment, is most convenient to the parties and their witnesses."

Now the only change wrought in the law by the act of 1899 is to allow the grounds stated in the petition to be inquired into by the court, except in cases where the plaintiff improperly institutes the action in a county other than that of his residence or where the injury complained of occurred; and it is clear to me that the Legislature did not intend to change the form or substance of the petition, or to relieve the petitioner from the necessity of presenting supporting affidavits to his petition in order to show the good faith of his allegations that he "verily believes that he cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial of said action in the county in which the same is pending." My opinion is that the Legislature only intended to make the petition and the supporting affidavits of credible persons conclusive as to the existence of grounds for a change of venue, where the plaintiff has instituted an action in the wrong county, the same as the law stood as to all actions before the passage of the act. The language of the act of 1899 fully bears out my construction. It begins with a declaration that "upon presentation of the petition, which may be resisted," etc., the court or judge shall make the order for a change if in his judgment it be necessary to obtain a fair trial. What is meant by the word "petition" as thus used? Surely not a bare petition, without supporting affidavits, for section 7996, which is neither amended nor repealed, expressly provides that the petition must be accompanied by supporting affidavits. Now, if the Legislature used the words "presentation of the petition" in the beginning of this section without intending to dispense with the necessity for supporting affidavits, then it is reasonable to suppose that there was no intention, in using the words "presentation of the petition duly verified" in the concluding part of the section, to dispense with the requirement for supporting affidavits.

I think that in actions instituted in a county other than that of the plaintiff's residence, and other than the county where the injury complained of occurred, unless compelled to do so in order to get service of summons, the act of 1899 made no change in the requirements at all, and in such cases the defendant must still, as before, present a petition duly verified by affidavit, and supported by the affidavits of at least two credible persons. The inquiry of the court is then limited to the ascertainment whether or not the supporting affiants are credible persons, and, if they are found to be such, the change of venue must be granted as a matter of course.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. ASKEW.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*) — COMMERCIAL MESSAGES—NOTICES.

Where a message on its face showed that it related to a commercial business transaction between the sender and addressee, of value to each, the telegraph company had notice of any actual damage that might result from its negligence in failing to transmit it properly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 70*) — TRANSMISSION OF MESSAGE — MISTAKES — LOSS OF SALE—DAMAGES.

Plaintiff having been offered two cars of hay delivered at T., at $15 a ton, while the offer was still open wired his acceptance by an open message in which plaintiff's name was transmitted as "G. H. Arnold," instead of "J.

H. Askew." By reason of this mistake, the seller failed to ship the hay and on plaintiff learning of its nonarrival more than a month thereafter when the price had materially advanced, he purchased other hay in the open market at the advanced price. Held that the measure of plaintiff's damages against the telegraph company for the error was the difference between the price of the hay purchased, and the value thereof at the time it should have been delivered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 72, 73; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Columbia County; G. W. Hays, Judge.

Action by J. H. Askew against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff, appellee, was conducting a general mercantile establishment at Waldo, Ark., when on or about the 1st day of October, 1906, he received by letter from the Roswell Trading Company of Roswell, N. M., an offer to ship him two cars of choice alfalfa hay at $15 a ton, delivered at Texarkana. This offer was still open and unrevoked on the 3d day of October, 1906, when during the regular hours for receiving messages the plaintiff delivered to the agent of the appellant company at Waldo, Ark., a message accepting the offer. The message was signed "J. H. Askew." It was transmitted as if signed by G. H. Arnold, instead of J. H. Askew, the sender. Relying on the accuracy and promptness of the telegram, the plaintiff, appellee, waited for notice of the arrival of the hay at Texarkana until November 6, 1906, the time when the hay ought to have been at Texarkana. His first information of the error was in reply to his letter of inquiry as to why the hay had not been delivered. In the meantime the price of this grade of hay had advanced materially and the appellee seeks to recover damages for the failure to properly and promptly transmit the message of acceptance as measured by the difference between the offered price and the market price of the same grade of hay on the day on which the error was first discovered. In addition plaintiff's complaint prayed for damages suffered by the loss of anticipated profits in the sale of this hay in the regular course of business. The proof did not sustain this allegation. The court below expressly found against prospective damages. The plaintiff does not appeal from the judgment of the court, and abandons this portion of the complaint. The case was submitted to the court sitting as a jury, which found that the plaintiff suffered no damage by a loss of anticipated profits, but that he suffered actual damages to the amount of $66, for which judgment was rendered.

Geo. H. Fearons, Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough and Todd & Hurley, for appellant. W. H. Askew, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). The judgment of the court eliminated all claim for damages by reason of the loss of anticipated profits set up in the complaint. The message "Roswell Trading Company, Roswell, N. M., ship two cars choice alfalfa fifteen dollars, delivered at Texarkana, J. H. Askew," on its face showed that it related to a commercial business transaction between the sender and sendee of importance and value to each. Where such is the case, the telegraph company has notice of any direct or actual damages that may result from its negligence in failing to transmit the message promptly, and is liable therefor. True v. International Tel. Co., 60 Me. 9, 11 Am. Rep. 156; Postal Tel. Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575, 23 N. E. 583, 7 L. R. A. 474, 19 Am. St. Rep. 55; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299, 45 Am. Rep. 480; Tel. Co. v. Hyer Bros., 22 Fla. 637, 1 South. 129, 1 Am. St. Rep. 222, 228. Cases are cited giving examples of messages calling for application of the above rule in Postal Tel. Co. v. Lathrop, supra. The measure of damages in such cases is the difference between the price that the sender of the message agreed to pay for the merchandise had the telegram been seasonably delivered and the sum which he would have been compelled to pay at the same place, in order, by the use of due diligence after notice of the failure of the telegram, to have purchased the like quantity and quality of the same species of merchandise. Squire v. West, Union Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232, 93 Am. Dec. 161; True v. International Tel. Co., supra, and cases there cited.

Without discussing the evidence in detail, it suffices to say that it warranted a finding by the court that the Roswell Trading Company made appellee an offer to sell two cars of choice alfalfa hay on October 3, 1906, which offer appellee duly accepted on that day by his telegram delivered to appellant for transmission; that by appellant's failure to transmit the telegram appellee lost the bargain and the benefit of the contract with the Roswell Trading Company, which the prompt delivery of his telegram would have closed and secured to him; that appellee, by the course of trade and prior dealings between himself and the Roswell Trading Company, could not be charged with negligence in having failed to discover the mistake of the Telegraph Company before November 12, 1906, the day when he discovered the error; that on November 12, 1906, the price of alfalfa hay was $18 per ton, or $3 more than appellee would have had to pay for the hay delivered at Texarkana on the day the contract (except for the negligence of appellant) would have been closed. Appellee began buying hay as soon as he discovered that his telegram had not been correctly transmitted, but did not remember what it had cost him delivered. It thus appears that through appellant's negligence ap-pellee, as we have stated, lost the contract that he would have made with the Roswell Trading Company on October 3, 1906, and the measure of damages is as above announced. This rule for the measure of damages in such cases is recognized in Telegraph Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444, 8 Sup. Ct. 577, 31 L. Ed. 479. The rule has its analogy in cases where there is a breach of contract on the part of the vendor in not delivering goods according to his contract of sale. The rule in such cases is: "That where the vendor is in default for not delivering goods or chattels in pursuance of the contract of sale, and no money has been advanced by the vendee, the true measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the value at the time the article should have been delivered; and the reason of the rule is conclusive, to wit, that such damages, added to the contract price which the vendee has not parted with, will enable him to buy the article in the market." Dey v. Dox, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 127, 24 Am. Dec. 137. See, also, Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718, and other cases cited in appellee's brief.

There is nothing in Telegraph Co. v. Feller, 58 Ark. 29, 22 S. W. 917, 41 Am. St. Rep. 81, Brewster v. Tel. Co., 65 Ark. 539, 47 S. W. 560, and Telegraph Co. v. Love Banks, 73 Ark. 205, 83 S. W. 949, in conflict with the rule above announced as to the measure of damages. In those cases the facts were different from the facts of the case at bar, and the rule for the measure of damages therein announced was the correct one for the facts of those cases. But the cases show that upon a state of facts parallel to those at bar the rule would be as we have stated in this case. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Love Banks, supra, it is held, quoting syllabus: "The measure of damages for the negligent failure of a telegraph company to deliver a message offering a price for a commodity held for sale is the difference between such price and the sum for which the commodity could have been sold for at the time the message should have been delivered." In Brewster v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra, at page 540 of 65 Ark., page 561 of 47 S. W., Judge Riddick, speaking for the court, says: "The law requires that a party should exercise due diligence to avoid injury to himself, and the measure of damages in such a case is the difference between the contract price of the cattle and that which plaintiffs would have been compelled to pay at the same place in order, by due diligence after delivery of the telegram or notice of the failure to deliver it, to purchase the same number and grade of cattle." Although appellee designated the damages which he sustained as the "loss of profits," and sued for the "loss of said profits," yet his complaint sets forth the facts, and among other allegations are these that: "Said Roswell Trading Company would have filled said order if said telegram had been properly transmitted, and delivered to said Roswell Trading Company." The market price of choice alfalfa hay at Roswell, N. M., on November 15, 1906, was $20 per ton, delivered at Texarkana. The prayer is for damages in the sum of $175 and for "other proper relief." Under all the allegations of the complaint, and the proof taken without objection, we are of the opinion that the judgment of the court in favor of appellee for actual damages in the sum of $66 is not "without the issue."

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

BAKER v. NANNY, Sheriff.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

ANIMALS (§ 44*)—MALICIOUS KILLING AND WOUNDING—JUDGMENT—PAYMENT—COUNTY WARRANTS.

Kirby's Dig. §§ 1892, 1893, provides that any person who shall willfully, etc., kill or wound any animal of another with or without malice toward the owner which it is made larceny to steal, shall on conviction be fined or imprisoned, and shall be liable for damages to the owner, and the court shall render judgment for the party threefold the amount of damages assessed. Held, that the amount so assessed for the benefit of the owner was not payable to the county, under the statute providing that certain fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed by the court, shall be paid into the county treasury for county purposes, and hence a judgment for damages so rendered was not payable to the sheriff in county warrants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County; Brice B. Hudgins, Judge.

Mandamus on relation of E. C. Baker to compel John Nanny, as Sheriff of Marion County, to accept county warrants in payment of a judgment for damages assessed against relator for the malicious killing and wounding of certain mules. From a judgment denying the relief asked, relator appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Chastain, for appellant. S. W. Woods, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. E. C. Baker was convicted in the Marion circuit court of malicious mischief, committed by killing one mule and wounding another, the property of J. F. Dudley, and was fined $50, and judgment was rendered for that amount and costs of prosecution in favor of the state of Arkansas, and in the same prosecution upon the same conviction the damages of Dudley was assessed, and judgment was rendered against the defendant in favor of Dudley for $180 damages to the mules. Execution was issued upon the judgment in favor of Dudley and placed in the hands of John Nanny, the sheriff. The defendant tendered him (sheriff) the warrants of the county of Marion in payment of the amount due for damages, and be refused to accept them. He (Baker) thereupon applied to the Marion circuit court for a writ of mandamus to compel the sheriff to accept, and the court refused to grant it, and he appealed.

The judgment rendered against Baker for damages in the prosecution for malicious mischief was based upon the following statutes, which, so far as applicable, are as follows: "If any person shall willfully, maliciously or wantonly, by any means, whatsoever, kill, maim or wound any animal of another with or without malice toward the owner of the animal, which it is made larceny to steal, he shall on conviction be punished by a fine of not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not less than ten nor more than sixty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall, moreover, be liable to damages to the owner of the animal so killed, maimed or wounded, as in the preceding section provided"—which is as follows: "And the jury who shall try such case shall assess the amount of damages if any actual damages has occurred, * * * and the court shall render judgment in favor of the party for threefold the amount so assessed by the jury." Kirby's Dig. §§ 1892, 1893.

Under these statutes the judgment for the damages to the animal killed or wounded is rendered in favor of the owner. It is for compensation to the owner as well as punishment to the accused. The judgment is not due and payable to the county, and is not to be paid as a fine into the county treasury for the benefit of the county; the statute upon that subject providing: "All fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed by any court or board of officers whatsoever, except those imposed by mayors or police courts in any city or town, shall be paid into the county treasury for county purposes." Hence as the judgment in favor of the owner is not payable into the county treasury, and is not a debt due the county, and is intended as compensation for damages suffered by the owner, it is not payable in county warrants. We cannot see upon what principle it is so payable; there being no statute requiring it.

Judgment affirmed.

BLUM v. PULASKI COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 70*)—INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT—REVIVAL—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL.

An order of revival, under Kirby's Dig. §§ 6312, 6313, 6315, providing for the revival of actions within a specified time, is not appealable and is reviewable only on appeal from final judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 367-385; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

Appeal from Pulaski Chancery Court; John E. Martineau, Chancellor.

Action on behalf of Pulaski County against R. A. Furth and another, revived after the death of Furth in the name of Sam Blum, his executor. From the order of revival, Blum appeals. On motion to dismiss. Granted.

J. W. House and Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough, for appellant. Jones & Hamiter and Carmichael, Brooks & Powers, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. An action was instituted on behalf of the county of Pulaski in the chancery court of that county against R. A. Furth and another. Furth died during the pendency of the action, and appellant, Blum, qualified as executor. On motion of appellee the chancery court entered an order reviving the cause as to the estate of Furth in the name of appellant as executor, and he took an appeal to this court. He contends that the order of revivor was entered after the time within which the statute authorizes the same, and that the court erred in so doing. Appellee now moves the court to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the order of revivor was not final, the action being still pending, and that the appeal is premature.

The statutes relating to the subject are as follows:

"Sec. 6312. An order to revive an action against the personal representatives of a defendant, or against him and the heirs or devisees of the defendant, cannot be made, unless by consent, until after six months from the qualification of the personal representatives.

"Sec. 6313. An order to revive an action against the representatives or successor of a defendant shall not be made without the consent of such representatives or successor, unless in one year from the time it could have been first made. * * *

"Sec. 6315. When it appears to the court by affidavit that either party to an action has been dead, or, where he sues or is sued as a personal representative, that his powers have ceased for a period so long that the action cannot be revived in the names of his representatives or successor without the consent of both parties, it shall order the action to be stricken from the docket." Kirby's Dig.

The court is of the opinion that the order is not final in the sense that it concludes the rights of the parties to the action, and that the appeal in this case is premature. The order does not end the action, even if it be erroneous, for the action is still pending. The error of reviving the action, if error it be, is like any other erroneous ruling of the court, to be reviewed on appeal from the final decree in the cause. In Ayres v. Anderson-Tully Co. (Ark.) 116 S. W. 199, we held that an order of court vacating a judgment rendered at a former term of the court was a final one and was appealable; this upon the ground that it concluded the rights of the parties in the former judgment which had become final at the lapse of the term, and that the party in whose favor it was rendered had the right to appeal from the subsequent judgment and order disturbing his rights therein. A different question is presented in this case, for here no judgment has ever been rendered which finally concludes the rights of the parties. The action is still pending, and any error committed by the court during the progress of the proceedings may be corrected on appeal, taken when the final decree is entered.

So the appeal is dismissed.

1. STATUTES (§ 161*)—REPEAL BY IMPLICATION.

Where the later of two statutes covers the whole subject-matter of the former, and is evidently intended as a substitute, it will be held to repeal such prior act, though there be no express words to that effect and the old act contains provisions not in the new.

2. ELECTIONS (§ 311*)—PUNISHMENT OF ELECTION OFFICERS—STATUTES—REPEAL.

Act March 4, 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 32), relating to elections, provides, in section 33, that every public officer who shall willfully neglect to perform any duty imposed on him by the act, or do anything forbidden thereby, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by removal from office, or fine or imprisonment, or both. Section 43 provides that any election officer who willfully makes a false count of ballots, or falsely certifies the returns of any election, or steals or destroys any ballot, tally sheet, box, etc., shall be deemed guilty of a felony, punishable by imprisonment, etc. Section 44 provides that any violation of this act by any election officer, etc., for which no punishment is elsewhere specifically prescribed shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable as in this act provided for misdemeanor. Held, that the act repeals by implication Kirby's Dig. § 1667 (being section 21 of the general election law of January 23, 1875 [Laws 1874-75, p. 97]), providing for the punishment of election officers who neglect to perform any of their duties or are guilty of corruption or misbehavior in any matter appertaining to such election, etc.

elector of a certain township in Crawford county, Ark., instituted separate actions in the circuit court of that county against the defendants, C. J. Campbell and Jack Moore, who were judges of election at the general election held on September 14, 1908, to recover the penalty of $200 prescribed by the following statute: "If any judge or clerk of any election, or any other person concerned in the conducting of any election, shall neglect, improperly delay or refuse to perform any of the duties required by law, having undertaken to do so, or shall be guilty of corruption, partiality or manifest misbehavior in any matter or thing appertaining to such election, or shall unduly attempt to influence the election, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of two hundred dollars, to be recovered by indictment, or by action of debt, in the name of any person who may sue for the same." Section 1667, Kirby's Dig. This statute is a section of the general election law enacted January 23, 1875, entitled "An act providing a general election law" (Laws 1874-75, p. 97, § 21). The General Assembly enacted another election law which was approved on March 4, 1891, and was entitled "An act to regulate elections in the state of Arkansas" (Acts 1891, p. 32). It provides, as the title of the act implies, a method of conducting elections, and contains the following sections prescribing penalties:

"Sec. 38. Every public officer, upon whom any duty is imposed by this act, who shall willfully neglect or omit to perform such duty, or who shall do any thing which is by this act forbidden, other than the things specifically enumerated in sections 37 and 43 hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by removal from office, and imprisonment in the county jail not less than six months nor more than twelve months, or by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

"Sec. 43. Any election officer or other person whomsoever who shall willfully make a false count of any election ballots, or falsely or fraudulently certify the returns of any election, or steal, destroy, secrete or otherwise make way with any election ballot, tally sheet, certificate or ballot box, either before or after the closing of the polls, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof, punished by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary not less than two years nor more than seven years."

"Sec. 44. Any violation of this act by any election officer, or other person whomsoever, except a state or county officer, for which no punishment is elsewhere specifically prescribed in this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable as in this act provided for misdemeanors."

The two cases were consolidated, and the trial resulted in favor of plaintiff against the defendants for a recovery of the penalties sued for. On appeal to this court, the contention of the defendants is that the above-quoted sections of the act of March 4, 1891, repealed by implication section 1667 quoted above and taken from the act of January 23, 1875.

The case of Brown v. Haselman, 79 Ark. 213, 95 S. W. 136, was a suit brought against the officers of a school election to recover the penalty under section 1667. The argument was made there, as in this case, that the statute had been repealed by the later enactment. We considered it unnecessary then to pass upon the question, as we held that that section did not apply to school elections. We are convinced, however, that the judgment in that case should have been affirmed, not only on the grounds stated in the opinion, but also on the further ground that the statute had been impliedly repealed by the act of March 4, 1891. Now that the question is squarely presented, we so hold. This court has a number of times decided that, while repeals by implication are not favored, still "where the later of two statutes covers the whole subject-matter of the former, and it is evident that the Legislature intends it as a substitute, the prior act will be held to have been repealed thereby, although there may be no express words to that effect, and there be in the old act provisions not in the new." St. L. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bowman, 76 Ark. 32, 88 S. W. 1033, and cases cited. Now, applying this rule to the question presented, it is evident that the sections quoted above from the act of March 4, 1891, cover fully the ground covered by section 1667, Kirby's Dig., and it is not reasonable to presume that the Legislature intended to leave that act in force. We do not mean to hold that the act of 1891 repeals all the provisions of the act of January 23, 1875, on the subject of general elections. The later act contains no express repeal; but, on the contrary, it expressly leaves in force some of the provisions of the old law. We have no doubt, however, that the section upon which this act is based was repealed.

The judgments rendered against the two defendants are therefore reversed, and the two actions against them are dismissed.

MANEY v. BURKE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. TAXATION (§ 770*)—LAND COMMISSIONER'S DEED—CONSTRUCTION—LAND CONVEYED.

C. purchased an undivided one-half of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, at judicial sale, which was confirmed at November term, 1889. July 10, 1897, C. conveyed the lands to plaintiff. An undivided half of the same section was sold to the state January 29, 1883, under a decree in overdue tax proceedings. An undivided half of the same section was sold, at delinquent tax sale, April 14, 1884, to the state for the nonpayment of the taxes for 1883. October 14, 1889, the Commissioner of State Lands executed to defendant a deed for lands, describing them as the undivided one-half of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, forfeited in 1883, and the undivided one-half of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29 sold to the state at overdue tax sale January 29, 1883. The tax records for 1883 show that the whole of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29 was assessed in the name of J., and in the margin where is usually marked "Paid" was marked "Und. $\frac{1}{2}$." The tax books for 1886 to 1890 show an undivided one-half paid on by J. and one-half left to the state. Held, that the deed of the commissioner conveyed the whole of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29 to defendant; the description of an undivided one-half as forfeited for the nonpayment of taxes for 1883, and an undivided one-half as sold to the state under overdue tax proceedings for a different year, showing that the whole of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, and not a half, was intended to be conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1545, 1672; Dec. Dig. § 776.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 789*)—LAND COMMISSIONER'S DEED—EVIDENCE OF TITLE.

A deed from the Commissioner of State Lands is prima facie evidence of title in the grantee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1536; Dec. Dig. § 789.*]

3. EJECTMENT (§ 86*)—STRENGTH OF DEFENDANT'S TITLE.

Where defendant in ejectment shows prima facie title, plaintiff must overcome such title and show title in himself, as he can only rely on his own title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 244; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

4. LEEVES (§ 27*)—LEEVE TAXES—FORECLOSURE—NATURE OF PROCEEDING.

A foreclosure proceeding to enforce a lien for unpaid levee taxes is not a proceeding in rem against the land, but is an adversary proceeding against the owners, to recover the levee taxes, and, in default of their payment, to have a lien therefor declared upon the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Levees, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

5. EJECTMENT (§ 95*)—TAXATION IN NAME OF PERSON NOT OWNER—OWNERSHIP.

Proof that land was assessed for taxes in the name of one person, and the taxes paid by him, is not sufficient to establish ownership in him so as to sustain a recovery of the land against the holder of a prima facie title in possession, since taxes for general purposes are a charge upon the land, and are not infrequently assessed in the name of one not the owner and paid by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 287; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Phillips County; Hance N. Hutton, Judge.

Action by R. C. Burke against Luke Maney. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

R. W. Nichols and W. G. Dinning, for appellant. Bevins & Mundt and J. H. Stevenson, for appellee.

HART, J. Luke Maney is in possession of a certain tract of land in Phillips county, Ark., under a deed from the State Land Commissioner for the nonpayment of taxes. His deed is dated October 14, 1889. He has been in possession of the land since his deed was executed, and has cleared a part of it, and placed valuable improvements on it. R. C. Burke brought suit in ejectment against him in the Phillips circuit court to recover the land. The suit was commenced October 3, 1901. The statement of facts is as follows: In 1889 the Cotton Belt levee district instituted suit in the Phillips chancery court against the Jacks Real Estate Company for the purpose of enforcing its lien for unpaid levee taxes and obtained judgment against it upon personal service for the amount of the unpaid levee taxes. In default of the payment thereof the commissioner of the chancery court was directed to sell, among other lands, the undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, township 3 S., range 4 E., in Phillips county, Ark., for the purpose of satisfying said indebtedness. Pursuant to the directions of said decree the lands were sold, and H. H. Cage became the purchaser. The sale was duly reported and confirmed by the court at its November term, 1889. On July 10, 1897, Cage conveyed the lands to R. C. Burke. The record shows that the undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ of said section 29 was sold to the state of Arkansas on January 29, 1883, under a decree of the Phillips chancery court in what is generally known as the "overdue tax proceedings." The record also shows that the undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ of said section 29 was sold at delinquent tax sale on April 14, 1884, to the state for the nonpayment of the taxes for 1883. The record also shows that on the 14th day of October, 1889, the Commissioner of State Lands executed a deed to Luke Maney to lands described as follows:

Parts of sec- tion	Sec- tion	Town- ship	Range	Acres	Years forfeited.
Und. $\frac{1}{2}$ S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$	29	3 S.	4 E.	80	1883
Und. $\frac{1}{2}$ S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$	29	3 S.	4 E.	80	Sold to State at overdue tax sale January 29th, '83.

The tax records for 1883 show that the whole of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 29 was assessed in the name of Jacks & Co., and that in the margin, where is usually marked "Paid," was marked "Und. $\frac{1}{2}$." The tax books for 1886 show an undivided one-half paid on by Jacks & Co., and one-half undivided left to the state. It is the same for the years 1887-88-89 and 90, except it was paid on by the Jacks Real Estate Company. The court instructed the jury that the title to the lands in controversy was in the plaintiff, Burke, and directed a verdict for him for the recovery of the land, which was accordingly done. The case is here on appeal, and counsel for Maney predicates error upon the action of the court in giving a peremptory instruction in favor of Burke.

The deed of the Commissioner of State Lands conveyed the whole of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29 to Maney. The description as given in the deed is copied in the statement of facts. It shows that an undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 29 was sold to the state at overdue tax sale on January 29, 1883, and an undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 29 was forfeited to the state for the nonpayment of the taxes of 1883. The description contained in the deed shows that the forfeiture for nonpayment of taxes occurred in different years. That being so, prima facie, the title to the whole quarter section passed to the state, and the deed of the Land Commissioner in like manner conveyed the whole quarter section to Maney. The deed of the Land Commissioner describing an undivided one-half as forfeited for the nonpayment of taxes for 1883 and an undivided one-half as sold to the state under overdue tax proceedings for a different year shows that the whole of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 29, and not an undivided half thereof, was intended to be conveyed.

The deed of the Commissioner of State Lands to Maney was prima facie evidence of title in him. Allen v. Phillips, 87 Ark. 185, 112 S. W. 403; Cracraft v. Meyer, 76 Ark. 450, 88 S. W. 1027; Doniphan Lumber Co. v. Reid, 82 Ark. 31, 100 S. W. 69. It is well settled in this state that a plaintiff in ejectment must rely upon his own title. Allen v. Phillips, supra. This rule has been announced so frequently by this court that there is no need for a further citation of authority to support it. Hence Burke, to recover, must not only overcome this prima facie title in Maney, but must show title in himself.

The levee foreclosure under which he claims title, as far as the record of that proceeding is shown herein, was not a proceeding in rem against the land, but was an adversary proceeding against the Jacks Real Estate Company to recover the levee taxes, and in default of their payment to have a lien therefor declared upon the land. It is contended by counsel for Burke that the forfeiture to the state at delinquent tax sale in 1884 for the nonpayment of the taxes of 1883 was void because the land was assessed in the name of Jacks & Co. or the Jacks Real Estate Company, and that the taxes were paid by that company. Proof that the lands were assessed for taxes, and that the taxes were paid by that company for 1883, is not sufficient to establish ownership in that company at the time of the forfeiture, upon which to sustain an action for the recovery of the land against the holder of the prima facie legal title and in possession of the land. Taxes for general purposes are a charge upon the land and are not against the owner. It is a matter of common knowledge that land is frequently assessed and the taxes paid in the name of another person than the owner. Hence it would be strange, indeed, to hold that proof that the land was assessed and the taxes paid in the name of one person would be sufficient proof upon which he might base an action for the recovery of the land against one who holds the prima facie legal title.

We are of the opinion that the court erred in instructing the jury that the title to the land was in the plaintiff, Burke, and that they should return a verdict in his favor for the recovery of the land; and, for this error, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

ARKANSAS SMOKELESS COAL CO. v. PIPPINS.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 109, 217*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—VICIOUS ANIMAL—KNOWLEDGE OF MASTER—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Where a master negligently furnishes his servant with a mule of such a vicious nature that the servant is liable to be injured because of its viciousness, the master will be liable, if he knew, or could have known by ordinary care, of the vicious propensities of the animal, unless the servant knew that the animal was dangerous, but continues to use it, in which case he assumes the risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 204, 585; Dec. Dig. §§ 109, 217.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 118*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER.

Plaintiff was employed in a mine at driving a coal car hauled by a mule. In driving down a steep grade in an entry or passageway he was kicked by the mule and knocked off the car and between it and the walls of the entry. The wall of the entry was about one foot from the car track. Held, that as the entry was sufficiently wide to permit the car to pass in safety, and as it could not be reasonably anticipated by the employer that the employes would be injured by being kicked or otherwise falling between the cars and the walls, he was not negligent in the construction of the entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 209; Dec. Dig. § 118; * Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 219.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—DUTY OF MASTER—SAFE APPLIANCES.

A master is not bound to furnish absolutely safe appliances, but only to exercise reasonable care to furnish such appliances as are suitable for the purposes for which they are intended, and to exercise ordinary care to see that they are kept in such condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 173; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action by a servant for personal injuries, the burden is on the servant to show that the master was negligent.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County; Daniel Hon, Judge.

Action by J. J. Pippins against the Arkansas Smokeless Coal Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

J. J. Pippins instituted this action to recover damages for personal injuries of a permanent nature sustained by him while in the service of the Smokeless Coal Company in consequence of the alleged negligence of the defendant company. J. J. Pippins was employed by the coal company on the 14th day of January, 1908. He first worked for the defendant company as a digger of coal. Then he was put to work as a driver. When the coal is mined, it is hauled on a small car on a track. The tracks lead from the room into the entry, and from there to what is called the "parting." The cars are carried along the track just as coal cars are carried on a railroad track; the motive power being a mule. It is the duty of the driver to hitch the mule to the car or cars and drive to the parting, where the cars are hoisted from the mine. He then unhitches the mule from the loaded cars, and hitches him to empty cars to carry back to the room. It is a part of his duty to sprag the cars. This consists in putting iron or wooden stakes about 1½ feet long between the spokes of the wheel and the body of the car to check the speed of the car while going downgrade. In other words, spragging is the act of applying brakes to the coal cars. On the day Pippins was injured he had been engaged in driving for about two hours, and was making his third trip. The mule was hauling two cars, and Pippins was seated on the front end next to the mule. The cars were going down a steep grade in the west third entry or passageway. Pippins looked to see if his "buddy" was behind him. He then looked around at the mule. Being afraid that the cars would run on the mule, he hallooed at him. When he did this, the mule kicked him with both feet, knocking him off the car and between it and the walls of the entry. The wall of the entry was about one foot from the car track. Pippins' body was so badly crushed that the lower part of it became wholly paralyzed. His physician says that he will never be able to do any kind of physical work, and will not likely live many years longer. Pippins was 34 years old at the time he was injured. He predicates his right of recovery on the alleged negligence of the coal company in furnishing him with a vicious mule to work and in the defective condition of the entry. Pippins recovered judgment against the coal company for $2,000, and the case is here on appeal.

Jesse A. Harp and Geo. W. Dodd, for appellant. A. J. Koenigstein, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). Counsel for appellant insist that the court erred in not directing a verdict in favor of appellant. The law in regard to the negligence of the master in furnishing his servant with a vicious animal to work stands on the same footing as furnishing him a dangerous appliance. The rule is aptly stated by Mr. Thompson, as follows: "But, if a master furnishes for the use of the servant a horse or other animal of such a vicious nature that the servant is liable to be injured in consequence of its viciousness, the master will be liable if he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the vicious propensities of the animal, unless the servant knew that the animal is dangerous, but nevertheless continues to use it, in which case he assumes the risk of injury from it." 4 Thompson on Negligence, § 404. To the same effect, see 26 Cyc. 113, and cases cited in note 80; 1 Labatt on Master & Servant, § 206. In the case at bar there was sufficient evidence adduced at the trial on the part of the appellee from which the jury might infer that the animal was of a vicious nature, and that that fact was not known to appellee; but there is no evidence which would warrant the jury in finding that the coal company knew that the mule was vicious, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known it. All the employes of the company who testified on the subject except one said that the mule was not vicious. One of the employes testified as above stated to facts from which the jury might have inferred that the mule was vicious, but he was not shown to have been the keeper of the mule, or to have been in such position that it could be said that his knowledge was the master's knowledge.

2. On the question of the defective condition of the entry, we are of the opinion that under the facts disclosed by the record the appellee is not entitled to recover, and that this case in that respect is controlled by the principles announced in the case of St. Louis & San Francisco Rd. Co. v. Hill, 79 Ark. 76, 94 S. W. 914. In that case a train was passing over a bridge of the railroad company, and the bridge gave way and wrecked the train. A brakeman on the train was killed. The engine was derailed before it reached the bridge, and there was evidence tending to show that the bridge was sufficient to sustain the train had it remained upon the track, and that the derailment of the train caused the bridge to give way. The court said: "The bridge in question was constructed solely for the passage of defendant's trains on the track over Crowder creek. There was evidence tending to prove that it was sufficient for that purpose. There is no evidence to show, and plaintiff does not contend, that the derailment of the train was owing to defects of the bridge. That being true, the derailment did not prove that the defendant was negligent in the construction or maintenance of the same." So, in the case at bar, it may be said that the entry was sufficiently wide to permit the passage in safety of the mine cars, and it could not be reasonably anticipated by the coal company that its employes would be injured by being kicked, or otherwise falling, between its cars and the walls of the entry. The case at bar does not come within the rule announced in McNamara v. Logan, 100 Ala. 187, 14 South. 173.

There the servant was injured while engaged in spragging the cars. The testimony showed that it was his duty to walk along beside the cars and to sprag them when they started down a steep grade. The entry was too narrow for that purpose at the place where the servant was injured while engaged in the performance of his duties of spragging or blocking the cars, and the court held that, the evidence being in conflict as to whether the entry was dangerously narrow, or the cars dangerously near the wall at that point, the question of negligence was for the jury. In the present case there was no testimony to show that it was the duty of the driver to alight from the cars to sprag them. On the contrary, the uncontradicted testimony shows that the drivers always rode on the cars while engaged in the performance of their duties. Under the testimony in the case at bar, there was no necessity for sufficient room between the sides of the car and the walls of the entry for the use of the driver in spragging, and consequently there was no defect in the condition of the entry where the injury occurred. A master is not bound to furnish absolutely safe appliances, but only to exercise reasonable care to furnish such appliances as are suitable for the purposes for which they are intended, and to exercise ordinary care to see that they are kept in such condition.

There is no presumption of negligence in a case like this. The burden of showing that the appellant was negligent in regard to the matters alleged in appellee's complaint was upon him. Having failed to establish negligence in regard to either of the allegations of his complaint, the verdict of the jury is without evidence to support it.

Therefore the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

MABRY et al. v. KETTERING et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 19*)—MOOT QUESTION.

Where plaintiffs only prayed that defendants be restrained from developing certain photographic plates and from publishing or using the photographs, and in their brief on appeal admitted that this had been done, the case presented a moot question, so far as the rights of the parties were concerned, which would not be determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 63, 64; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. TORTS (§ 8*)—RIGHT OF PRIVACY—PHOTOGRAPHS OF CRIMINALS.

Officers of the law are entitled to take and use the photographs of persons confined in jail on a criminal charge, for the purpose of identification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Torts, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 96*)—RIGHT OF PRIVACY—PHOTOGRAPHS OF CRIMINALS.

Officers of the law being entitled to take and use photographs of persons in jail charged with crime for purposes of identification, the persons photographed cannot maintain a suit for an injunction for the use of the photographs, without showing specifically that they are to be used improperly.

Appeal from Pulaski Chancery Court; John E. Martineau, Chancellor.

Action by J. C. Mabry and others against Ralph Kettering and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed. See, also, 117 S. W. 746.

Bradshaw, Rhoton & Helm, for appellants. Wm. G. Whipple and Powell Clayton, for appellees.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Mabry and others instituted this suit in chancery against Kettering and others, praying for an injunction restraining the latter from developing plates of the photographs of the plaintiffs, who were then confined in jail under criminal charges, and from "publishing or uttering, or causing to be uttered or published, said photographs, or any photographs, of these plaintiffs." The question involved is fully set forth in the opinion of this court delivered on the motion to dissolve the temporary injunction. Mabry v. Kettering (Ark.) 117 S. W. 746. A demurrer was sustained by the chancellor to the complaint, and the plaintiffs have appealed to this court.

In our former opinion we said that "the complaint, when it comes to be considered by this court on final hearing of the cause, will present an interesting question concerning what is now termed by modern authorities the 'right of privacy,' or the right of an individual to invoke the jurisdiction of a chancery court to restrain an improper use of his photograph without his consent." We were probably too hasty in stating that this question would arise on the final hearing of the case here; for on further consideration we do not find it necessary to a decision of this case for us to go into the question referred to.

The plaintiffs only asked that the defendants be restrained from developing the plates and from publishing or using the photographs. Now they admit in their brief that this has been done. So the case only presents a moot question, so far as the rights of the parties are concerned. Moreover, the plaintiffs allege in their complaint that they are confined in jail on a criminal charge; and, as we held in the former opinion that the officers had a right to use the photographs for the purpose of identification, the prayer of the complaint asked for too much in asking that they be restrained from using the plates altogether. The complaint does not point out specifically any improper use to be made of the photographs. Therefore the defendants having the right to use them for a legitimate purpose, and having already done so, the plaintiffs have no right to restrain them without showing specifically that the photographs are to be used improperly.

It is true that it is alleged in the complaint that the photographs were taken by the defendants "for the avowed purpose of developing said plates into photographs, as these plaintiffs believe and allege, for the purpose of having said photographs placed in what is known as the 'rogues' gallery'"; but they fail to state what the rogues' gallery consists of, and we cannot take judicial cognizance thereof. For ought we know to the contrary, it may be some legitimate method of identification of criminals, or those charged with crime; and we have held that the photographs of accused persons may be used for such purpose.

We conclude, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to no relief on the showing made, and the decree is therefore affirmed.

ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO. v. CORMAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1900.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 51*)—DEATH (§ 31*)—STATUTES—BENEFICIARIES.

Kirby's Dig. § 6289, provides that, where death shall have been caused by a tort, and the injured party could have sued therefor if he had not died, then the tort-feasor who would have been liable except for the death of the injured person shall still be liable in spite of such death, even though the death be caused under circumstances amounting to a felony. Section 6290 provides that an action for wrongful death shall be brought by and in the name of decedent's personal representative, and, if there be none, then by the heirs at law; the amount recovered being for the exclusive benefit of the widow and next of kin of the decedent, to be distributed in the proportion provided by law in relation to the distribution of personal property left by persons dying intestate. Held, that such statute creates two causes of action—one for the benefit of the estate to recover damages which the decedent could have recovered had he survived the accident, and the other for the benefit of the widow and next of kin for the damages which they sustained by the death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 51;* Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 38, 40, 42; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. DEATH (§ 35*)—NATURE OF ACTION—TRANSITORY ACTION—JURISDICTION.

An action by a decedent's widow and next of kin for his wrongful death is transitory, and may be maintained in a state other than that in which the accident occurred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

3. DEATH (§ 8*)—RIGHTS OF PARTIES—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

The rights of the parties to an action for wrongful death must be determined in accordance with the law of the state where the injury occurred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 36, 52, 121, 133; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

4. DEATH (§ 31*)—WHO MAY SUE—WIDOW AS HEIR.

A widow is one of the heirs at law of her husband within Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, providing that an action for wrongful death shall be brought by the heirs at law of the decedent, the amount recovered to be for the exclusive benefit of the widow and next of kin.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

5. DEATH (§ 41*)—ACTIONS—PARTIES PLAINTIFF—"HEIRS AT LAW."

Where decedent was survived by a widow and one child, such widow and child were his only heirs at law within Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, providing for an action for wrongful death to be brought by the heirs at law of the deceased person, and were therefore the only necessary parties plaintiff.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 278*)—DEATH OF SERVANT—RAILROADS—DANGEROUS TRACK—DERAILING DEVICE.

In an action for death of a railroad brakeman in a collision between the engine on which he was riding and certain ballast cars left on a storage track, which had rolled down the descending grade onto the main track by reason of defective brakes and a failure to block the wheels, evidence held to warrant a finding of defendant's negligence in failing to install a derailing or other device to prevent the escape of such cars.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 963; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 226*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMED RISK.

A servant assumes the risk of all dangers from the ordinary incidents of the service, but does not assume the risk of dangers arising from the negligent acts of his employer, unless, after becoming aware thereof and appreciating the danger, he exposes himself to it by continuing in the service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 659, 660, 662; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 217*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—RAILROADS—DERAILING DEVICE—ASSUMED RISK—KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER.

A railroad brakeman whose duties did not limit his activities to any particular part of the railroad's right of way was not bound to know that the company had not provided a derailing or other safety device at a particularly dangerous point where a storage track connected with the main line on a descending grade to prevent a collision between trains on the main track and cars set out on the storage track which might run down the grade onto the main track because the defective brakes with which they were equipped were insufficient to hold them, and hence a brakeman in a train on the main track did not assume the risk of injuries sustained in such collision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 577, 578, 589; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 201*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER—CONCURRENCE NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANT.

Where a railroad brakeman was injured because of the railroad company's negligence in failing to provide a derailer or other safety device at a dangerous switch, he was entitled to recover, though the negligence of his fellow servants concurred with that of the railroad company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 521, 530; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Franklin County; Jephtha H. Evans, Judge.

Action by Emma Corman and another against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Murray L. Corman was a brakeman in the employ of the defendant railway company, and was killed by the derailment of an engine on which he was riding in the discharge of his duties on August 9, 1907, at Wagoner, I. T. The engine was pulling a local freight train and was approaching Wagoner, and was within the yard limits. Corman was on the running board of the engine, preparing to go down on the pilot for the purpose of operating a switch for the train to go in upon a siding. There was another track used as a passing and storage track—principally the latter—and a few minutes before Corman's engine reached the north end of the track some ballast cars standing on this track were struck and put in motion by other cars handled by the crew of another train. These cars rolled down the descending grade of the storage track to the end and out upon the main track, and collided with Corman's engine, while he was on it, overturning the engine and crushing him to death. This passing and storage track was about 2,500 feet long, and had a decided grade in each direction; the summit of the grade being about in the middle. The grade each way was steep enough that cars when once put in motion would roll to the end. There was no derailing device of any kind at the end of this track to prevent cars from rolling upon the main track. There were 15 or 20 or 25 of the ballast cars standing on the storage track, and the brakes on them were not in working order. When they were put in motion, a brakeman who was a member of the other train crew mounted the string of cars and tried to put on brakes so as to stop them, but, on account of the brakes not working, he failed to accomplish this. It is shown that in loading the ballast cars with a steam shovel gravel would get in the ratchets of the brakes, thereby preventing their use. It is also shown that the brakes on some of them were out of working order in other respects.

The present action was instituted in the circuit court of Crawford county by Emma Corman, the widow, and Murray Corman, an infant child and sole heir at law of Murray L. Corman, deceased, to recover damages sustained by them as such widow and next of kin on account of the death of said decedent. There was no administration upon the estate. The complaint sets forth two charges of negligence against the defendant which are alleged to have been the proximate cause of Corman's death: One, that the defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to have a derailing device at the end of the storage track so as to prevent cars from rolling down the grade from that track upon the main track; and the other that the defendant was negligent in permitting cars on which the brakes were out of repair to be left on the storage track. The defendant in its answer denied the charges of negligence, and pleaded that Corman was guilty of contributory negligence, and also that he had assumed the risk.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, assessing the damages at $10,000. Judgment was rendered accordingly, and the defendant appealed. Other facts tending to explain the points at issue will be stated in the opinion.

Lovick P. Miles, for appellant. Robt. J. White, for appellees.

McCULLOCH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). It is contended that the plaintiff cannot maintain this action, and that it can be maintained only by an administrator of the decedent's estate. This question was attempted to be raised by a demurrer to the complaint on the alleged ground that the plaintiff was without legal capacity to sue. It was also shown by evidence that the parents of said decedent were living, and the contention is made that they might, as such parents, claim damages by reason of the death of their son, and that the suit should therefore have been brought by an administrator. The statutes of Arkansas (sections 6280, 6290, Kirby's Dig.), embodying the principles of the English Statute known as Lord Campbell's act, were in force in the Indian Territory when the injury in question occurred. One section of this statute reads as follows: "Every such action shall be brought by, and in the name of, the personal representative of such deceased person, and if there be no personal representatives, then the same may be brought by the heirs at law of such deceased person; and the amount recovered in every such action shall be for the exclusive benefit of the widow and next of kin of such deceased person, and shall be distributed to such widow and next of kin in the proportion provided by law in relation to the distribution of personal property left by persons dying intestate; and, in every such action, the jury may give such damages as they shall deem a fair and just compensation, with reference to the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death, to the wife and next of kin of such deceased person. Provided, every such action shall be commenced within two years after the death of such person." Act May 2, 1890, c. 182, § 31, 26 Stat. 94. This statute creates two causes of action—one for the benefit of the estate, to recover damages which the decedent could have recovered had he survived the accident, and the other for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, for the damages which they sustained by reason of the death. Davis v. Railway Co., 53 Ark. 117, 13 S. W. 801, 7 L. R. A. 283. The present action falls within the last-named class. It is a transitory action, and can be maintained in this state, but the rights of the parties must be determined in accordance with the law of the place where the injury occurred. St. L., I. M. & Sou. R. Co. v. Halst, 71 Ark. 258, 72 S. W. 893, 100 Am. St. Rep. 65.

Now, the statute provides that, "if there be no personal representatives, then the action may be brought by the heirs at law of such deceased person." Who, then, constitute the heirs at law? The widow is one within the meaning of the statute, for she receives a distributive portion of the recovery. McBride v. Berman, 79 Ark. 62, 94 S. W. 913. The child is the only other heir at law, and by the plain letter of the statute is the only other person who is a necessary party to the action. Nothing is found in the decision in the case of McBride v. Berman, supra, which militates against this conclusion. The action in that case was instituted by the widow alone, without joining the collateral heirs at law, there being no children of the decedent. Was the defendant company guilty of negligence in failing to install a derailing device so as to keep the cars from rolling off the storage track, and, if so, did Corman assume the risk of the danger to which he was exposed by reason thereof? In considering the question of negligence, all the facts must be kept in mind. This was a track used, not only for trains to pass, but it was used mainly for the storage of cars. On it a large number of cars were stored daily, and among them was a considerable number of empty ballast cars with brakes out of order. It was the custom to store these cars there, and the ordinary use of them in loading them with dirt and gravel for ballast necessarily put the handbrakes out of service on account of gravel lodging in the ratchets of the brakes. These cars were habitually left on the track in bunches and on a steep grade, which would cause them, when once put in motion, to roll to the end of the storage track and onto the main track, unless brakes were put on. The ordinary condition in which the brakes were left made it impossible for cars to be stopped when once put in motion, for it appears from the evidence that on the particular occasion in question a brakeman of the other train crew made every effort to stop the cars, but failed because the handbrakes could not be worked.

We are clearly of the opinion that these facts presented a situation which warranted the jury in finding that defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to exercise reasonable care to furnish a safe place to its employees at which to do their accustomed work. The situation thus described was a dangerous one—at least, the jury was warranted in finding that to be so—and defendant did not discharge its full duty to its employees merely by prescribing a system of rules requiring trainmen when they stored cars on the track to see that the brakes on them were set or that the wheels were blocked. Some device ought to have been installed to prevent the escape of these cars from the storage track if they should be put in motion, for it was obvious to any one that, when once started down the grade, they would roll to the end, and go out on the main track where they would be likely to collide with trains. This is precisely what occurred when Corman was killed, and it was a catastrophe which could have been anticipated by an employer who was exercising the care of a reasonably prudent person for the safety of employees.

Nor can we hold as a matter of law, which learned counsel for appellant insist we should hold, that under the circumstances of this case Corman assumed the risk. That was a question of fact for the jury to determine, instead of a question of law for the court to decide, as the evidence presented a condition of affairs from which different minds might reach different conclusions. An employee by his contract of service impliedly agrees to assume and bear the risk of all dangers from the ordinary incidents of the service, but these do not include the dangers arising from negligent acts of his employer, unless, after he becomes aware of such negligence and appreciates the danger arising therefrom, he exposes himself to it by continuing in the service. Of course, if a person of ordinary intelligence is aware of a danger, he is presumed to appreciate it; but it does not necessarily follow that because one becomes aware of a negligent act he appreciates the danger arising therefrom. This may, under some circumstances, be a question of fact to be determined by a trial jury, unless the danger is obvious, in which case a person of average experience and intelligence, being shown to be aware of the negligent act, is presumed to appreciate an obvious danger arising therefrom. But it is not correct to say that an employee assumes the risk of danger arising from negligent acts of his employer merely because he could by the exercise of ordinary care have discovered the defect brought about by such negligence. This might constitute contributory negligence of an employee in failing to discover a defect, but it would not be an assumption of risk, for the doctrine of assumed risk is based upon and grows out of contract; and, before it can be said that the employee has assumed the risk of danger caused by his employer's negligence, it must appear that he was aware of the negligence and appreciated the danger. St. L. I. M. & Sou. R. Co. v. Birch (Ark.) 117 S. W. 243; C., O. & G. Ry. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 92 S. W. 244, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837.

We are not now speaking of the ordinary conditions of the service as existing when the employé took service, for of these he must take notice. When he enters into a contract to perform service for his employer, he agrees to work at the place expressly or impliedly designated in the contract, and with the tools and appliances regularly furnished by the master for use, "so far as these things were open and obvious, so that they could readily be ascertained by such examination and inquiry as one would be expected to make if he wished to know the nature and perils of the service in which he was about to engage." Rooney v. Sewall & Day Cordage Co., 161 Mass. 153, 36 N. E. 789; C., O. & G. R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 82 Ark. 11, 100 S. W. 83. A familiar illustration of this is the general use or failure to use unblocked frogs in the operation of railroads. It is obvious to any employé whether or not the plan of blocking frogs at switches has been adopted, and one who takes service for the purpose of engaging in the operation of trains must take notice of that which is obvious to all. Learned counsel insist that, because we have held in C., O. & G. R. Co. v. Thompson, supra, and in other cases, that a railroad employé must take notice of the use of unblocked frogs, we should hold, in necessary consequence, that he must take notice of the failure to use a derailing device on each side track along the entire line of road where they work. This does not follow, for we think it would be unreasonable and unjust to say as a matter of law that railroad trainmen must take notice and be deemed to have contracted to assume the risk of every defect existing along the entire line of road which is obvious to one working at the particular place where it exists. To illustrate: To a switchman working daily in a certain yard the defective condition of a certain switch would be obvious; but not so to a brakeman who passes through the yard on his regular trip without using this particular switch. Nor is the failure, generally as a plan of operation, to use derailing devices, comparable with the use of unblocked frogs. If the unblocking of frogs is due to the general plan of construction which is adopted along the line of the road, an employé would have to take notice of the fact of the general plan of construction adopted; but the exercise of ordinary care might require the use of a derailing device at some particularly dangerous place, even though the general plan of construction did not include the use of any such device, and an employé who is bound to take notice of the general plan of construction would not necessarily be bound to assume that a device especially needed at a particularly dangerous place had not been installed. It would be a question of fact for the determination of a jury, under all the circumstances of the case, whether or not the employé knew that the particular device was not used at the particular place.

But it does not even appear in this case from the evidence that derailing devices were not adopted at all on the line of road along which Corman worked. On the contrary, it affirmatively appears that they were used at some places along the line. It is true that the evidence shows that they were not used generally at side tracks; but this track was used mainly for storage of cars, and the grade was exceptionally steep. It was an extraordinarily dangerous place, a place of unusual peril to crews of passing trains, on account of the circumstances described. Whether Corman knew that no derailing device was in use at this place, or whether he should have inferred from the fact that they were not used at other passing tracks that none was used at that place, was peculiarly a question for the determination of a jury. There was no direct evidence at all that Corman actually knew that no derailer was used there, no evidence that he ever used that track in his work, nor any as to the length of time he had been working along that division of the road. He was not using the track at the time of the injury. We conclude, therefore, that the evidence warranted a finding that Corman did not assume the risk.

We are also of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the submission to the jury of the question whether or not the defendant was guilty of negligence in allowing the ballast cars with defective brakes to be habitually left standing on this storage track where there was no derailer. Even if the negligence of the fellow servants of Corman concurred with that of the master in causing the injury, the latter is responsible, for it is plain that, but for the absence of the derailing device, the injury would not have occurred. Chicago Mill & Lbr. Co. v. Cooper (Ark.) 119 S. W. 672. The giving and refusal of instructions is complained of as error, but it is not necessary to discuss these assignments further than to say that the several rulings of the court and the instructions referred to violate no principle herein announced, and we find no error in them.

Judgment affirmed.

SEBASTIAN v. ROSE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 12, 1909.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 57*)—JURISDICTION.

Divorce proceedings are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the chancery courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 198; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 209*)—DECREE FOR ALIMONY—ENFORCEMENT—SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS—CONTEMPT.

While under the direct provisions of Ky. St. 1909, § 1663 (Russell's St. § 154), a judgment in chancery for money or other specified thing may be enforced by any appropriate writ allowable on a judgment at law, under subsection 2, providing that nothing herein shall prevent the carrying of a judgment into execution according to the ancient chancery practice, circuit courts have all the powers of the English chancery courts, and may as an incident thereto summarily enforce their decrees by attachment and imprisonment, and hence payment of the balance of an alimony decree could be enforced by motion for a rule to show cause against punishment for contempt for nonpayment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 245*)—DECREE FOR ALIMONY—MODIFICATION.

Ky. St. § 2123 (Russell's St. § 73), permitting the court on final judgment to make orders for the care and maintenance of minor children, and, at any time afterward, upon petition of either parent, to revise on alter the same, contemplates further control by chancery courts over divorce decrees awarding alimony, so that the court granting the divorce may modify the decree by enlarging, lessening, or suspending the allowance of alimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 692; Dec. Dig. § 245.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 177*)—ABSOLUTE DIVORCE—APPEAL.

A decree of absolute divorce is final, and cannot be reviewed on appeal by the trial court; only divorces from bed and board being subject to retrial under the direct provisions of Civ. Code Prac. § 427.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 563; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

5. DIVORCE (§ 169*)—DECREE—CONSTRUCTION—"FILED AWAY."

A recital in a divorce decree that a part of the judgment for alimony was paid by defendant, and, that the case was "filed away," was, in effect, keeping control of the case to be redocketed upon notice; the parties not having been dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 551; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2764-2770.]

6. DIVORCE (§ 152*)—DECREE—ON AGREEMENT.

While a defendant in a divorce action may refuse to defend under an agreement with plaintiff, the decree of divorce cannot be the subject of agreement, but is the court's action upon the allegations and proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 514; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

7. DIVORCE (§ 239*)—NEW TRIAL—AWARD OF ALIMONY.

While a new trial cannot be granted after entry of a decree of absolute divorce, and the judgment is final unless annulled upon petition of both parties under Civ. Code Prac. § 426, a new trial may be granted upon the question of allowing or refusing alimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 683; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

8. DIVORCE (§ 280*)—APPEAL—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—ALIMONY.

Judgments allowing or refusing alimony are reviewable on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 764; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

9. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 101*)—AUTHORITY—COMPROMISE—RECEIVING LESS AMOUNT THAN JUDGMENT.

An attorney in a divorce action is without authority to compromise by accepting a less amount of alimony than awarded by the decree in satisfaction thereof, without express authority of his client; such compromise being voidable at the client's option.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. § 215; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

10. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 103*)—AUTHORITY—RATIFICATION BY CLIENT.

Where an attorney compromised a suit without authority by accepting a less amount of alimony than awarded his client by the judgment, the client, upon learning of the act, must either ratify or disaffirm it, and, on disaffirming, must occupy the same position as before the compromise, and cannot at the same time deny the attorney's authority and claim the benefits of the compromise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. § 154; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

11. DIVORCE (§ 286*)—APPEAL—ALIMONY—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

On appeal from an order denying a motion for rule to show cause why defendant should not be compelled to pay the balance of alimony awarded plaintiff in a divorce action, the question whether plaintiff is entitled to alimony is not open, the only question being the amount thereof; defendant claiming that judgment for the amount awarded thereby was fraudulently or inadvertently entered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 769, 770; Dec. Dig. § 286; Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 598.]

12. DIVORCE (§ 240*)—ALIMONY—CONSIDERATIONS IN AWARDING.

The dependent condition of defendant's abandoned wife, the needs of his infant child, defendant's wealth when the action was begun as well as when the award was made, and his earning capacity and reasonable future expectancy and probable ability to pay alimony, should all be considered in determining the amount of alimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 675-678; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Owsley County.

"To be officially reported."

Motion by Daisy D. Sebastian against W. C. Rose for a rule to show cause why defendant should not be punished for contempt for failure to pay the balance of an award of alimony by a judgment in a divorce action. From a judgment denying the motion, and enjoining the collection of the balance of such alimony, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

Upon his marriage he took his bride to his father's dwelling to reside. A month later he abandoned her, leaving her without means of support. She was compelled to return to her father's home, where she resided till his death in 1907. March, 1902, after the separation, she gave birth to a son, who is still living so far as the record shows. In 1902 she brought this suit against her husband for divorce and alimony, asking also that she be given the permanent custody of the child, and that she be restored to her maiden name. Her father was a lawyer, a man of high social and professional standing, but possessed of moderate means. He had other children also. In appellant's suit for divorce she joined as defendants the parents and brothers of appellee, charging that her husband had conveyed and transferred his property to them in fraud of her rights, and to defeat her action for alimony. Appellee did not file an answer in the case. Appellant introduced evidence in support of her claim. It showed her right to a divorce under the statute on the ground of abandonment. As to the alleged transfer of property the evidence was very meager. A judgment was entered in the case on May 14, 1903, granting to appellant an absolute divorce from appellee, restoring her to her maiden name, and adjudging her the custody and control of the child. She was also adjudged $1500 as alimony, and $50 as counsel fee in the case. The judgment concludes: "Thereupon came G. B. Rose and paid $500 on the judgment to the plaintiff, and $50 to John C. Eversole, and this case is fled away."

G. B. Rose was the father of appellee. John C. Eversole was an attorney in the case for appellant. Appellant's action against G. B. Rose and his wife and sons concerning appellee's property was dismissed. On December 11, 1907, appellant filed a motion (of which due notice was given to appellee) for a rule against appellee to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court for his failure to pay the balance of the judgment above named. Appellee responded that he ought not to pay any part of the balance, because the judgment was entered by the fraud or mistake of appellant's counsel (her father having been one of her attorneys in the suit for divorce and alimony); that the judgment was in fact a compromise of the suit; that appellee had a valid defense to the action, involving matter that would have been humiliating or disgraceful to her if disclosed, and that, upon her father's being advised of the fact, he assented to the compromise, and induced appellant to likewise agree to it; that the agreement was that appellee was to pay appellant $500 only as alimony, and the $50 counsel fee, but that as a salve to her feelings the judgment was to recite that she was adjudged $1,500 as alimony, all of which was to be indorsed satisfied upon the payment of $500 and the $50 attorney fee; that counsel relied upon appellant's father, James M. Sebastian, one of her counsel, to have the proper orders entered, but that he failed to do so through fraud or oversight. Appellant replied, denying the authority of her father to make the compromise of $500, and denied that he did so. She denied that appellee had any defense to her action of divorce, and denied that it involved her moral conduct. Upon this issue the motion was tried. The evidence is that James M. Sebastian acted as attorney for appellant in the divorce case; that while Mr. John C. Eversole was also counsel Mr. Sebastian was the senior and managing attorney; that he did agree to take $500 in full settlement of his daughter's alimony, and upon his reporting that she had consented to it the $500 was paid, and the judgment entered. The evidence also shows that appellant did not authorize the settlement and knew nothing of it until it was disclosed in the response filed upon this motion. There was no evidence introduced or offered impugning appellant's conduct or character. Thereupon the circuit court adjudged that the motion be denied, and that the collection of the balance of the judgment be perpetually enjoined. It is from that judgment that this appeal is prosecuted.

Divorce proceedings in this state come within the exclusive cognizance of courts of chancery jurisdiction. Judgments in chancery may be enforced by any appropriate writ allowed for the enforcement of judgments at law. Section 1663, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 154). But it is provided by subsection 2, § 1663, that "nothing in this article shall prevent either party from proceeding to carry an order or judgment of court into execution according to ancient practice of courts of chancery." The circuit courts of this state have all power anciently vested in the English Courts of Chancery. Rebhan v. Fuhrman, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 17, 50 S. W. 976. Those courts had, and circuit courts of Kentucky now have, the power, as an incident of their chancery jurisdiction, to enforce obedience to their orders and decrees by summary mode, attachment, and imprisonment. Said this court in Ballard v. Caperton, 2 Metc. 412: "This power belongs of necessity to the court, that its judgments and orders may be carried into execution and not remain powerless, and that its dignity and right to respect may be preserved by prompt punishment of contumacy." The practice of proceeding by rule in such cases is seemingly sustained by Evans v. Stewart, 38 S. W. 697, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 941, and Tyler v. Tyler, 90 Ky. 31, 34 S. W. 898, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 1341. Furthermore, the statute contemplates further control by courts of chancery over their decrees in cases where alimony has been adjudged (section 2123, Ky. St. [Russell's St. § 731] for, as observed in Logan v. Logan, 2 B. Mon. 150: "If hereafter the circuit judge shall be satisfied that this allowance is either inadequate or superfluous, he will, of course, modify it by enlargement, curtailment, or suspension altogether, according to circumstances, retaining, as he must, the control of the case for that purpose, and for the benevolent purpose also of keeping open the door of ultimate reconciliation." The original decree in this case "filing the case away" was, in effect, keeping control of the case, to be redocketed upon notice, as the parties were not dismissed. The decree of divorce is final. It may not be reviewed on appeal, or a new trial granted by the trial court. Divorces a mensa et thoro may be retried in the circuit court (section 427, Civ. Code Prac.; McCracken v. McCracken, 109 Ky. 706, 60 S. W. 720, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1448), but in no other. Hence we are precluded, as, was the circuit court, from re-examining the grounds of the judgment for divorce in this case, in so far as that judgment granted the divorce, even if there was an issue upon that point. But there is not. The abandonment of appellant by her husband appears to have been a cruel act, wholly unexplained, and without mitigation. The solemn and sacred vows of the altar, the highest form of contract, the most important social relation, were forgotten by the bridegroom ere the honeymoon had waned; and it seems even the pride of paternity was not enough to move to compassion a nature insensible to the demands of conjugal obligation.

Grounds for divorce may not be confessed. They must be proved. Section 422, Civ. Code Prac. They cannot legally be the subject of agreement. Not the consent of dissatisfied parties, but the judgment of the courts alone, may dissolve the marital relation. True, a defendant to an action for divorce may decline to defend, even though he has a defense. The act may be the result of agreement. Nevertheless, when the decree is entered, it is the court's judgment upon the record as made, and establishes a new status, not subject to retrial in court. The decree of divorce in this case must therefore abide, unless the parties by their joint personal petition to the court granting the divorce procure its annulment as allowed by section 426, Civ. Code Prac. But judgments allowing or refusing alimony are subject to review on appeal; or to new trial upon proper grounds therefor being shown.

This proceeding to enforce the payment of the judgment for alimony was, as we have seen, one authorized by the practice in chancery. Relief will be granted according to the rules of equity. We are satisfied from the evidence that Mr. Sebastian, representing appellant as her attorney, did agree with the father and the attorney for appellee that the payment of $500 and the attorney's fee of $50 would be in satisfaction of the judgment for alimony, and that the judgment fixing the amount was predicated upon that agreement, rather than upon the proof in the record. We are also satisfied that appellant did not authorize the compromise, and did not know of it. Her counsel had not the legal authority to enter into a compromise for her without her express authority. Smith v. Dixon, 3 Metc. 438; Cox v. Adelsdorf, 51 S. W. 616, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 421. The compromise was therefore voidable by her. When appraised of it, she must elect to either ratify or disaffirm it. If she ratify it, that ends it. If she disaffirms it, then she must consent to stand where she was before it was made. She will not in equity be allowed to say in one breath that she will claim the fruits of the agreement, and in the next breath to deny the condition upon which the agreement was made. The case then stands thus: A divorce has been granted to appellant upon allegation and proof of abandonment. Her claim for alimony asserted in the petition is undisposed of. She has been paid $500 on her claim for alimony, and $50 on her counsel fee. That she is legally entitled to alimony in this case is not now an open question. The only question is: How much should be awarded her? Even upon the showing she made in the partial preparation of the case, it seems to us that $1,500 was wholly inadequate. Just what property appellee then had is not satisfactorily shown. But it is shown that he had youth, health, strength, and business ability, no mean assets in these times. Many a man begins life with the charge of a family with no more, yet achieves success. The dependent condition of the wife, the helplessness and just needs of their child, both imposing legal and moral obligations upon the husband and father not discharged by divorce, nor diminished by his abandonment, or want of affection, are elements which enter into the court's consideration in fixing the amount of alimony. Not only what appellee had when the action was begun, but what he has now, and his reasonable expectancy (Muir v. Muir, 92 S. W. 314, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 1355, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 909) and his earning capacity (Canine v. Canine, 16 S. W. 367, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 124) may also be considered, and should be, in ascertaining the just amount necessary to maintain appellant and her child comfortably, and to educate the child fittingly, and the probable ability of appellee to pay it. This is exacted of appellee not as a penalty alone for his fault (though that may also be considered), but is in discharge of his contractual, and more particularly of his social, obligation imposed on him by law as an incident of manhood and the head of a family.

Let the judgment be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

YANCEY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 5, 1909.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 91*)—RIGHT OF PEACEABLE ASSEMBLY—RIGHT TO PETITION LEGISLATURE—CIRCULATION OF PETITION.

Under Const. § 1, subsec. 6, which provides that citizens of the state shall have the right to assemble in a peaceable manner for their common good, and to apply to the government for the redress of grievances, or other proper purpose by petition, address, or remonstrance, any citizen or number of citizens may petition the Legislature of the state for any necessary and proper purpose, which includes the right to lawfully circulate the petition and procure others to sign it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 173; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 148*)—CIRCULATION OF PETITION—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

Defendant, in a prosecution for criminal libel, was a judge of the county court. He caused to be sent to C., who was the foreman of a former grand jury, a letter asking that C. sign an inclosed petition or an affidavit, to be used in impeachment proceedings before the Legislature, to the effect that G., who was the state attorney for the judicial district in which all three parties lived, was an unfit and incompetent officer, he being frequently and almost constantly drunk, etc. Held that, if defendant in good faith believed G. to be such an unfit and incompetent officer as the letter and petition appear to make him, the defendant had the right to inquire of C. as to his knowledge of G.'s unfitness and incompetency, and to ask his assistance in procuring the impeachment of G. by the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 407-411; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 148*)—CIRCULATION OF PETITION—IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

Ky. St. 1909, § 2172 (Russell's St. § 172), provides that a person desirous of procuring the impeachment of any officer shall, by petition in writing to the House of Representatives signed by himself and verified by his own affidavit, and the affidavits of such others as he may deem necessary, set forth the facts upon which he prays an impeachment. Defendant, in a prosecution for criminal libel, was a judge of the county court. He caused to be sent to C., who was foreman of a former grand jury, an affidavit and petition addressed to the House of Representatives, charging G., the state attorney for the district in which all three parties lived, with acts reprehensible in one of his official position. Held that, if G.'s conduct was so bad as to make him a fit subject for impeachment, in rendering such assistance as would tend to bring it about, defendant and C. should be presumed to be discharging a social or public duty, and defendant's communication was within the scope of his duty as an officer and good citizen; it not being alleged in the indictment that it was made without reasonable grounds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 407-411; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 148*)—CIRCULATION OF PETITION—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

The right conferred by Ky. St. 1909, § 2172 (Russell's St. § 172), to file the affidavits of other persons in proceedings for the impeachment of an officer necessarily carries with it the right to make reasonable and proper inquiry to obtain them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 407-411; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

5. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 148*)—IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS—JUDICIAL PROCEEDING—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

An impeachment proceeding is a judicial proceeding, and whatever writings in the way of petitions, affidavits, or pleas as may properly be used in an impeachment proceeding are, as to statements of fact contained therein, as much privileged as other writings or pleadings prepared for use or filed in the course of ordinary litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 407-411; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carroll County.

"To be officially reported."

W. P. Yancey was convicted of criminal libel, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Winslow & Howe, W. O. Jackson, W. B. Moody, and M. H. Bourne, for appellant. Jno. S. Gaunt, Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., J. A. Donaldson, M. S. Downs, Chas. Strother, Arthur Cox, and F. C. Greene, for the Commonwealth.

SETTLE, J. At the January term, 1908, of the Carroll circuit court the grand jury found and returned against the appellant, W. P. Yancey, the following indictment: "The grand jury of Carroll county, in the name and by the authority of the commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse W. P. Yancey of the offense of criminal libel committed as follows, to wit: The said W. P. Yancey in the county and circuit aforesaid did, on the 17th day of January, 1908, within 12 months next before the finding of this indictment, unlawfully, willfully, maliciously, and knowingly write and publish a certain written statement, to wit, a letter, which letter imputed to one F. C. Greene, then commonwealth attorney of the Fifteenth judicial district of Kentucky, dishonesty, misconduct in office, corruption in the discharge of his official duties, and incompetency in the performance of same, and did sign same, and mail and deliver same to the following persons in Carroll county, Ky.: B. W. Ransdell, John Davis, A. S. Lee, A. G. Kendall, Arthur Carico, C. M. Bond, C. C. Coghill, J. C. Duvall, R. E. Crutcher, Harry Grobmeyer, Joe Hayes, Forrest Adcock, and divers others whose names are to this grand jury now unknown, all residents of Carroll county, Ky., said written letters being in words as follows: 'W. P. Yancey, Judge of Owen County Court. Owenton, Kentucky, January 17, 1908. Mr. C. C. Coghill, Carrollton, Ky.—My Dear Sir: We should like very much to have you sign a petition or affidavit would be better, something like the one I inclose. I only send this thinking it might answer the purpose, if not, all right. A petition has been circulated in this county petitioning the Legislature to remove Greene from office. We would like very much to have an affidavit signed by you as foreman of the May term of the grand jury to the effect that Greene is wholly incompetent and corrupt in his office. If this meets your approval you can write me by Wednesday of next week as we want to go to Frankfort Thursday with affidavits. Yours truly in confidence, W. P. Yancey.' The inclosure in said letter and part of said letter is in words and figures as follows: 'We, the undersigned citizens of Carroll county, Ky., state that we were members of the grand jury at the ——— term of the Carroll circuit court, for the year 1907, and that during that said term of the court, the commonwealth attorney for the Fifteenth judicial district of Kentucky, one F. C. Greene, was constantly and habitually drunk, so much so that he was incapacitated from attending to the duties of his said office in a proper and becoming manner; that at the close of the term of our said service as grand jurors, when several indictments had been prepared, the said F. C. Greene could not be found, and that we found that he was trying to make his escape from the city of Carrollton, and that it was necessary for us to have the said Greene arrested by the sheriff of Carroll county and returned to the jury room, in order that he might sign the said indictments. The affiants state that the said F. C. Greene has persistently and continuously shown his incompetency and unfitness for the office of commonwealth attorney, in that he is frequently and almost constantly drunk, and they respectfully ask and petition the Legislature of Kentucky to impeach the said Greene and remove him from his said office.' Now the grand jury says that said Yancey wrote said letter and caused said inclosure to accompany same, and vouched for the truth of same, well knowing at the time he so published same that it was and is false, libelous, infamous, and malicious, and same was and is false and libelous, and same was so done by the said Yancey with the malicious purpose and criminal intent to injure said F. C. Greene in his profession and in the discharge of his official duties, and against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Kentucky. F. C. Greene, Commonwealth Attorney, Fifteenth Dist. of Kentucky." The trial of appellant resulted in his conviction of the alleged criminal libel, his punishment being fixed by verdict of the jury at a fine of $500. Appellant entered motion in arrest of judgment, and also filed a motion and grounds for a new trial, but both motions were overruled by the circuit court, and these rulings gave cause for this appeal.

Appellant's first complaint is that the trial court erred in overruling his demurrer to the indictment. This complaint is mainly based upon the ground that both the letter and the inclosed petition set forth in the indictment were privileged communications, and therefore their publication did not constitute an indictable offense. Subsection 6, § 1, Bill of Rights, Const., provides that citizens of the state shall have "the right of assembling together in a peaceable manner for their common good, and of applying to those invested with the power of government for the redress of grievances, or other proper purpose by petition, address or remonstrance." Manifestly, the foregoing declaration of the Bill of Rights confers upon any citizen, or number of citizens, the right to petition the Legislature of the state for any necessary and proper purpose, and if one may lawfully sign his name to a petition to be presented to the Legislature for a proper purpose, he may likewise lawfully circulate the petition and procure others to sign it. The letter and inclosed petition set forth in the indictment show that appellant was seeking either a petition or affidavit from Coghill to be used in an impeachment proceeding, to be instituted in the Legislature against Greene, and nothing contained in the indictment negatives this idea. If, as these writings show, appellant in good faith believed Greene, the commonwealth's attorney of the judicial district in which he and Coghill reside, to be such an unfit and incompetent officer as the letter and petition appear to make him, then appellant had the right to inquire of Coghill as to his knowledge of the alleged unfitness and incompetency of Greene, and to ask his assistance in procuring the impeachment of Greene by the Legislature.

Section 2172, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 172), provides: "A person desirous of procuring the impeachment of any officer shall, by petition in writing to the House of Representatives signed by himself and verified by his own affidavit, and the affidavits of such others as he may deem necessary, set forth the facts upon which he prays an impeachment." It will be observed that the paper Coghill was asked by appellant to sign was an affidavit and petition addressed to the House of Representatives. As appellant was judge of the Owen county court, and Coghill had been a member of the grand jury during the Carroll circuit court at which Greene was charged with certain acts reprehensible in one of his official position, and both appellant and Coghill were citizens of the district of which Greene was commonwealth's attorney, the communication complained of was between persons having a common interest, and mainly in the nature of an inquiry of Coghill as to his knowledge of what Greene had done at the Carroll court. If Greene's conduct was so bad as to make him a fit subject of impeachment, it is no less than the truth to say that, in rendering such as-assistance as would tend to bring about his impeachment, appellant and Coghill should be presumed to have acted in the discharge of a social or public duty and from the standpoint of good citizenship. The communication was within the scope of appellant's duty as an officer and good citizen, and it is not alleged in the indictment that it was made without reasonable grounds. Not only were the letter and inclosure from appellant to Coghill in the nature of an inquiry and request for the latter's assistance, but it was also a confidential communication, for the letter closes with the words, "Yours truly in confidence." The inclosure contains no statement of fact made by appellant; it is merely a part of the inquiry, and in addition a statement of the facts the writer supposed to be in Coghill's possession, and which, if true, he was expected to swear to, in which event it would be used by appellant, in connection with the contemplated impeachment proceedings, as a petition or one of the affidavits allowed by the statute in support of the petition praying Greene's impeachment. The right conferred by the statute to file the affidavits of other persons in such a proceeding necessarily carries with it the right to make reasonable and proper inquiry to obtain them.

An impeachment proceeding is a judicial proceeding; the Legislature being the trial court. This being true, whatever writings in the way of petitions, affidavits, or pleas as may properly be used in an impeachment proceeding are, as to the statements of fact contained therein, as much privileged as other writings or pleadings prepared for use or filed in the course of ordinary litigation in the courts of the country. An excellent statement of the law on this subject, as we understand it, may be found in Roberson's Criminal Law, § 592: "There are certain communications which are privileged, and are not deemed libelous, because of the occasion upon which they are made, though the party making them may in fact be in error, and not able to prove them to be true. A communication is regarded as privileged if made in good faith, upon any subject-matter upon which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty public or private, and either legal, social, or moral, if the defamatory matter is honestly believed to be true by the person publishing it, and made to a person or body of men having a corresponding interest or duty. Thus proceedings in courts of justice, legislative proceedings, and petition and memorials to the Legislature are privileged." The rule here announced was approved by this court in Ranson v. West, 125 Ky. 457, 101 S. W. 885, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 82; Sebree v. Thompson, 126 Ky. 223, 103 S. W. 374, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 642, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723. Also Cooley on Torts, § 251; Townsend on Slander and Libel, § 221; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1023. Being of opinion that the writings alleged in the indictment to be libelous belong to the class of communications regarded by the law as absolutely privileged, we conclude that the learned special judge erred in overruling the demurrer to the indictment. This view of the matter makes it unnecessary for us to consider the numerous additional contentions urged by appellant for a reversal.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

MARTIN v. SPURLOCK.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 4, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1099*)—DECISION ON APPEAL—SECOND TRIAL—OPINION AS TO CONCLUSIVENESS OF EVIDENCE.

Where, on appeal in litigation over the possession of land, it is declared that the evidence shows conclusively that defendant had been in adverse possession for more than 20 years before suit as owner, and that a very considerable portion had been inclosed by him and was under cultivation, and there was no evidence on a subsequent trial to the contrary, judgment should be for defendant, regardless of how disputed boundary lines of a patent should be run.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4376; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Floyd County. "Not to be officially reported."

Suit by R. M. Spurlock against James Martin. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition.

See, also, 68 S. W. 396, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 212.

Wm. H. Holt and J. F. Butler, for appellant. James Goble, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In 1892 Spurlock brought this suit against Martin to recover possession of a tract of land in Floyd county, described as follows: "Beginning at sugar tree and black walnut; thence N. 71° W., 80 poles; S. 24° W., 60 poles; S. 10° W., 120 poles; S. 20° W., 114 poles; S. 44° E., 144 poles; S. 71° E., 80 poles, to two beeches, black oak, and 2 chestnuts, in the gap of the ridge between said branch and the Bolling branch; N. 37° E., 80 poles, to a stake in the Morgan gap; N. 85° W., 40 poles; N. 38.5° E., 40 poles, to the beginning." He averred that he was the owner and entitled to the possession of this land, and that Martin was unlawfully holding it. A judgment, adjudging Spurlock the owner of the land and awarding him possession, was rendered by default; Martin, although summoned, not appearing. Afterwards Martin filed an action in equity to vacate the judgment upon various grounds not necessary to mention. The lower court dismissed his petition, and upon appeal to this court the judgment was reversed, in an opinion that may be found in 68 S. W. 396, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 212.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Upon a return of the case, Martin filed an answer, traversing the petition, pleading adverse possession, and that the matters in controversy, in so far as adverse possession was concerned, were adjudged in his favor by this court in the opinion supra. The record on this appeal, so far as the evidence is concerned, is the same as on the former, with the exception of two unimportant depositions taken after the return of the case. When it was again submitted, the court adjudged that the Spurlocks were the owners of and entitled to the possession of the following tract of land, to wit: "Beginning at walnut tree and black walnut, beginning corner to 100-acre survey made in the name of Elijah Canada; thence N. 71° W., 80 poles; S. 24° W., 60 poles; S. 10° W., 120 poles; S. 20° W., 114 poles; S. 44° E., 144 poles; thence a straight line to the 2 beeches and black oak and 2 chestnuts in the Bolling's gap; thence S. 71° E., 80 poles; thence N. 37° E., 80 poles, to a stake in the Morgan gap; N. 85° W., 40 poles; N. 38.5° E., 40 poles, to the beginning. The court further adjudged that James Martin was the owner of the 73-acre patent described herein, except so far as is herein adjudged to the Spurlock heirs." From this judgment both parties appeal.

It will be observed that the court inserted "a straight line" from the end of the line "S. 44° E., 144 poles," to the beeches, oak, and chestnut in the Bolling gap, and then ran the lines as called for in the patent, with the exception that line "S. 71° E., 80 poles," comes in after leaving the trees at Bolling's gap, in place of being the course and distance that brought the line to these trees, as in the patent. By omitting from the judgment the words "thence a straight line to the 2 beeches, black oak, and 2 chestnuts in the Bolling gap," the lines given in the judgment do not interfere with Martin's boundary. But, with this matter omitted from the judgment, the courses and distances given in the judgment, when applied to the map on file with the record, will not touch the marked trees at Bolling's gap. To run to these trees it is necessary to change the course "S. 44° E., 144 poles," to "S. 14° E., 144 poles." It is difficult to understand upon what theory the court in its judgment inserted a straight line from "S. 44° E., 144 poles, to Bolling's gap." There is no evidence in the record that authorizes the incorporation of this line in the patent boundary.

But we do not deem it necessary to consider further how the lines of the patent should be run, as the judgment should have been for Martin upon the question of adverse possession. In the former opinion the court said: "The evidence shows very conclusively that appellant, Martin, had been in the open, adverse, and notorious possession of this land for more than 20 years before the institution of the suit by appellees, Spurlocks, claiming to be the owners thereof, and that a very considerable portion of it had been inclosed by him and was under cultivation."

There is no evidence in the case that authorizes us to depart from this expression of opinion, and so the judgment must be reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition.

EAST TENNESSEE TELEPHONE CO. v. CITY OF HARRODSBURG.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 3, 1909.)

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 33*)—REGULATION—CHARGES—"BUSINESS SERVICE."

The words "business service," in a telephone company's franchise fixing the maximum rate for such service, mean the ordinary service between business men and other citizens within the radius specified, and do not include service rendered to a telegraph company under a joint traffic arrangement which does not increase the cost of the service rendered by the latter company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County. "To be officially reported."

Action by the City of Harrodsburg against the East Tennessee Telephone Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. H. Gaither, for appellant. C. E. Rankin and R. W. Keenon, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellant, East Tennessee Telephone Company, is the owner of a franchise for the maintenance and operation of a system of telephone service in Harrodsburg and Mercer county, Ky. Section 6 of the franchise is, in part, as follows: "The maximum rate during the term of this franchise shall be as follows: * * * For business service within a radius of one and one-half miles from the exchange, one party line, per month, $2.75; the same service, two party line, per month, $2.00. * * * In the event the foregoing provisions of this section, or any of them, shall be violated by the owner or operator of said system of said telephone, or any manager or agent, or servant of said owner or operator, or its assigns, by charging, demanding, collecting, or receiving any sum in excess of the rates herein provided for, said owner or operator shall forfeit to the city of Harrodsburg the sum of ten dollars in liquidated damages for each day said terms are violated, said damages to be for the benefit of the citizens of Harrodsburg, unless said owner or operator shall refund such amount of overcharge when demanded after giving proper evidence of each overcharge." This is an action by the city of Harrodsburg to enforce the penalty above referred to against appellant for an alleged overcharge in its telephone rates. It is charged in the petition that J. D. Parrish is a citizen and resident of Harrodsburg, Ky., engaged in transmitting to other points, and receiving from other points and transmitting to said citizens, telegraphic messages; that he is also engaged in the business of receiving for transportation by express freight from the citizens of said town and that community, and the business of delivering to said citizens freight transported to them from other cities, under an arrangement which he has with the telegraph and express companies which he represents; that he is required to furnish the office room and furniture, and to send out to persons residing a distance from his office the telegraphic messages of persons desiring them sent over the telegraph lines, and for all his services in said business; that he has in his possession a store in said city, within 250 yards of defendant's Harrodsburg exchange; that desiring a telephone service as contemplated in, and required by, the franchise referred to, he requested the defendant to furnish it to him; that in compliance with his request it installed in his building a telephone instrument, and connected him with the Harrodsburg exchange; that he is now, and has at all times been, ready, willing, and able to pay to said defendant the sum of $2.75 for services per month; that said amount has been tendered appellant, but that it refused, and still refuses, to accept the same; that notwithstanding said franchise, the appellant has adopted a different method of charging him for said telephone service; that it demands and charges him 2 cents for each and every call, and 15 per cent. of all sums which he collects for transmitting telegraph messages from Harrodsburg, Ky., to other distant points; that during the month of March, 1900, it demanded, charged, collected, and received from him, for each and every day between February 28, 1900, and April 1, 1900, a period of 31 days, in excess of $2.75 per month for the services furnished him, which charges were paid by him under protest; that complaint of the overcharge was made, and proof thereof offered to appellant, but that it failed and refused to refund any sum on account thereof. It is then charged that, by reason of the violation of its franchise agreement and the overcharge exacted of J. D. Parrish, appellant had become indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $10 per day for 31 days, amounting to $310. Appellant thereafter filed its answer. The first paragraph contained a general denial of certain allegations of the petition. By the second paragraph the defense is made that John D. Parrish is the agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, a corporation duly and legally organized and engaged in the business of transmitting and receiving telegraph messages throughout the country; that said Parrish is also the agent of the Southern Express Company, a common carrier of goods and stock, and that said Parrish has no business other than as agent for the said corporations; that under the traffic arrangement with the Western Union Telegraph Company, duly executed in writing, between that company and appellant for the purpose of mutual benefit and profit, appellant made and entered into a contract whereby it agreed to transmit for the Western Union Telegraph Company to each of defendant's subscribers, any messages received over the wires of the Western Union Telegraph Company. The charge for this service is 2 cents for each message. It is further stipulated that, for each message delivered over appellant's lines to the Western Union Telegraph Company for transmission over its lines, appellant is to receive 15 per cent. of the net cost of said message to said sender; that said contract embraces all of the exchanges of the appellant, and that it is a valid, binding, and equitable contract, and that the Western Union Telegraph Company and the appellant are mutually bound thereunder and are each attempting to perform and live up to said contract; that the said J. D. Parrish is attempting to nullify the contract and avoid the provisions thereof by demanding of the appellant a telephone ostensibly for his personal business, but with the fraudulent purpose of using the same to receive and transmit messages for and from the Western Union Telegraph Company, and to thereby nullify the said contract with said company. It is further averred in the second paragraph that it had offered to install for Parrish's use, individually and as agent of the Southern Express Company, a telephone at the business rate of $2.75 per month, and a second phone for the Western Union Telegraph Company under the said agreement and traffic arrangement with said company; that Parrish has refused to accept said phones, under such conditions; that said contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company is in full force and effect in all the exchanges, under appellant's control, and that the same was in existence at the time said telephone was installed in the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Harrodsburg. By amended answer it is further averred that the contract between appellant and the Western Union Telegraph Company was in existence, and that the appellant and the Western Union Telegraph Company were each operating under said contract before the passage of the franchise granted to appellant by the city of Harrodsburg in 1908; that it offered to said Parrish, agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, a telephone for all purposes other than business of the latter company at the rates fixed by said ordinance, but that he refused to accept the same. A demurrer was sustained to the second paragraph of appellant's answer and to the amendment thereof. Evidence was then heard, and the case submitted to the jury. The court peremptorily instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of appellee, city of Harrodsburg, for the sum of $310, and the telephone company appeals.

While several grounds for reversal are urged, we deem it necessary to consider only one; that is, the propriety of the court's action in sustaining the demurrer to the second paragraph of the original answer and the amendment thereof. It appears from these pleadings that appellant and the Western Union Telegraph Company are both public service corporations, engaged in the business of receiving and transmitting messages. They have made a joint traffic arrangement by which the cost of the messages transmitted by them is to be prorated upon a certain basis. This arrangement applies to all exchanges under the control of appellant, and to every place where the Western Union Telegraph Company has an office. According to the franchise the maximum rate is as follows: "For business service within a radius of one and one-half miles from the exchange, one party line, per month, $2.75; the same service, two party line, per month, $2.00." The question, then, arises: What is meant by the words "business service" as used in the franchise? In our opinion the council meant the ordinary business service between the business men and other citizens within the radius specified in the ordinance granting the franchise. We do not believe the council intended that the words "business service" should include service of the kind rendered by appellant to the Western Union Telegraph Company. In our opinion the council did not intend to affect in any way the joint traffic arrangement between two such public service corporations as appellant and Western Union Telegraph Company. If the service rendered by the Western Union Telegraph Company to the citizens of Harrodsburg and vicinity was rendered more costly by reason of the charge exacted by appellant, a different question would be presented. So far as it appears in the answer, the Western Union Telegraph Company alone pays the cost of such service, and pays it under and by virtue of a contract which it has with appellant. There is no increased cost that the citizen is required to pay. The increased cost required of Parrish is not exacted from him as a citizen of Harrodsburg, but only as the agent and representative of the Western Union Telegraph Company. He cannot therefore obtain for his personal use a telephone from appellant, and then as the agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company use the telephone for the purpose of nullifying the contract between appellant and the Western Union Telegraph Company. If the franchise ordinance were intended to apply to a commercial arrangement between two public service corporations, engaged in the same line of business, it is manifest that the telephone company would be placed at a great disad-vantage. Its proportion of the profits of the business done would depend, not upon its contract with the telegraph company, but upon the maximum rate fixed for ordinary business service. As said above, we are of opinion that the council did not intend that the maximum rate fixed in the franchise ordinance should control the joint traffic arrangement between two such corporations. We, therefore, conclude that the trial court erred in sustaining appellee's demurrer to the second paragraph of appellant's answer and the amendment thereof.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Where, in an action against a railroad for killing stock, the engineer and fireman admitted the killing, and testified that they were only able to see the stock at about 100 yards distance, and that they immediately did everything within their power to bring the train to a stop, and there was evidence that the engine did not shut off steam, but was working steam 300 yards before the train struck the stock, and continued to do so thereafter, and the tracks made by the stock could be seen for about 900 yards over the track to where the stock were struck, the question of the negligence was for the jury.

Action by Louis S. Lowry against the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. L. Bronaugh and John Galvin, for appellant. Everett B. Hoover and L. H. Miller, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellee, Louis S. Lowry, instituted this action against appellant, Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company, to recover damages for the negligent killing of two mules and a horse on its right of way. The jury returned a verdict in appellee's favor for the sum of $250, and the railroad company appeals.

At the time the stock was killed appellee was the owner of a farm lying along and adjacent to appellant's right of way, and had a gateway or private crossing over same.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appellant's railroad from this gateway southward for about 900 yards was a straight track, with considerable upgrade for about 200 yards south of the gate. On the night of March 7, 1908, two mules and a horse belonging to appellee went through his gate and on to the track of appellant's road. They were found dead the next morning by the side of the track, and on the right of way, about 300 yards from appellee's gateway. Appellant contends that the facts of this case bring it within the rule announced by this court in Kentucky Central R. R. Co. v. Talbot, etc., 78 Ky. 621, and that it was entitled to a peremptory instruction. In that case it was held that where the railroad company introduces as witnesses those employes who, from the circumstances of the particular case, would be presumed to know whether there had been any negligence on the part of the company, and they testified that there was no negligence, and there was no evidence to the contrary, or any circumstances tending to impeach them, the law is for the railroad company. The engineer and fireman on the train which killed the stock were introduced as witnesses. They admitted the killing, but testified that they were only able to see the stock from about 100 yards distant from the train, and that they immediately cut off the air, reversed the engine, and did everything within their power to bring the train to a stop. At the time the train was running about 35 miles an hour. The stock signal, consisting of four sharp blasts, was blown. The train could not have been stopped inside of its length. There is some discrepancy between the testimony of the fireman and engineer. The fireman testified that the stock was hit on the curve a half mile beyond the cut. The engineer testified that the stock was struck on the straight track about a quarter of a mile beyond the cut. The fireman further testified that the brakes were put on, and the train stopped about 30 car lengths the other side of the stock, while the engineer stated that the train did not stop at all. They both testified that the steam was turned off and the engine reversed. For the appellee Joe Grant testified that he lived not a great distance from the track, and was lying awake some time between 2 and 4 o'clock, when the train passed by. The engine did not shut off steam at all, but was working steam 300 yards before the train struck the stock, and continued to work steam until it passed out of hearing, far beyond the stock. He identified the train as the one which struck the stock by saying that he heard the stock whistle, consisting of several sharp blasts, and that no other trains passed there during that time. According to the testimony of Joe Delany, section foreman, the tracks made by the stock could be seen for a distance of about 900 yards over the railroad track to the point where the stock was struck by the train. Part of the track was upgrade, and part downgrade.

From the foregoing, it will be seen that there is not only testimony of a witness tending to impeach the testimony of the fireman and engineer, but the physical facts tend to contradict them. If the tracks of the stock killed indicated that they had been running down the track for a considerable distance, this was a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining whether or not those in charge of the engine could have seen the stock in time to prevent the injury. In cases of this character the plaintiff can rarely show when the stock were in fact seen. He must, therefore, rely in the main upon the circumstances attending the killing to show negligence; and, when he shows facts establishing some negligence on the part of the railroad employes, the statutory presumption of negligence is not overthrown. It is then a question for the jury whether or not the killing of the stock was due to want of care. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Moore, 84 S. W. 1144, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 293. In the case of Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Stanley, 96 S. W. 846, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 1054, the rule is thus stated: "The jury were not bound, in the face of the facts which tended to show the negligence of appellant, to accept the testimony of its employes, although no other living witness saw the accident. The jury had the right to apply the maxim res ipsa loquitur." In the case under consideration, one witness testified to facts which contradict the fireman and engineer to a certain extent, and the circumstances of the killing are somewhat in conflict with their statements. That being the case, the court properly submitted the question of negligence to the jury, and we cannot say that their finding is flagrantly against the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

RAILROADS (§ 364*)—INJURY TO PERSON NEAR

The probability that a boy, who with a few other boys plays on the private premises of a railroad company, adjoining its right of way, will be in a position to be struck by a lump of coal falling from a passing car is not so great as to impose on the company the duty of loading its cars with reference to his presence, or of inspecting its cars to see that he is not injured by falling coal; and there is no liability for injury so occurring, in the absence of wantonness and recklessness.

"To be officially reported."

Action by John Mulvey's Administrator against the Covington & Cincinnati Railroad, Transfer & Bridge Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Galvin & Galvin, for appellant. Arthur C. Hall and J. A. Shackelford, for appellee.

CLAY, C. John Mulvey, as administrator of John Mulvey, Jr., deceased, instituted this action against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, and appellant, the Covington & Cincinnati Railroad, Transfer & Bridge Company, to recover damages for the death of his decedent. Upon the conclusion of the testimony the court gave a peremptory instruction in favor of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Judgment was entered in their favor, and from that judgment there is no appeal. The case as to appellant was submitted to the jury, which returned a verdict in favor of appellee for the sum of $2,500. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The failure of the trial court to award it a peremptory instruction is the only ground for reversal urged by appellant.

The facts are as follows: Appellant is the owner of a bridge which spans the Ohio river at Covington, Ky. It also owns and maintains railroad tracks running from Seventeenth street, in Covington, through said city and over said bridge to points in Cincinnati, Ohio. It has locomotives which it uses for the purpose of transporting trains over the bridge and roads owned by it. At Fifth and Johnson streets in Covington, Ky., there is a vacant and uninclosed lot, which has a frontage of about 50 feet on the south side of Fifth street, and a depth of about 100 feet. This lot is bounded on the west by a stone wall or approach to said bridge, and on the east by an alley. The top of the wall is about 10 feet above its base or the level of the lot. There are two tracks on this wall; the east track being used by trains going north, and the west track by those going south. The lot in question is owned by appellant. In the summer time it has been used as a playground by children. At times they would gather up coal on the tracks and from cars, and make a fire on the lot. On December 11, 1907, about 7:30 o'clock p. m., and after dark, the decedent, John Mulvey, who was then about 12 years of age, in company with several other boys the same age, was playing on the lot referred to. Early in the day they had built a fire on the lot within a distance of 4 or 5 feet from the bridge wall. On the occasion of the accident they were sitting around the fire when they heard a train approaching from the south. This train consisted of about 20 cars, four of which were loaded with coal. As the engine approached, the boys all ran back 30 or 40 feet to escape the cinders and ashes from the engine. Shortly after the engine passed, young Mulvey ran back to the fire and took a seat thereby. In a short time one of his companions called the attention of the other boys to the fact that Mulvey was lying on the ground. About that time one of the boys saw a dark object rolling along the ground about three or four feet from young Mulvey's head. The witness who testified to this fact made a statement inconsistent with it, but on the trial of the case insisted that he had seen something rolling along the ground at the time Mulvey was injured. When their attention was called to young Mulvey, the boys rushed to his assistance. It was found that he had a wound in the top of his head. This wound contained particles of dirt. Mulvey's companions carried him to his home. It was found by the physician summoned to attend him, and by the coroner at the inquest, that young Mulvey's neck was broken. The lump of coal which it is claimed fell from the car, and which was seen rolling when young Mulvey was injured, was picked up by one of the boys, and later turned over to the coroner as evidence. There is also evidence to the effect that there was no other coal on the lot at the time of the injury. Some of the witnesses also testified that the coal in the coal cars was heaped up in the center of the cars. Appellant proved title to the lot, and also showed that the cars containing the coal were loaded at least 250 miles from the point where the accident occurred.

In discussing this case we may admit that there is some evidence tending to show that young Mulvey was killed by being struck on the head by a lump of coal which fell from one of the cars as the train passed by. The doctrine of the Turntable Cases, of course, has no application to this case. This is not a case where a dangerous agency that was alluring and attractive to children was left in such position that they could and would use it. Nor is it a case where the premises were rendered unsafe by a spring gun or any trap that would injure a person if he came in contact with it. Appellee, however, insists that, as children had been playing upon the lot in question for a long time, with the knowledge or acquiescence of appellant, it was the duty of the latter to anticipate their presence, and so load its cars as not to injure any one of them. This court has gone to the extent of holding that where a railroad track runs through a populous community, along or across streets, where from the nature of things persons may be reasonably expected at any time, it is the duty of those in charge of the train to have it under reasonable control, to keep a lookout for persons using the track, and to give timely warning of the approach of the train. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Murphy's Adm'r, 123 Ky. 787, 97 S. W. 729, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 93, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352. The reason for this rule is that the long and continued use of the track at the point in question by large numbers of persons is sufficient to indicate a reasonable certainty that persons will be found there. This rule has never been extended to cases where there was no customary use of the track at the point of the injury. The presence of persons on the track because of its customary use by the public being reasonably certain, there is a strong probability of some one's being injured unless proper precautions are taken to prevent accidents. The necessity for precaution is due to the fact that the very movement of a train is dangerous, and likely to injure those caught unawares. But the probability that a boy, who with a few other boys plays upon the private premises of a railroad company, adjoining its right of way, will be in position to be struck by a lump of coal falling from a passing car is not so great as to impose upon the company the duty of loading its cars with reference to his presence, or of inspecting its cars to see that he is not injured by falling coal. Under such circumstances there is no liability, unless the injury is wanton or reckless. There is no evidence in this case to show either one of these prerequisites to a recovery. The death of the decedent was simply the result of an unfortunate accident, which could not have been reasonably anticipated by appellant. We, therefore, conclude that the court erred in failing to give a peremptory instruction in favor of appellant.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. TAYLOR.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 71*)—MISTAKE IN TRANSMISSION—MENTAL ANGUISH—DAMAGES.

Where through defendant telegraph company's negligent mistake in transmitting a message plaintiff was led to believe that both his parents were dead, whereas in fact only one was dead, a verdict for $450 for mental anguish was not excessive.

Robbins & Thomas, Richards & Ronald, Geo. H. Fearons, A. M. Tyler, and R. G. Robbins, for appellant. Herschel T. Smith, for appellee.

NUNN, C. J. This is the third appeal of this case. The first was prosecuted by the present appellee from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing his petition. The action of the lower court was reversed. See 101 S. W. 969, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 240. On the next trial appellee secured a verdict for $1,000, and this court reversed the judgment because the lower court refused to give a certain instruction offered by appellant, which was copied into the opinion and discussed. See 112 S. W. 844. The facts presented in the case were stated in full in the two opinions referred to. Appellant did not introduce any testimony on either trial, therefore the facts as presented by appellee stand without the slightest contradiction. The lower court on the last trial gave the additional instruction copied in the opinion, and committed no error in admitting or rejecting testimony. In fact appellant's counsel suggest no ground for reversal in their brief except that of excessive verdict. The testimony without contradiction, shows that appellee was caused to expend in traveling more than $50 by reason of the negligent transmission of and delay in delivering the telegrams. This leaves $450 of the judgment awarded appellee for mental anguish resulting from the negligence of appellant's servants, and we are asked to reverse this judgment because it is so excessive that it shows it was the result of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury returning the verdict. It is peculiarly within the province of the jury to fix the damages in a case of this character, and this court has refused to disturb such verdicts when the amounts were more than the court would have awarded. In the case of Western Union Telegraph Company v. Caldwell, 126 Ky. 42, 102 S. W. 840, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 497, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748, this court said: "The recovery of $1,000 in damages is more than should have been awarded, but we do not feel disposed to reverse because the amount seems to be excessive. It is extremely difficult, in fact we might add impossible, to fix any certain standard of recovery in cases of this character. In the very necessity of the case the amount must be left to the judgment and discretion of the jury; and, unless their award is so excessive as to be palpably unjust, it will not be disturbed."

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CORRIGAN v. HUNTER.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 302*)—LIABILITY FOR UNAUTHORIZED ACT OF SERVANT.

The trainer of one maintaining a stable of race horses having no authority to hire or select boys to be used in training the horses, but his authority being restricted to use of such boys as had been employed for such purpose, his act of placing on a horse a boy not so employed was without the scope of his authority; so that, unless it was ratified, the master was not liable for injury to the boy.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 330*)—RATIFICATION OF SERVANT'S ACT—EVIDENCE.

It is not sufficient evidence that C., a horse-man, ratified the unauthorized act of his trainer in using in the training of horses a boy not employed for such purpose, that C. once saw the boy at the race track, rode to town on the same street car with him, paid his fare into a theater, and said that he was going to see his mother.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, 2d Division.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Mary Hunter against Edward Corrigan. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

O'Neal & O'Neal, for appellant. McChord, Hines & Norman, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Richard Hunter, an infant 11 years of age, was injured while riding one of appellant's race horses. His mother, Mary Hunter, instituted this action against appellant for damages. The cause of action was based upon the wrongful act of appellant in using the boy without her consent in the hazardous business of riding race horses. The boy's leg was broken and it had to be amputated. The trial resulted in a verdict for Mary Hunter, the mother, in the sum of $750. From the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

According to the evidence for appellee, Richard Hunter, about three weeks prior to the accident, had gone to the race track near the city of Louisville where appellant had a stable of horses. This he did without his mother's consent. Mary Hunter, the mother, was working out, and, when she left for her daily work, the boy was at home. Upon the return of his sister from school in the afternoon, Mary Hunter learned that the boy had not gone to school. Search was then made for him for several days, but the boy was not found. After more than a week the boy returned to his mother's home, and told her that he had a home with Mr. Corrigan on Fourth street, and all that he had to do was to cut the kindling, carry water, and bring in coal and help around the house. In the course of three or four days the boy made a second visit to his mother. About a week later he was injured. June Collins, appellant's trainer, placed the boy on a thoroughbred yearling with instructions to take the horse to the stable. As the boy proceeded on the horse to the stable, some one who was cleaning out a stall threw some hay out of the stall on a sack, and frightened the horse. The boy tried to stop the horse, but was unable to do so. It finally stumbled and fell, throwing the boy to the ground. In getting up, the horse crushed the boy's ankle and foot. He was taken to a hospital, and remained there for five months. While there his leg was amputated. While at appellant's stable the boy slept in the bed with appellant's trainer, June Collins. He ate meals which were furnished by appellant to his employes. According to the evidence for appellant, the boy had run away from home, and was brought to appellant's trainer to see if the latter could do something with him. The trainer took the boy for the purpose of teaching him to ride with a view to making a profit out of his training for himself and the boy or his mother. Only appellant, who was occasionally at the track, and his secretary, who was stationed there, had authority to hire or engage the services of boys for the purpose of exercising and cooling off the horses. At the time of the accident there were six or seven boys employed for this purpose. While the trainer had authority to select boys from among those hired for that purpose to ride appellant's horses, he had no authority to employ or discharge boys. He was given no discretion in the matter of selecting employes. When the boy was injured, appellant had on hand a sufficient number of boys to perform the services required, and there was no emergency or necessity requiring the services of any outside boy. Appellant contends that the court erred (1) in refusing to award him a peremptory instruction; and (2) in assuming as a matter of law that the trainer in placing the boy on the horse was acting within the scope of his authority.

Appellee insists that the facts adduced in evidence were sufficient to justify the court in concluding as a matter of law that Collins, the trainer, was acting within the scope of his authority. In this connection appellee relies upon the principle announced in Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. et al., 113 S. W. 429, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923, wherein this court said: "It is not the test of the master's liability for the wrongful act of the servant from which injury to a third person has resulted that he expressly authorized the particular act and conduct which occasioned it. In most cases where the master has been held liable for the negligent or tortious act of the servant the servant acted, not only without express authority to do the wrong, but in violation of his duty to the master. It is in general sufficient to make the master responsible that he gave to the servant an authority, or made it his duty to act in respect to the business in which he was engaged when the wrong was committed, and that the act complained of was done in the course of his employment. The master in that case will be deemed to have consented to and authorized the act of the servant, and he will not be excused from liability, although the servant abused his authority, or was reckless in the performance of his duty, or inflicted an unnecessary injury in executing his master's orders. The master who puts the servant in a place of trust or responsibility, or commits to him the management of his business or the care of his property, is justly held responsible when the servant, through lack of judgment or discretion, or from infirmity of temper, or under the influence of passion aroused by the circumstances and the occasion, goes beyond the strict line of his duty or authority, and inflicts an unjustifiable injury upon another." The above doctrine was announced in a case where a party not on the premises was shot by a night watchman employed to protect the premises and to use firearms for that purpose. There the general authority of the night watchman to protect the premises and to use firearms was fully stated in the substituted petition, and it necessarily followed that the act was authorized by the master under the general authority given to the night watchman.

Counsel for appellee argue in this case that Collins, the trainer, had general authority to train appellant's horses, and to select and place the boys upon the horses; that in doing this he was acting in the interest of his master and performing a service for the latter; that the authority to do the particular act (i. e. the placing of Richard Hunter upon the horse) naturally followed from the general authority which the trainer had to train the horses. Appellee's position in this matter would be sound if it were shown that Collins, the trainer, had general authority to hire or select such boys as he saw fit for the purpose of exercising the horses. Under those circumstances, it would not be necessary to show that he had particular authority to select Richard Hunter for that purpose; for Hunter would then be included within the class which Collins had the right to, and did, employ. In that event, the statement of Collins that he was using the boy for his own benefit and with a view to making a jockey of him, to their mutual profit, would play no part in the case. He could not make such a claim when the boy was selected under his general authority for the purpose of exercising horses. In this case no such authority was shown. The uncontradicted evidence of Corrigan, his secretary and trainer, is that the trainer had no authority to hire or select boys to be used in training the horses. Corrigan had a sufficient number of boys on hand to perform such services. No emergency existed which required the use of an additional boy. The trainer had no right to place upon the horse a boy not engaged for that or similar services. If Hunter had been one of the boys hired for that purpose, then the trainer's act would have been that of the master, and the latter would have been liable. Having no authority to employ or select boys generally to exercise the horses, and his authority being restricted to the use of such boys as had been employed for that purpose, it necessarily follows that the particular act of placing Hunter upon the horse in question was not within the scope of the trainer's authority. In performing the act, Collins acted for himself alone, and not within the scope of his authority as appellant's trainer.

It therefore follows that appellant is not liable unless there was such acquiescence on his part as amounted to a ratification of the act done. When we come to consider this question, we find that appellant's secretary saw Hunter riding a horse some two or three times. He then ran the boy away from the premises. Collins again took the boy back because he felt sorry for him, as he had no home. After that time it is not shown that either appellant or his secretary had knowledge of the fact that the boy was riding appellant's horses. The only other circumstance from which acquiescence might be inferred was the statement of the boy that upon one occasion he saw Corrigan at the track and asked the latter to take him down town. Corrigan let the boy ride down on the same street car with him, and gave him 15 cents to pay his way into the theater. The boy stated that Corrigan said he was going to see the boy's mother. There is nothing in these facts to show acquiescence. They go no further than to show that Corrigan saw the boy once, rode down on the same street car with him, paid his way into a theater, and said that he was going to see the boy's mother. It is not shown for what purpose he was going to see the mother, nor is it shown that he ever in fact went to see her. Manifestly this is not sufficient to show that appellant knew the boy was riding his horses, and thus acquiesced in the arrangement between Collins and the boy. Our conclusion, then, is that there was not sufficient evidence on the question of ratification to justify the court in submitting the case to the jury.

For the reasons given, we are of opinion that the court erred in refusing appellant a peremptory instruction. Upon the next trial, unless there be additional evidence tending to show that Collins had authority to select boys other than those hired by Corrigan or his secretary for the purpose of exercising horses, or additional evidence tending to establish the acquiescence of appellant in the arrangement made by Collins with the boy, the court will instruct the jury to find for appellant.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

SPOUSE v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Oct. 29, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 561*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The guilt of accused must be established by evidence to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt; and, where the evidence taken as a whole creates only a suspicion of accused's guilt, there is nothing to submit to the jury.

2. HOMICIDE (§ 235*) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

On a trial for murdering a child by setting fire to the house in which the child dwelt, evidence held not to support a conviction because of the failure to show that accused burned the house.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carter County.
"Not to be officially reported."

John Sprouse was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. D. O'Neal, Jr., Frank Prater, and G. W. Skaggs, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

BARKER, J. This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion on the first appeal is to be found in 116 S. W. 344.

Appellant, John Sprouse, was indicted with Alonzo Kelly, charged with the murder of Dovie Cooper, committed by feloniously setting fire to and burning the dwelling house of Charles Cooper while Dovie Cooper was sleeping within it, and thereby burning her to death. The defendant, Sprouse, was tried separately from his codefendant, Kelly, with the result that he was found guilty by the jury as charged in the indictment, and his punishment fixed at confinement in the penitentiary for life. From the judgment based upon that verdict he appealed to this court, with the result that the judgment was reversed.

It is not deemed necessary to make an elaborate statement of the evidence as shown in the record. With but little change it is substantially the same as upon the former trial. We deem it now sufficient, except as hereinafter set forth, to refer to the opinion on the former appeal for a more comprehensive statement of the facts. It was said in the opinion upon the first appeal that there was no evidence that Cooper's house was burned by an incendiary, and none to connect him with the burning, even if it be assumed that the crime of arson had been committed; and, at the conclusion of the opinion, it was said that if upon another trial the evidence was substantially the same as upon the first, the court should award the defendant a peremptory instruction to find him not guilty. Upon this appeal we have read the evidence contained in the transcript with the greatest care and attention, and we are now, as before, of the opinion that there is not the slightest evidence upon which to base the assumption that Cooper's house was burned in any other way than by accident. None of the Cooper family were willing to say, or did say, that the house was burned intentionally. On the contrary, all of the evidence which bears upon this point tends to show an accidental burning. The fire occurred on the night of the 14th day of September, 1908, and it will be recalled that this was during a most protracted drought, extending all over this part of the country. The testimony shows that there had been no rain for a long time, and everything was unusually dry. The house was frame, and the roof was old and moss-grown. There had been a fire in Mrs. Cooper's sleeping room made of hickory hearts, a species of timber which emits sparks that hold fire longer than those from any other burning timber. There had also been a fire in the yard within 30 feet of the house, where Mrs. Cooper had been making soap, or some other household article which required to be boiled. This fire was also made of hickory hearts, and there was during the night a wind blowing. It will thus be seen that everything was propitious for an accidental fire. The family were awakened by the fire between 10 and 11 o'clock, and at that time the house was completely enveloped by the flames. It was with the greatest difficulty that the adult members of the family escaped from the flames. Two little children, one of whom was Dovie Cooper, could not be rescued, and were burned to death. The only additional evidence introduced by the commonwealth on the second trial was the statement of Anderson Hays, which is so short that we copy it in full: "I had a conversation with him [John Sprouse] on Irish creek in August or July, 1908. He proposed to sell his farm to me. I told him I had nothing to buy with. He said he would take $300, that $100 went to Jim Hicks, and the rest was his, but he would give me $25 or more, if necessary, of it, if I would help him get Charley Cooper out of there; that he had to get him out, and he might have to go out between two days, and might have to go out over the coals"—and of Doc. Murphy, who testified as follows: "I heard John Sprouse ask Charley Cooper if he was not afraid he would get burned up there, and Charley said no; he had not done anybody that much harm. Sprouse said some time he was uneasy and afraid that he would." Now this is all that is in the case which even tends to create a suspicion that the appellant might have burned the house. Sprouse had no motive to burn out Charley Cooper. He had sold the farm to him, and been paid for his interest, and had made his vendee a general warranty deed. Burning the house would not get Cooper out, or give

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Sprouse the property or any interest therein. The evidence shows without contradiction that the appellant was friendly with Cooper, and was working for him just before the fire. Murphy's evidence amounts to nothing whatever, nor does in our opinion that of Anderson Hays. The character of Hays for truthfulness and veracity was thoroughly impeached, and his entire story is apocryphal on its face, but, assuming it to be true, it does not show, or tend to show, that the appellant burned the house, or that anybody burned it; and we are therefore of opinion that the trial court should have awarded the defendant a peremptory instruction to the jury, at the close of all the evidence, to find him not guilty.

The law, in a criminal case, requires that the guilt of the defendant should be established by the evidence to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt. Where the evidence, taken as a whole, creates only a suspicion that the defendant might be guilty, there is nothing to submit to the jury. In our opinion, as said before, this is the sum total of the value of the evidence of the commonwealth in this case, and therefore the judgment is reversed, with instructions that if, upon another trial, the evidence is substantially the same as upon this, the court award the defendant a peremptory instruction to the jury to find him not guilty.

EVERMAN v. EVERMAN.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 12, 1909.)

1. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 55*) — CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

In view of Ky. St. § 3760 (Russell's St. § 4862), providing that, except on allegation of fraud or mistake, no fact officially stated by an officer in the form of a certificate shall be questioned collaterally, the certificate of a grantor's signature and acknowledgment is conclusive in a suit by a party claiming under the deed, where the certificate was not attacked for mistake or fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-300; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1009*) — REVIEW — CHANCELLOR'S FINDING OF FACT.

A chancellor's finding of fact on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3972; Dec. Dig. § 1009.*]

3. JURY (§ 28*)—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY—WAIVER.

Assuming that a party is entitled to a jury trial on issues before the chancellor, he could not, after his request was granted and withdrawn on his motion, delay several years before making it again, and complain of the refusal of the court to entertain it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carter County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by Lafayette Everman against G. W. Everman. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Wilhoit, for appellant. John M. Waugh, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. William Everman died intestate at the age of 92 years, in 1899, leaving surviving him several children; two of them being the appellant and appellee. In 1891 he and his wife, Elizabeth, conveyed a small tract of land to the appellee, Lafayette Everman, in consideration of $1 in hand paid, and the further obligation to support and care for the grantors during their respective lives. This deed was signed and acknowledged by the grantors on the day of its execution, but was not recorded in the proper office until June, 1894. After the death of William Everman and his wife, Elizabeth, Lafayette Everman brought this suit against the appellee to recover from him about 25 acres of the land included in the deed made to him by his father. He alleged that he was the owner of, and entitled to, the possession of the land, and that G. W. Everman was wrongfully withholding it. In defense to the action G. W. Everman attacked the conveyance, upon the ground that its execution had been procured by fraud and undue influence, and that William Everman was not competent to understand the nature and quality of his act, and in fact did not either sign or acknowledge the deed. He further set up that about 1893 or 1894 William Everman gave him by parol the land in controversy, and he had since been occupying it under this parol gift. The action, although brought in ordinary, was transferred to equity, and after being prepared for trial was submitted to the chancellor, who adjudged that Lafayette was entitled to the relief sought. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

With the exception of one question of law raised, the issues are purely those of fact. The evidence is conflicting upon the question of the competency of William Everman to make the deed, but is very satisfactory upon the point that he signed and acknowledged it. Indeed the certificate of the officer, which is in regular form, is conclusive upon this question, as it was not attacked for mistake or fraud on his part. Ky. St. § 3760 (Russell's St. § 4862). Upon the facts we cannot say that the chancellor's judgment was not correct. When the answer was filed, the appellant moved the court to submit out of chancery the issues of fact involved to a jury. This motion was sustained by the court, and thereafter the action for some reason remained on the docket without being tried for about two years, when, upon motion of counsel for appellant, the court set aside the order submitting the issues to a jury. Some two years afterwards counsel for appellant again moved the court to submit the issues out of chancery to a jury, and this motion the court properly overruled. Assuming that appellant was entitled to a jury trial upon the issues, he could not, after his request was granted and withdrawn upon his motion, delay several years before making it again, and complain of the refusal of the court to entertain it.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CONWAY v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 9, 1900.)

"To be officially reported."

Dissenting opinion.

For majority opinion, see 119 S. W. 206.

HOBSON, J. Section 786, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 5335), requires railroad companies to provide each locomotive engine passing upon its road with a bell of ordinary size and a steam whistle, and requires that the bell shall be rung or the whistle sounded outside of incorporated cities and towns at a distance of at least 50 rods from the place where the roads cross upon the same level any highway, and that the bell shall be rung or whistle sounded continuously or alternately until the engine has reached the highway crossing. Section 466, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 3), also provides that the person injured by the violation of any statute may recover from the offender such damages as he may sustain by reason of its violation, although a penalty is therein imposed. Accordingly it has been steadily held by this court that where the proper signals are not given of the approach of a train to a public crossing as required by the statute, and by reason thereof a traveler on the highway is hurt, he may recover damages. South Conway, a boy 11 years of age, took his father's horse to water, and while riding back from the creek along the county highway approaching the crossing, and on his way to the crossing, was hurt in this way: The road ran, as it approached the crossing, for a few yards parallel with the railroad. A freight train running rapidly came up behind the horse, giving no signal of its approach to the crossing, and caused the horse to run away, thus injuring the child very seriously. The county road at this point ran along a fill just outside of the railroad ties. No signals of the approach of the train being given, the child was caught in a trap with the creek on one side of him and the rapidly approaching railroad train coming up behind his horse on the other side, when the ties of the railroad ran out nearly to the line of the county road. That the horse should become frightened when a rapidly running train suddenly dashed upon it from behind without warning was to be expected. The danger to the traveler at this narrow point was just as great for all practical purposes as far as the management of the horse went as it would have been if he was at the crossing. The purpose of requiring signals to be given of the approach of the train 50 rods from the crossing is that the traveler may know of the approach of the train, and have an opportunity to take steps for his own protection. When there was a failure of the train in question to give any notice of its approach to the crossing, the child was caught in a trap, and the first he knew of the approach of the train was from the fright of his horse. It is entirely immaterial whether he was at the crossing or 73 yards from it. He was on the county highway. He was riding to the crossing, and as a traveler on the highway, was entitled to notice of the approach of the train as required by the statute. The fact that the county road for a short distance ran parallel with the railroad in no way lessened his rights. On the contrary, the danger of the situation required a greater degree of care on the part of those operating the train. The opinion seems to be based upon the idea that the child does not testify what he would have done if the proper signals of the approach of the train had been given. If he had undertaken to testify on this subject, the court would manifestly have excluded the evidence. He can tell what he did, but what he would have done under other conditions he cannot testify to; for he cannot be allowed after he is hurt to tell what was in his mind or what he would have done if something had happened that did not happen. He can testify to all that he did, and what he would have done if signals had been given that were not given must be determined by the jury under the evidence and all the circumstances. The opinion intimates broadly that, if the child had said that he would have waited at the creek if signals had been given of the approach of the train, then a peremptory instruction should not have been given. It also intimates broadly that, if he had testified that he would have protected himself in some other way, the peremptory instruction should not have been given. What he may now say he would have done if the signals had been given might be entirely different from what he would, in fact, have done in the emergency in which he was placed. The question he may testify to is what he could have done. He was entitled by law to the signals of the approach of the train. When they were not given, he was deprived of an opportunity to secure himself. If he could by ordinary diligence have protected himself from danger if the signals had been given, then it should be presumed that he would have exercised ordinary care for a child of his age under the circumstances. It is manifest from the proof that, if the child had known that the train was coming a minute before his horse took fright, he could have turned him around and ridden back down to the creek, even if it be conceded that he had left the creek before the train reached the whistling board. When signals are not given of the approach of the train, and the traveler on the highway is injured because he is not aware of the approach of the train, and is thus caught at a disadvantage, it must be a question for the jury whether or not his injury is primarily due to the failure of those in charge of the train to give the signals of its approach. In Ill. Cen. R. R. Co. v. Mizell, 100 Ky. 235, 38 S. W. 5, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 738, no signals of the approach of a train to a crossing were given, and the plaintiff's horse ran off with her, throwing her and injuring her seriously. Sustaining a recovery, this court said: "The principal ground relied on by appellant is that the alleged negligence in failure to blow the whistle was not the proximate cause of the injury; but, if by reason of that failure the appellee went upon the track and her horse was there frightened by the approaching train, the jury, if they believe appellee's witnesses, had evidence from which they were entitled to find that the negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and that the damage followed as a continuous and natural sequence from the negligent act, and was a result which might have been foreseen and expected as the result of the conduct complained of, for it was to be expected that passengers on horseback might be traveling along the highway." The same rule is laid down in Rupard v. C. & O. R. R. Co., 88 Ky. 280, 11 S. W. 70, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 1023, 7 L. R. A. 316, although in that case a peremptory instruction was given because Mrs. Rupard was negligent in not looking out for the train. But in this case the child was only 11 years old. He was not upon the crossing, but simply approaching it, and if it is conceded, as in the Rupard Case, that an action may be maintained for the negligence of the railroad company unless there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, then manifestly the case should have gone to the jury under a long line of opinions by this court. See L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 105 Ky. 571, 49 S. W. 323, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 1375; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Ueltschi, 97 S. W. 14, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 1136; C. & O. R. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 97 S. W. 774, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 215; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Lucas, 99 S. W. 959, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 339; C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Champ, 104 S. W. 988, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1054; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Taylor, 104 S. W. 776, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1142.

This case is practically on all fours with C. & N. R. R. Co. v. Ogles, 73 S. W. 751, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2180, except that there were in that case facts showing that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. But, as the child here was only 11 years old, he could only be required to use such care as might be reasonably expected from a child of his age; and, if the railroad company was negligent, it cannot shield itself from the consequences of its own negligence because the child did not take those precautions that might reasonably be expected of an adult. In so far as the opinion is predicated in any degree upon contributory negligence on the part of the child, it is in conflict with the opinions of this court above cited; and, in so far as it is based on the ground that the child does not testify what he would have done if the signals had been given, it disregards the settled rules of evidence. In L. & N. R. R. Co. v. McNary's Adm'r, 128 Ky. 408, 108 S. W. 898, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 1272, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 224, where there was testimony by bystanders as to what occurred when the woman was struck showing just how the accident occurred, and it was insisted that a peremptory instruction should have been given the jury to find for the defendant, this court said: "The woman manifestly could have seen the train if she had looked in that direction just before she went on the track, but she had a right to assume that notice of the approach of a train would be given; and, where proper signals are not given, this court has held in a number of cases that the question whether the traveler used ordinary care is for the jury—[citing authorities]. To hold as a matter of law that the footman is guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery for his injury whenever he goes upon a railroad track without stopping, looking, or listening would be practically to exempt railroads from all responsibility in cases of this sort." The rule, stop, look and listen is not applied. There is nothing to show negligence on the part of the child except that he was riding along the road and did not look behind him. He had not reached the crossing. If his horse was gentle and did not usually take fright from the cars, this was at least not a reason for requiring unusual precautions on his part. If his horse had, when frightened, run back and not forward to the crossing, he would have the same right of action if hurt as he now has. The gist of his action is that the signals to which he was entitled were not given, and it is not material whether his horse was thus frightened at the crossing or a few yards from it. He cannot recover unless he used ordinary care, but what would be ordinary care for a child 11 years old might not be ordinary care for an adult. In City of Owensboro v. York's Adm'r, 117 Ky. 300, 77 S. W. 1130, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1397, this court quoted with approval from 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 408: "As the standard of care thus varies with the age, capacity, and experience of the child, it is usually, if not always, where the child is not wholly irresponsible, a question of fact for the jury whether the child exercised the ordinary care and prudence of a child similarly situated; and, if such care was exercised, a recovery can be had for an injury negligently inflicted, no matter how far the care used by the child falls short of the standard which the law erects for determining what is ordinary care in a person of full age and capacity." The same rule is thus stated in 29 Cyc. 642: "It is also a question for the jury to determine under all the facts whether a child exercised such care and discretion as might reasonably be expected of one of his age, capacity, and experience situated as he was." In United States Natural Gas Co. v. Talmage Hicks (decided May 19, 1909) 119 S. W. 166, this court said: "The general rule is that, when a child reaches the age of 14 years, the legal presumption is that it knows right from wrong, and it is responsible for its acts. Between that age and seven years the legal presumption is with the child, and, to make it responsible, it must be shown by testimony that it had sufficient intelligence and discretion to realize and to know what would be the result of its acts. Hence it is always proper to submit the question of contributory negligence in such cases to the jury." See, also, 1 Shearman and Redfield on Negligence, § 73. When the plaintiff is placed in a position of peril by the defendant's negligence, and thus suffers an injury, the rule is that he may recover unless at the time he failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and but for this would not have been injured. Here by the defendant's negligence the plaintiff was placed in a position of peril and was injured; and, under the rule heretofore laid down by this court, he may recover unless he failed then to exercise ordinary care for his own safety. What he would have done if the defendant had not been negligent is only material on the question of proximate cause. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Caldwell, 126 Ky. 42, 102 S. W. 840, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 497, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748; Sutton v. Western Union Tel. Co., 110 S. W. 874, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 577.

The rule in this state is that, if there is any evidence, the question is for the jury. The scintilla rule has been so often upheld that the question is no longer open. The proof is abundant that no signals of the approach of the train were given, and that the child was thus caught in a trap. By reason of the want of the signals he had no opportunity to protect himself as he would have had if the signals had been given. The facts show that, if proper signals were given, a person of ordinary care could have protected himself. It cannot be presumed that the child would not have used ordinary care for one of his age; and, it being conceded that the defendant was negligent in the discharge of a legal duty required of it for his protection as a traveler on the highway, it was a question for the jury whether this negligence was the proximate cause of his injury, and whether he exercised such care as may be reasonably expected of a child of his age under the circumstances. The opinion of the court refers to L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 107 Ky. 178, 53 S. W. 269, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 848, C., N. O. & T. P. R. R. Co. v. Bagby, 29 S. W. 320, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 533, L. & N. R. Co. v. Bowen, 39 S. W. 31, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 1099, C. & O. R. R. Co. v. Pace, 106 S. W. 1176, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 806, and L. & N. R. R. Co. v. McCandless, 123 Ky. 121, 93 S. W. 1041, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 563, but these were all cases where crossing signals were not involved. The gist of this case is that the plaintiff was entitled to the crossing signals, and these were not given. To say that the child cannot recover because on the facts shown he was as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence is to adopt in this state the rule, stop, look, and listen before the traveler reaches the crossing and to make it apply to a child eleven years old. Under the opinion, the rule would apply equally if the child had been on the crossing. If not, why not? For he was equally entitled to the crossing signals as he approached the crossing as when he was on it.

I therefore dissent from the opinion.

NUNN, C. J., concurs in this dissent.

2. WITNESSES (§ 328*)—EVIDENCE—CREDIBILITY.

Where a buyer of an animal warranted by the seller sued for the price paid on the ground that the animal shipped was not the one sold, it was competent to show that the seller did not personally know the fact on which the warranty was based, as affecting his credibility as a witness.

3. SALES (§ 397*)—RECOVERY OF PRICE BY BUYER—EVIDENCE.

In an action by the buyer of an animal for the price paid, on the ground that the animal shipped by the seller was not the one sold, evidence that the seller did not personally know the fact on which his warranty was founded was competent.

4. SALES (§ 397*) — RECOVERY OF PRICE BY BUYER—EVIDENCE.

Where in an action by the buyer of an animal for the price paid, on the ground that the animal shipped by the seller was not the one sold, it appeared that the seller had given the measurements of the animal which he agreed to sell, a finding that the measurements of the animal delivered did not correspond with the measurements given by the seller was justified by evidence showing a difference, though the measurements of the animal delivered were made while the animal was either in a dying condition or after it was dead.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boyle County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Amos R. Schultz against Joe E. Wright. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Stone and Chas. H. Rodes, for appellant. Fox & Jackson, for appellee.

LASSING, J. In the winter and early spring of 1907 the appellee, Amos R. Schultz, a resident of Hampstead, Md., entered into correspondence with the appellant, Wright, looking to the purchase of a jack; Wright being a dealer in jack stock. After some considerable correspondence, Schultz purchased a jack of a certain description from Wright for $375, and directed that the jack be shipped to him by express. Thereafter, on March 4th, the jack was delivered by Wright to the express company, to be shipped to appellee at his home at Hampstead, where it arrived on the morning of March 7th at about 8 o'clock. Appellee was present when it arrived and saw it unloaded from the car. When taken from the car it had a small skinned place upon its side and also upon its head, indicating that it had been down. It appeared sluggish, and when taken to appellee's stable, a short distance from the track, it refused to eat and was evidently sick. Such medical skill and attention was given it as the place afforded; but in spite thereof it continued to grow worse, and two days later died. On the afternoon of the same day that it arrived at Hampstead, to wit, the 7th of March, appellee wrote to Wright the following letter:

"Mr. Joe E. Wright, Junction City, Ky.—Dear Sir: Jack you shipped came in this morning he is not the jack you promised to ship the jack I bought through correspondence called for a Four Year old this one shows a Six Year old mouth or older was to be 60 inches high from bottom of foot to top shoulder 60 inches. This jack measures about 57 inches. Arm not over 16 inches this is not satisfactory by any means. Now there is one way to make it satisfactory that is to fill your contract to do that is to ship the jack you sold me as I have the letters with measurements you sent and sent you the money that you agreed to take for the Four Year old. Know I want you to ship the Four Year old with measurements as agreed through correspondence at once Expressage prepaid and I will crate this jack and return him at your expense. Wire me at once if you are going to comply with this letter or I will positively proceed to enter suit immediately.

"Yours truly,

A. R. Schultz."

Having paid for the jack before he ordered it shipped, and having been compelled to pay the expressage, amounting to $35, before the company would deliver it up to him, he filed suit against Wright in Boyle circuit court, wherein he sought to recover of him the amount of money which he had paid him for the jack and the express charges which he had paid the company for shipping him, on the ground that the jack shipped was not the jack which he had bought and which had been described to him by Wright in the correspondence. Issue was joined upon the material allegations of the petition, to wit: The question as to whether or not the jack shipped was the one sold. The case was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, and the court found in favor of the plaintiff. Upon motion of the defendant, a separate finding as to the law and facts was given, and upon this finding judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount sued for. A motion for a new trial was made, and, having been overruled, this appeal is prosecuted.

The negotiations leading up to the trade and the trade itself were conducted and closed by correspondence. The offer and acceptance are found in the following letters:

"Junction City, Ky., Feb. 15, '07.

"Mr. A. R. Schultz, Hampstead, Md.—Dear Sir: We have your favor of the 13th, and contents noted very carefully. We would like very much to do some business with you, but we are afraid that you are inclined to want to buy a jack for too little money. Mules have been advancing very fast in price, and we are sure will go higher than they are now, as we cannot at all supply the demand. Jacks have also advanced in price within the last two or three years, and we have had to put at least 20 per cent. on the price of our jacks compared to what we sold them for two years ago. We are going to give you prices and descriptions of our four year old jacks. He is black, with white points, has good feet and legs, large bone with plenty substance, nice smooth round body, mounts up well in front, long rangy neck, and very fine head and ears. This jack is very vigorous, and is an animal with lots of style and action, very high-headed, and can run like a horse. He is perfectly kind and gentle, and very easy to handle. We have tried him, and know him to be a producer of very fine large mules, and we will give you a written guarantee that he is a good breeder, sure foal getter, sound and all right in every respect. From tip of nose to root of tail he is 106 inches; height, from top of shoulder to bottom of foot 60 inch; girth 64 inch; body 80; arm 21 inch; knee 14 inch; ears from tip to tip 29 inch. Now, Mr. Schultz, this is a very fine young jack, and you will not make a mistake if you buy him. He is a very quick performer, and also a splendid teaser. You will not need a stallion with him. Now, as you state that you are going to trust me to ship you a jack, I want to say that I can recommend this jack as being all right in every way, and I also know that your people cannot pick any flaws in him, as he is a jack of very fine appearance. We have been holding him for $500, but as you state that you cannot come to see us, but will leave the shipping of him to us, we will price him to you at $400 cash. We mean business, and not $1 less than $400 will buy him, and when you buy a jack for less money than we have priced him, I fear you will get something that may not give you perfect satisfaction, and one that your people may not be pleased with. But we will give you description and measurements of a jack that we can sell for less money. He is six years old, very black, with white points, has plenty of bone and substance, nice round body, mounts up well in front, and has very good head and ears. He measures from tip of nose to root of tail 103 inches, top of shoulder to bottom of foot 59 inches; girth 60 inch; body 70 inch; arm 19 inch; knee 12 inch; hock 17 inch; ears from tip to tip 28 inch. He is a good breeder, and his mules are fine and large; will also guarantee him to be a good breeder, sure foal getter sound and all right; and will say that he is perfectly straight, no blemishes of any kind, is a quick performer, good teaser, do not have to use a stallion, and we will price him at $250 cash. He is not as fine an individual as the first young jack we priced, neither has he as much style and action, but as far as his breeding is concerned he will give you satisfaction, and your people will find no fault in this respect. We have tried to be very plain, and expect to give you an honest, square deal. We have told you straight about the jacks, and you can take your choice. Send us a bank draft, or certified check, and we will ship you the jack at once. Hoping to hear from you by return mail, and to receive your order for jack, we remain,

"Yours very truly, Joe E. Wright."

"Junction City, Ky., Feb. 22, 1907.

"Mr. A. R. Schultz, Hampstead, Md.—Dear Sir: We have your favor of the 18th, and also of the 19th. We note that you have decided that you want the big black jack that we priced at $400. Now, Mr. Schultz, you remember that we said to you in our former letter that $400 was as cheap as we could sell this jack, and that we would not take anything off the price, and we would much prefer to sell you the jack we priced you at $200 than to take any off the price of the $400 jack; but as you seem anxious to do some business, and of course we think you would be willing to help us to sell other jacks in your section, we have decided to let you have him at $375. We are looking for a number of buyers about the 1st of March, and we would like to ship out this jack as soon as possible, as we do not like to have jacks that are sold in our barn, as the buyer is almost sure to want the jacks that have been bought by some one else, and especially if they are good ones. So please let us have your draft by return mail for the $375 and give us shipping instructions, and we will let the jack go forward at once. Hoping to have your order by return mail, we remain,

"Yours very truly, Joe E. Wright.

"P. S.—You need not be uneasy about our shipping the jack when the weather is bad, for this we never do, but would like to have full instructions so that he can go forward, that we can start him the first pretty warm day. We personally superintend the loading and shipping of the jacks we sell, and we will see that he is put on the car in good condition."

"Hampstead, Md., Feb. 25, 1907.

"Mr. Joe E. Wright, Junction City, Ky.—Dear Sir: Will send certified check tomorrow get ready to ship jack weather is fairly good here now. I thank you kindly for letting me have the jack for $375. Mr. C. J. Trimmer of Hacketstown, New Jersey, recommends you very highly wrote me that he got a better jack than expected. My shipping point is Hampstead, Md., Adams Express when you ship jack put a valuation on him of $700, so that if any accident occurs Railroad Co. is responsible. My people here has never saw such a jack as you described there is quite a lot of breeding starting around here the last year or so and no jack in 25 miles of this place. It is more than likely you will sell another one in this section soon. Will start check tomorrow.

"Yours truly, A. R. Schultz."

"Junction City, Ky., Feb. 28, 1907.

"Mr. A. R. Schultz, Hampstead, Md.—Dear Sir: We have your favor of the 25th, and thank you very much for the order. We have marked the jack sold, and have asked our express agent to secure for us the very best rate possible from Junction City to Hampstead, Md. The shipping will not be delayed any longer than we can possibly help, as we explained to you we like for the jacks to go out as fast as they are sold, but will be careful to start him in good condition, weather and other conditions being favorable for the shipment. Think we can ship him by March 4th if there is no hindrance more than we know of now. Will notify you, however, the day before we ship, so you will get our letter in time to be on the lookout for him. Will also send guarantee on the jack as soon as shipped. Again thanking you for the order, and hoping that you will be highly pleased with the jack and that you will be pleased as well as our friend Mr. Trimmer and recommend us to other customers we may have in your section, as our experience has taught us that well-pleased customers are the best advertisement we can have, :

The sole question raised on this appeal is whether or not the finding and judgment of the chancellor is so flagrantly against the evidence as to warrant its being set aside and reversed. The letter of the appellant, containing the statements relative to the color, age, size, and qualities of the jack, upon which appellee acted and was induced to purchase same, represented that he was black in color, four years old, showed certain measurements, and was known by the appellant to be a sure foal getter. The testimony of appellant measured up fully to his representations in every particular as to the jack shipped, except that he admitted that he had only owned this jack a short time and had made no season with him, and it is not altogether clear that he had any personal knowledge of this jack's breeding qualities. The other witnesses introduced by him supported his testimony in the main. While, on the other hand, appellee testified that the jack received by him was brown in color, from six to eight years old, and smaller in the various measurements than represented. The trial judge found that the jack shipped did not measure up to the representations made in the following particulars: First, that he was brown, instead of black; second, that appellant did not know him to be a sure foal getter; and, third, that the measurements of the knee and arm were 12 inches full and 17 inches, respectively, whereas these measurements in the letter were represented to be 14 and 21 inches, respectively.

It is urged that the finding of the trial judge that the jack shipped was a brown jack is not against appellant, for the reason that appellee failed to allege in his pleading that the jack shipped was not a black jack; but, inasmuch as it is alleged that the jack received was not the jack bought, we think this point is not well taken, and this is especially true when the case was tried out upon the issues raised as though every material representation made in the letter was placed in issue. So, likewise, it is urged that the finding of the court that the appellant did not personally know the jack to be a sure foal getter is a finding upon an immaterial point, for at last the question would turn upon the fact as to whether or not he was a sure foal getter, rather than upon the appellant's knowledge of this quality in the jack. It was competent for the plaintiff to show that the defendant did not, as a matter of fact, know that the statement he made of the jack in this particular was true. Such testimony was at least competent as affecting the credibility of the witness, and this fact seemed to have been given considerable weight by the trial judge. But, be that as it may, it was competent evidence for what it was worth, and the finding upon this point is against appellant.

As to the other two points upon which the court finds against him, it was urged that the measurements were taken of a jack either in a dying condition or after he was dead. This is an argument that might properly be addressed to the court, and under all the circumstances it would have been the province of the court to determine whether or not a jack's knee would shrink as much as from one to two inches when he had been sick or injured for two or three days, or even after he was dead. So, likewise, whether or not the foreleg, where it joins the body, would under like conditions shrink as much as four inches. The court found against appellant upon these points, and it not being denied, for the reason, we presume, that it could not be, that these measurements are material and important in the make-up of a jack—bone, size, and substance being looked upon as points of excellence—unless the court should have found that this difference in these particular measurements was due to the enfeebled condition or death of the jack, which he did not, then there is no escaping the conclusion that appellee did not get the jack described in the letter received by him from appellant. Numerically, the weight of the testimony upon this point is in favor of appellee. He was a stranger, residing in another state, relying wholly upon the representations of appellant, and under these circumstances it behooved appellant to deal with him with the utmost fairness. The allegation in his letter, that he knew the jack to be a sure foal getter, shows, when viewed in its most favorable light, that he was not overnice in drawing distinctions between personal knowledge and hearsay, and this fact evidently had some bearing upon the court in leading him to the belief that he was likewise careless in handling the tape when making the measurements of the knee and arm.

On the whole case, we are not prepared to say that, if we were passing upon the verdict of a properly instructed jury, we would feel authorized to grant a reversal, and, as has been frequently held, the finding of the trial court in a case of this character must be treated as the verdict of a properly instructed jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Nelson County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Charles A. Hahn's administrator against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John S. Kelley, Trabue, Doolan & Cox, and Benjamin D. Warfield, for appellants. Nat. W. Halstead, Charles F. Ogden, D. A. McCandless, and F. E. Daugherty, for appellee.

CLAY, C. This action was instituted in the Nelson circuit court by W. G. Hahn, as administrator of Charles A. Hahn, deceased, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, the Illinois Central Railroad Company, and the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge & Railroad Company to recover damages for the destruction of the life of Charles A. Hahn. The trial court gave a peremptory instruction in favor of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge & Railroad Company. The jury returned a verdict against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the sum of $5,000. From the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

While several alleged errors are assigned as grounds for reversal, counsel for appellants state in their brief that they do not care to have the judgment reversed unless this court shall hold that plaintiff made no case to submit to the jury, and that the trial court erred in refusing to award appellants a peremptory instruction. We shall therefore discuss the case from the standpoint of the question thus presented. Decedent, Charles A. Hahn, at the time of his death was in the employ of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and engaged in the capacity of a locomotive fireman. The accident occurred on the south track of the Short Route Railway in the city of Louisville. The railway referred to extends from near Floyd street to Thirteenth street, in the city of Louisville. It consists of a double track, and passes over a trestle commencing at Floyd and First streets. The grade between Floyd and First streets is very steep. Located about 120 feet west of Floyd street is a semaphore pole which was used for signal purposes for the benefit of all the trains of the different companies using the Short Route Railway track. The Short Route Railway was maintained, controlled, managed, and operated by the Illinois Central Railroad Company as a part of its system, under and by virtue of a lease for a period of 99 years. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company had for a long time prior to the death of the decedent been using the Short Route Railway track daily for the purpose of passing its trains over it, and was so using the track on the occasion of the accident. On the day the decedent was killed the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company was taking a train consisting of 32 cars to the Big Four Railroad. This train was in charge of two engines. The Louisville & Nashville engine was in front, while the Big Four engine was in the rear. At the time of the accident, the train was passing over the south track of the Short Route Railway. The Louisville & Nashville engine was backing. The decedent was thus placed on the side next to the semaphore. The negligence charged is that the defendants suffered and permitted the semaphore pole to be and remain so close and in such dangerous proximity to the track of the said Short Route Railway, over which the engine on which the decedent was fireman was passing, as to render same unsafe and dangerous to the decedent in the discharge of his duties as such fireman, and dangerous and unsafe to the employees of the company in operating trains along and over said track. When decedent was last seen, he was in the engine at Jackson street. He then had a conversation with the engineer, O'Hern, who told him to have his fire hot as it was a heavy pull up that hill. Some time after passing the semaphore pole, decedent was missing. His body was afterwards found some 30 or 40 feet west of the pole. An examination of the pole showed that there was a fresh mark on it at about the height of a man's head seated in the engine cab or standing in the gangway. Decedent's cap was found at the foot of the pole. A portion of his brains was also found about five feet from the pole. There was no blood or clothing found upon the wheels of the engine. Blood was found upon the wheels of the other cars beginning with the car next to the engine. The top of decedent's head was knocked off. One of his hands was found about 12 feet west of the semaphore pole. His body was cut in two. Blood and flesh were found strung along the track from about 12 feet west of the semaphore pole, where the body was found, a distance of 30 or 40 feet.

The accident occurred on July 4, 1907. It took place about 4:15 a. m. While the evidence for appellants is to the effect that it was then broad daylight, the evidence for appellee is that it was barely day, and the morning being a hazy one, it was necessary in signaling to use lighted lanterns. According to appellee's testimony, the semaphore pole was located at a point from 14 to 18 inches distant from a passing engine or car. The position of the pole was such as to be a source of danger to the men operating the trains. According to the evidence for appellants, the pole was some distance further from a passing engine or car, and it was necessary that it should be placed at that point. It was a permanent structure, and had been there during all the time that decedent was in the employ of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, a period of eight or nine months. While appellants' witnesses testify that it was necessary that the semaphore pole be located at the point where it was located, the witnesses for appellee say that it should have been placed upon the side of the tracks at a point where its presence would not be dangerous to trainmen, and in this position it would have been just as serviceable for the purposes required. It was shown by various witnesses that it was decedent's duty, while not engaged in the actual act of firing, to assist the engineer to keep a lookout. To this end it was necessary for him, not only to look in the direction in which the train was moving so as to avoid coming in contact with people or objects on the track, but also to look to the rear of the train in order to take signals from brakemen. On the other hand, there was testimony to the effect that at the particular time the decedent was killed the engineer could see the head brakeman and take all the necessary signals from him.

It is first insisted by appellants that, under the facts of this case, the jury could do nothing more than guess; that there was no evidence tending to show that decedent was actually struck by the semaphore pole; that he might have fallen out of the engine and the same result followed. While it is true that no one saw the accident, and that whatever conclusion is reached in regard to the cause of the accident is deducible only from the circumstances, in our opinion all the facts point unerringly to the conclusion that decedent was struck by the semaphore pole. It is altogether improbable that a fall from an engine would have knocked off a portion of decedent's skull. The presence of his cap at the semaphore pole, the fact that the pole was marked at a place where his head would likely come in contact with it, the character of the blow on the head, and the further fact that a portion of his brains were found at that particular point, when considered in connection with the improbability of his death having occurred in any other way, removed the case from the field of speculation, and were sufficient to authorize the finding of the jury that the decedent's head was actually struck by the pole.

But it is insisted that decedent in projecting his head from the engine was acting solely for himself, and not in the performance of any duty in the capacity of fireman. The proof, however, shows that it was the decedent's duty, not only to look in front of the engine, but to the rear of the train. If it was a hazy morning, as some of the witnesses testify, it is certainly true that decedent could get a better view, not only of the track, but of the train, by projecting his head out of the engine. Where it is the duty of the fireman to keep a lookout, we will not say that it is negligence upon his part to attempt to perform this duty in a manner that will render it most effective. Nor can we say he was acting merely for his own convenience when his purpose was to serve his master in a most commendable way.

Lastly, it is insisted that the semaphore pole was a permanent structure and necessary for the operation of trains; that the decedent had passed it daily for several months, and he must assume the risk of being injured thereby. In support of this conclusion, we are cited to 4 Thompson's Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, § 4755. It is undoubtedly true that this doctrine has been recognized in certain jurisdictions, but it is not the law of this state. Thus in the case of Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Sampson's Adm'r, 97 Ky. 65, 30 S. W. 12, this court used the following language: "It is contended that this bridge has been constructed for many years, and, no employé having been injured or killed by reason of its construction, it must be assumed that it is such a structure as is reasonably safe for its employés. We cannot adopt this view of counsel, but, on the contrary, it is plain from the record before us that this overhead structure was in no such condition as enabled this employé to discharge the duty he owed the company, and at the same time, however careful, protect himself from the danger impending by reason of the unsafe condition of the bridge. The employé assumes the ordinary risks pertaining to an employment that is often and necessarily attended with much danger, but this does not exempt the railroad company from liability when reasonable precaution on its part would save its employés from harm, and in a case like this where the exercise of the slightest care would have prevented the accident. There can be and has been no reason assigned in this case why a corporation with the means to construct a railway would in the construction of all or large bridges leave them in such a condition as involves its employes, brakemen, in imminent peril when passing through them, when with a small expenditure such structures in this regard could be made perfectly safe. We are aware of many reported cases, some of which have been referred to by counsel, where the absence of ordinary care and the means of knowing the condition of the bridge by the employe have been held as relieving the railway company from responsibility in such cases. This court, however, has not followed or approved those decisions in reference to such structures, but, on the contrary, in the case of Derby's Adm'r v. Kentucky Central Railroad Company, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 153, 4 S. W. 303, plainly intimated that if the intestate in that case had been required to be on top of the car as it passed through the structure in discharge of his duty, and was killed by reason of its being too low for the cars to pass under, the brakeman standing erect upon them, a recovery would have followed." In the case of Finley v. Louisville Ry. Co., 31 Ky. Law Rep. 740, 103 S. W. 343, this court said: "We are unable to perceive any difference in the principles governing the liability of the master for injuries to a servant caused by an obstruction overhead and one caused by an obstruction at the side or any other place." In the same connection the court uses the following language: "From these authorities it is perfectly manifest that the rule in the state of Kentucky is that the master is required to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place to work; and, unless it is in the line of the servant's duty, he is not required to make an inspection of the place of work to discover the defects and the danger incident thereto; and he is not precluded from recovering of the master when he is injured by defects or dangerous obstructions, unless he knows of them or they are patent to persons of his experience and understanding." In 26 Cyc. 1130, the rule is thus stated: "A railway company is bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence to prevent obstructions or erections on or over or near its tracks which are a source of danger to its servants, and will be held liable for injuries occasioned by its neglect of duty." Many cases are there cited to support the doctrine of the text.

Under the facts of this case, there can be no doubt that the presence of the semaphore pole at the point where it was located was a source of great danger to men operating the trains along the Short Route Railway. We cannot say as a matter of law that decedent was guilty of contributory negligence in projecting his head for the purpose of keeping a lookout at a time when it would come in contact with the semaphore pole. That was a question for the jury.

We therefore conclude that the court did not err in refusing appellants a peremptory instruction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. WILLS (§ 641*)—CREATION OF LIFE ESTATE—CONDITIONS—CREATION OF DEBTS.

A will devising a life estate to testator's son on condition that, if a judgment was entered against him subjecting his interest in the property or its use or income for his debts, the estate would cease at the date of the judgment, though appealed from, is valid.

Action by the City of Louisville against H. B. Cooke and another to recover city taxes. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

HOBSON, J. The will of George G. Cooke, made in the year 1893, contained among other things the following provision: "All the balance of my estate of every character and description, real, personal and mixed, and including the estates in remainder heretofore mentioned in this will, I hereby devise in equal parts to my two sons, H. Brent Cooke and J. Easton Cooke upon the following trusts and with the following limitations, to wit: the part devised to each of them shall be held by him for his own benefit for the period about to be mentioned, but without any power in him to sell or encumber the same, or to anticipate its income or in any way subject same to his debts, for and during his natural life or until a court of competent jurisdiction shall by a judgment hold that his interest in said property, or its use or income is liable to be subjected to his debts or liable to be sold or encumbered by him, or to have its rents and profits anticipated by him, with remainder after such death or judgment to my grandchildren now born or to be hereafter born, per capita and not per stirpes, but in case of the death of any such grandchild, leaving descendants, before the termination of the particular estate, the interest he or she would have taken shall go to his or her descendants. And though such judgment should be appealed from, still it is my will that said beneficial interest of that son against whom such judgment shall be entered shall cease and determine at the date of the judgment appealed from." The city of Louisville instituted this action against H. Brent Cooke and J. Esten Cooke to recover the city taxes for the years 1906 and 1907 on property which they had received under this clause. They filed an answer, in which they claimed to have a defeasible life estate in the property. Thereupon the city filed an amended petition setting up the conditions under which they held the life estate in the land, and asked for a sale of their life estate to satisfy the payment of the taxes. They demurred to the amended petition. Their demurrer was overruled, and a judgment was rendered against them for the taxes, adjudging that their life estate was subject to the payment of the debt; that under the will their life estate thereupon ceased, and the title to the property vested in their children. Leave was given to the city of Louisville to proceed against the grandchildren of George E. Cooke for the taxes and a sale of the property. The city of Louisville appeals.

It was held in Bull v. Ky. Nat. Bank, 90 Ky. 452, 14 S. W. 425, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 536, 12 L. R. A. 37, that a provision in a will such as that before us is valid. By section 2908, Ky. St.,¹ all taxes remaining uncollected on the 1st day of May shall be deemed a debt from the taxpayer to the city, arising as by contract and may be enforced as other contract debts, where the taxpayer is under no disability; but this statute was passed long after the will in question was made. The thing that the testator had in mind was to provide against his two sons selling or encumbering the property in any way or making it subject to debts of their own creation. He had in mind debts voluntarily created by them, not charges created by law without their volition. He had in this provision of his will no reference to the taxes required for the support of the state or municipal government. Their life estate may be sold to pay the taxes without its being terminated as provided in the will. The testator had no intention to so fix the estate as to shield it from taxation or to provide that, if his sons did not pay the taxes on the estate, it should go to his grandchildren.

Under the pleadings the court should have entered a judgment subjecting the life estate of the defendants in the property to the tax claims. If this fails to pay the taxes, the city may be allowed to amend its petition and bring the grandchildren before the court and subject the remainder.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

SMITH v. RUEHL.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky, Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. INSANE PERSONS (§ 71*)—INSANE HUSBAND—LANDS—SALE BY WIFE—PROCEEDINGS.

Ky. St. § 2131 (Russell's St. § 4634), provides that when a husband has become permanently deranged the wife may be empowered by decree to convey by her own deed any of her real estate freed as to it and its proceeds from any claim of her husband, provided that the husband shall have been adjudged a lunatic by a court of competent jurisdiction. Held, that where a wife, whose husband had been duly declared insane, filed an ex parte petition in the circuit court stating the facts and with it an authenticated copy of the record showing the lunacy adjudication and prayed for a decree authorizing the sale of her land free from any claim of her husband, and a guardian ad litem was appointed, a decree granting the relief prayed without any evidence other than the record of the inquest, and without having before the court any person representing the husband, was not objectionable for failure to make the husband's committee or guardian, if any, a party defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

2. INSANE PERSONS (§ 26*)—ADJUDICATION OF INSANITY—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A judgment of the circuit court adjudging a husband a lunatic was conclusive in a subsequent proceeding by the wife to obtain a decree authorizing a sale of her land free from any interest of the husband as provided by Ky. St. § 2131 (Russell's St. § 4634).

Appeal from Circuit Court, Campbell County.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by Rose Smith against Margaret Ruehl. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Frank V. Benton and Henry A. Faber, for appellant. William U. Warren, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In a suit by the appellant to enforce specifically a contract for the sale of real estate purchased from her by the appellee, the appellee defended upon the ground that the appellant could not make a good title. The lower court sustained her defense, and the appellant has brought the case here.

The appellant's immediate vendor obtained the land from a Mrs. Puff, and the only question in the case is whether or not Mrs. Puff conveyed a good title. In 1906 Henry Puff, the husband of Mrs. Puff, was adjudged by the circuit court of Campbell county, in a proceeding instituted for that purpose, to be a person of unsound mind and a lunatic, and he was ordered to be and was confined in one of the state institutions for the insane.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Afterwards his wife filed her ex parte petition in the Campbell circuit court, in which she set out that she was the owner of certain described land, and that her husband who had been adjudged a lunatic was incurable and confined in the state asylum for the insane, and she prayed for a decree that she have the right to dispose of any real estate that she then owned or might thereafter acquire, free from any claim of her husband. Although neither the husband, nor any person, was made a party to the petition, a summons was issued against him and executed as provided in section 53 of the Code upon the superintendent of the asylum in which he was confined. Thereafter a guardian ad litem was appointed, and when his report was filed the court, without hearing any evidence, except the record of the inquest, or having before it any person representing the husband, entered a judgment decreeing that "the petitioner, Kate Puff, may by her own deed sell and convey any of her real estate, freed as to it and its proceeds from any claim of her husband."

It is insisted that this proceeding was void, upon the ground that it was necessary under the statute that the husband, and his committee or guardian, if he had one, should be made a party defendant to the action, and a summons executed upon either the committee, father, or guardian. Section 2131 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 4634), under which the proceeding by Mrs. Puff was instituted, reads as follows: "When the husband abandons the wife and lives separate and apart from her, or abandons her without making sufficient provision for her maintenance, or when he is confined in the penitentiary for an unexpired term of more than one year, or when he becomes permanently deranged in his mind, the wife, by judgment of a court of equity, may be empowered to sell and convey by her own deed any of her real estate freed as to it and its proceeds from any claim of her husband; provided, that in case of insanity he shall have been adjudged a lunatic by a court of competent jurisdiction." Under this statute it is not, in our opinion, necessary that the wife shall do more, in a case like the one before us, than file her ex parte petition in the circuit court, stating the facts, and with it file an authenticated copy of the record showing that the husband has been adjudged a lunatic by a court of competent jurisdiction. The manner in which a husband may be divested of his interest in the estate of his wife is entirely within the control of the legislative department of the state, and it seems that the Legislature only deemed it necessary that the wife should bring to the notice of the chancellor by her petition the disability under which her husband was laboring, and that then the court might make such orders as were necessary to grant the relief desired without service of process upon any person or the appointment of a guardian ad litem. It would probably have been better if the Legislature had prescribed more definitely the practice or method of procedure, or have directed that the committee or guardian or some person interested in the person and estate of the person of unsound mind should be brought before the court to represent his interests; but it did not see proper to do this, and we do not feel authorized to supply by judicial interpretation a system of practice and procedure that the legislative department did not deem it necessary to incorporate in the statute.

We are confirmed in the correctness of our construction of the statute by the fact that section 2145 in the same chapter in the statute (Russell's St. § 4635), directing how the inchoate right of dower of an insane married woman may be divested upon the petition of her husband, provides that: "The wife and her committee, if she have one, shall be made defendants to said action; if she have no committee, the court shall appoint an attorney to defend for her, * * * and if the court be satisfied by the proof that the wife is a confirmed lunatic, it may adjudge the sale and conveyance of her inchoate right of dower in said land; and if she has a committee, the court may direct that he unite with the husband in the deed conveying said land; or if she has no committee, the court shall appoint a commissioner, who shall unite with the husband in such conveyance. A deed so executed shall pass such wife's inchoate right of dower. Before any judgment pursuant to this section shall be rendered, the husband, with at least two good sureties, shall execute, before the court, a covenant to the commonwealth for the benefit of the wife, to be approved by the court, that she shall be paid the value of her right of dower in said land should such right thereafter become complete." It will thus be seen that, in providing for the sale of land in which an insane wife has an inchoate right of dower, particular care is taken to protect her interest, and if the Legislature had intended that the same or a similar practice should be followed in a proceeding to divest the husband of his interest it would have so declared. Why the Legislature did not see proper to guard as carefully the interest of the husband as that of the wife, we are unable to say; but that it did not is manifest from the sections of the statute quoted.

This view of the case renders it unnecessary to consider the regularity of the process served upon the husband. Mrs. Puff filed with her petition copies of the records of the Campbell circuit court showing that her husband was in that court adjudged to be a lunatic. The judgment of that court and the orders appearing are conclusive in this action of the question that the proceedings in the Campbell circuit court by which the husband was adjudged a lunatic were regular.

Crown Real Estate Co. v. Rogers (Ky.) 117 S. W. 275.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is reversed for proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

PHILLIPS v. HUNDLEY et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 4, 1909.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 21*)—ADMINISTRATORS C. T. A.—VOID OR ERRONEOUS APPOINTMENT—TIME FOR REVIEW.

The appointment, as an administrator with the will annexed, of another than the one entitled to, and asking for, the appointment, governed, as provided by Ky. St. § 3891, by sections 3896, 3897 (Russell's St. §§ 3937, 3919, 3920), as to appointment of administrators, is not void for want of jurisdiction, but only erroneous; so that it can be reviewed only by an appeal from the county court to the circuit court within 60 days of the order, and not by appeal from an order denying a motion made at a subsequent term to set aside such appointment and appoint the one entitled to it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County.

"To be officially reported."

Proceedings relative to appointment of an administrator with the will annexed of J. G. Phillips, deceased. From a judgment of the circuit court dismissing an appeal from the county court, Bird Burton Phillips appeals; E. N. Hundley and others being the appellees. Affirmed.

H. P. Cooper and Lindsay & Edelen, for appellant. W. W. Spalding, W. C. McChord, and Samuel Avritt, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. J. G. Phillips died testate in Marion county in December, 1907. In his original will he nominated E. N. Hundley as executor, but by a codicil John B. Phillips and Owen D. Thomas were substituted as executors in place of Hundley. The decedent left surviving him his widow and four children; one of the children being the appellant, Bird Burton Phillips. The first regular county court day after the death of Mr. Phillips occurred on January 6, 1908. The county court that convened on this day was adjourned until January 10th, when the executors Thomas and Phillips offered the will for probate, to which Hundley objected. For various reasons not necessary to mention the disposition of the case was continued until January 22d, when the county court met and probated the will; all opposition to it having been withdrawn. After the probate the nominated executors stated to the court that, if W. C. Rogers and J. A. Kelly were appointed administrators with the will annexed, they would relinquish their right to qualify. In this arrangement the widow and children, except appellant, also concurred. Thereupon the appellant demanded the right to be appointed administratrix, but the court appointed Rogers and Kelly, and on that day they qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties. The record shows that when the parties appeared in court on the 22d day of January, and announced their desire that Kelly and Rogers be appointed, "Bird Burton Phillips, a daughter of J. G. Phillips, deceased, thereupon by attorney demanded that she be appointed and qualified as administratrix with the will annexed in lieu of the said J. A. Kelly and W. C. Rogers, and in lieu of all other persons," which motion the court overruled; and on the same day the following order was entered: "In the Matter of the Estate of J. G. Phillips. Bird Burton Phillips by attorney moved the court to set aside so much of the order this day entered as appoints J. A. Kelly and W. C. Rogers administrators with the will annexed of J. G. Phillips, and refused to appoint her, Bird Phillips, as a void order; and, the court being advised, overruled said motion, to which Bird Burton Phillips objected and excepted, and prayed an appeal to the circuit court." The county court record also shows that on February 3, 1908, which was the first day of the second regular term of the county court after the death of Mr. Phillips, the following order was entered: "In the Matter of the Estate of James G. Phillips. This day came Miss Bird Phillips, by attorney, and moved the court to appoint her administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of her father J. G. Phillips, deceased. The court, for reasons sufficient to itself, declined to take action of any kind upon said motion." And again, on the 2d day of March, 1908, Miss Phillips appeared in court, and renewed her motion, which was continued until March 11, 1908. On May 4, 1908, Miss Phillips filed her affidavit in the county court, setting out her qualifications for and right to the office of administratrix, and "moved the court to set aside as void the former order of this court appointing W. C. Rogers and J. A. Kelly as administrators of the estate of her father, J. G. Phillips, and to appoint her as administratrix of her said father's estate with the will annexed; and the court, being sufficiently advised, overruled each of said motions, and on account of the said former appointment refused to grant letters of administration to Bird Phillips, to all of which Bird Phillips objected and excepted and prayed an appeal to the Marion circuit court, which is granted." On May 26th Miss Phillips filed and perfected her appeal in the circuit court, and when the case came up for hearing, the appellees moved to dismiss the appeal, because it was not prosecuted in time. The circuit court sustained this motion, and Miss Phillips appeals.

It will be observed, as shown by the records of the county court, that Miss Phillips appeared in the county court when Kelly and Rogers were appointed as administrators, and asked to be appointed in their place, and that when her motion was overruled, she prayed an appeal to the circuit court, but did not perfect it. Appeals in matters like this must be prosecuted from the county court to the circuit court within 60 days after the order appealed from is made in the county court. The order of the county court, made in January appointing Kelly and Rogers administrators and refusing to appoint Miss Phillips, was a final and appealable order. And if she desired to have this order reviewed in the circuit court, an appeal should have been taken and perfected in that court within 60 days thereafter. It is evident, however, that the appeal to the circuit court was prosecuted, not from the orders of the county court made in January, but from the order made in May. In support of the right to appeal from the order made in May it is argued that the appointment of Kelly and Rogers under the circumstances stated was void, and hence the county court should have set it aside at any time; and, if it refused, the circuit court should set it aside on appeal. That being a void order, it was not important whether the motion to vacate it was made during the term—that is, before the regular term of the county court in February—or afterwards, and that when Miss Phillips moved the court in May to revoke the appointment of Kelly and Rogers and substitute her, she had the right, within 60 days thereafter, to appeal from the order overruling her motion, and have the matter of the appointment of Kelly and Rogers, and the refusal to appoint her, inquired into. In this view of the case we are unable to agree. If the order appointing Kelly and Rogers was void upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint them, there would be much force in the argument presented by her counsel. But the appointment of Rogers and Kelly was not void. It was only erroneous. We may concede that under section 3896 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 3919) Miss Phillips was entitled to be appointed at the time Kelly and Rogers were, if the widow had declined the appointment; but, as their appointment was only erroneous, and the court had jurisdiction to appoint them, Miss Phillips, who objected to their appointment, should have prosecuted within 60 days thereafter an appeal to the circuit court, and failing to do this, she lost her right to complain about the appointment. In Underwood v. Underwood, 111 Ky. 966, 65 S. W. 130, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1287, the court held that the appointment of a public administrator before the expiration of three months after the death of a decedent was void—holding that under section 3905 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 3920) the court had no jurisdiction to make the appointment until the three months had expired; but this rule has never been applied to the appointment of administrators under sections 3896, 3897 (Russell's St. 3919, 3920), of the Kentucky Statutes; and the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed is, as provided in section 3891 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 3937), regulated by these sections. On the contrary, we held in Buckner v. L. & N. R. Co., 120 Ky. 600, 87 S. W. 777, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 1009, Young's Adm'r v. L. & N. R. Co., 121 Ky. 483, 89 S. W. 475, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 451, Spayd v. Brown, 102 S. W. 823, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 438, Cunningham v. Clay (Ky.) 112 S. W. 852, and McFarland v. L. & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 113 S. W. 82, that the appointment of an administrator, not of kin to the deceased, before the second county court day after the death of the intestate, was erroneous, but not void. It, therefore, follows that as the order of the county court appointing Rogers and Kelly was erroneous, the only way to correct it was by an appeal to the circuit court within 60 days from the date of the order making the appointment.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

BROKERS (§ 56*)—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—EFFICIENT AGENT—PROCURING CAUSE OF CONTRACT.

Where a real estate broker who had been authorized to sell the timber on a tract of land merely informed the purchaser, who had been negotiating with the owner for some time in regard to purchasing the land, that he had the land for sale, but did nothing further, and knew nothing of the subsequent negotiations which led up to the sale, which was not made until the vendor agreed that a mill and the down timber would be included, and also agreed to the purchaser's terms as to time of payment, he was not the efficient agent in, or the procuring cause of the contract, so as to entitle him to a commission.

Action by R. A. Hurst against C. P. Goff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. C. Hyden, W. W. McGuire, and O. H. Pollard, for appellant. J. J. C. Bach, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. R. A. Hurst brought this suit against C. P. Goff. He alleged in his petition that Goff had employed him to procure for him a purchaser for the timber on a tract of 1,076 acres of land known as the Ware Cannel Coal tract, and had agreed to pay him $500 upon condition that he would procure him a purchaser for the timber at the price of $10,000 that he procured such a purchaser who bought the property, and that Goff had refused to pay him the $500. Goff filed an answer in which he denied that Hurst had procured a purchaser of the timber, or that the sale was in any wise induced by him. There was a trial of the issues thus joined resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Goff appeals.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The evidence introduced by Hurst on the trial was in substance as follows: Samuel E. Patton in the spring of 1906 had some correspondence with Goff relative to the purchase of the timber, but they came to no agreement. In October the negotiations were renewed, and in December no agreement between them had been reached. At this time Hurst met Goff in Jackson and had a talk with him about finding him a purchaser for the timber. On December 6th he wrote Goff the following letter: "Jackson, Ky., Dec. 6, 1906. Cas Goff, Esq., Paris, Ky. Dear Sir: I had a talk with you about the property you were interested in in this county last fall and you indicated to me that if I found a purchaser to let you know and you would give me the right to sell same. I have a purchaser and he will act promptly. Please put the lowest price on the timber of each tract and give me the number of acres and the location of each tract and at once, and write me by return mail and oblige, Respectfully, R. A. Hurst." On December 10th Goff wrote Hurst as follows: "Paris, Ky., Dec. 10, 1906. Mr. R. A. Hurst, Jackson, Ky. Dear Sir: The only piece of timber we are offering now for sale is a boundary of 1.076 acres at the mouth of Troublesome Creek, known as the Ware Cannel Coal Cos. boundary. The standing timber on this boundary I offer for $10,000.00. If you can find a buyer at the price will allow you 5% or $500.00. Very Resp., C. P. Goff."

Hurst immediately upon receiving this letter from Goff saw Patton and informed him that he had the tract of land for sale, and that it could be purchased for $10,000. He asked him to take the matter up with Goff. Patton said he would examine the timber, and take the matter up with Goff. He did make an examination of the timber, and on the 31st of December he closed a trade with Goff, by which he paid Goff $10,000 for the timber on the land standing and down and a mill Goff owned. Hurst did not notify Goff that Patton was the man he was furnishing as a buyer. He did not introduce Patton to Goff. He knew nothing of the correspondence carried on between them for the sale of the timber. He was not present at any of the meetings they had, and knew nothing of them. He did not notify Goff at any time that he had seen Patton about the timber, and Goff did not know that Hurst claimed to have had anything to do with the matter until a month after the trade was made. Patton did not buy the timber through Hurst, but bought it independently of him of Goff, and he did not make the trade with Goff until Goff agreed to put in the mill and down timber, and also agreed to his terms as to the time of payment of the price. The rule is that, to be entitled to a commission, a broker must be an efficient agent in, or the procuring cause of the contract, or it is sometimes expressed he must be the primary procuring cause or controlling cause. Collier v. Johnson, 67 S. W. 830, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 2453, and cases cited. In the case at bar Hurst was in no sense the efficient or procuring cause of the contract. At the time that Hurst saw Patton, he had been negotiating for some months with Goff for the purchase of the timber, and Goff had priced it to him at $10,000. Hurst did nothing except to see Patton and inform him that he had the tract of land for sale, and ask him to take the matter up with Goff. He gave Patton no information that he did not already have except to inform him of his agency. After telling Patton this, he did not see Patton any more and had nothing to do with the matter; but Goff went on and made the trade with Patton without any help from Hurst. To say on this proof that Hurst was the primary controlling cause of the contract would be to make the rule mean nothing and to ignore the principle on which the rule rests. On the admitted facts the court should have instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant. Alexander v. Breeden, 14 B. Mon. 154, is not like this case. There the agent procured the purchaser, and the owner of the property prevented him from selling it for the price named as he would have done but for the owner's interference. In Coleman v. Meade, 18 Bush. 358, the broker procured the purchaser, and he was accepted by the owner of the property.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

DAMAGES (§ 131*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVENESS.

Plaintiff, a steam fitter earning $2.25 per day, was injured on August 9, 1907. On September 16th following he returned to work, and worked 12 days in that month, losing but few days thereafter because of inability to work, and in November following his wages were increased. He had no broken bones or dislocated joints. Several physicians testified that he had a curvature of the spine, and that he had suffered a severe nervous shock, and that pressure on either side of the spinal column which was enlarged and swollen increased the pulse. There was other evidence, however, that the increased temperature and pulse may have been due to acute indigestion from which he suffered, and, though the physicians testified that his condition would likely grow worse, there was no satisfactory evidence of a permanent impairment of his power to earn money. Held, that a verdict for $5,000 was so excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice and required a new trial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division. "Not to be officially reported."

Action by George Roser against the Louisville Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh, for appellant. Bennett H. Young, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellee, George Roser, instituted this action against appellant, Louisville Railway Company, to recover damages for personal injuries. The jury returned a verdict in favor of appellee for the sum of $5,000, and the Louisville Railway Company appeals.

George Roser was a passenger on one of appellant's Second Street cars on August 9, 1907. He was on his way to the railroad shops in South Louisville, where he was employed as a steam fitter. The car was going south, and as it neared Chestnut street a work car going east on Chestnut street reached the intersection. The work car had the right of way under the rules of the company, and it was the duty of those in charge of the Second Street car to stop and wait until the work car had crossed over the intersection. The motorman on the Second Street car knew this to be the rule and endeavored to obey the same by stopping his car, but was unable to do so because the air brake was out of order. There was also testimony by a former employé to the effect that he at one time had charge of car 901—the car on which appellee was a passenger—and that the brake was then out of order, and he reported this fact to his superior officers. The latter denied that he made any such report. When the Second Street car struck the work car, appellee was thrown from the platform to the ground. He was picked up in a semiconscious condition, in which he remained for about 36 hours.

Appellant urges as grounds for reversal: (1) Newly discovered evidence; (2) misconduct of counsel; and (3) that the verdict is excessive. In view of the conclusion of the court, we shall consider only the last ground.

The evidence as to appellee's injuries is as follows: The collision occurred on August 9, 1907. At the time of the accident, appellee worked for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company as a steam fitter, and had been working for that company for five months prior to the date of the accident, at $2.25 per day. On the 16th day of September, 1907, he went back to work and worked 12 days in September. From that time on he lost but a few days from his usual occupation of a steam pipe fitter. The work in which he was engaged required a strong man. In November following the accident his wages were increased from $2.25 to $2.35 per day. He had no broken bones or dislocated joints.

Dr. Schackner, who was appointed by the lower court to examine appellee, made two examinations; one in May prior to the trial, and one on the day of the trial. He testified that on each occasion he found appellee's temperature above normal and some acceleration of the pulse. This condition, however, could be attributed to various causes. He discovered no injury to appellee's person, except, perhaps, a slight impairment of the motion in one shoulder. There might be some slight lateral curvature of the spine. He found no shrinkage nor atrophy of any part; no evidence of structural impairment. Appellee was well nursed, and his muscles were solid, not flabby. There might be a very slight rigidity of the muscles of the back.

Dr. Dudley S. Reynolds testified that he found that appellee's right shoulder blade seemed detached. Close to the ribs it had less motion than the left shoulder blade. The right shoulder blade was held down. There was a curvature of the spine, which, in his opinion, was the result of violence. This curvature of the spine was not there on the former examination. There was some rigidity of the muscles in the back, which was a nervous manifestation. There were points of tenderness at three places in appellee's spine. When asked the question if appellee was liable to get better or worse, the witness replied that he had grown worse since the first examination.

Dr. Forest Gabbert, who treated appellee at the time of his injuries, testified that appellee was more or less unconscious at the time. His back was swollen, also his right shoulder. The latter was also considerably bruised and tender. The whole spinal column was more or less wrenched and tender on pressure. Witness called in Dr. Breidenthal, because he thought the case was more serious than he anticipated at first. Appellee worked against the advice of witness. Had had control and observation of appellee since the accident. In answer to the question whether or not appellee was getting better or worse, witness replied that he was getting worse. Could not say whether he suffered much or little pain. Appellee suffered pain on pressure and complained more or less of pain. Witness also testified that appellee's temperature was above normal, and to the further fact that his pulse and breathing were above normal.

Dr. George B. Breidenthal testified that he made an examination of appellee on August 25th, and found him extremely nervous and apparently in much pain. His temperature, respiration, and pulse were above normal. In answer to the question whether or not appellee was getting better or worse, the witness replied that he was getting worse. In the opinion of witness, if appellee were going to get better he would have improved before that.

Dr. Curran Pope testified that he examined appellee thoroughly from head to feet. He found his temperature, pulse, and respiration considerably above normal. Appellee at the time of the examination was in a state of very severe nervous shock. There was a scar about one inch in length, rather deep, just above the left ear, and also a scar on the left ear about where it joined the skin of the scalp. Appellee's spine was curved from side to side; that is, it had a lateral curvature. There was a place four by six inches on either side of the spinal column that was enlarged and swollen. Pressure upon this place raised the pulse to 120. Appellee's shoulder had been considerably wrenched, and the shoulder blade was in such condition you could not slip your hand under, and the blade was not as freely movable as it should be. In answer to the question whether or not appellee would get better or worse, witness replied that he did not think he would get better, but that there was every probability of his getting worse. In his opinion appellee had not the proper nerve force to carry on the functions of the body. From the character of the injuries received, witness was of the opinion that appellee had suffered a great deal of pain. Witness had some doubt as to whether or not appellee was in condition to do proper work.

Appellee himself testified that, while he had worked, it was always accompanied with much pain. He had to work because it was necessary to support his family.

Here, then, we have a case where a man, although injured, continues to perform the laborious work of a steam pipe fitter. It is true that he lost some time from his work because his services were not needed; but he lost very few days because of his inability to work. It was developed on cross-examination that the fact that appellee's temperature, pulse, and respiration were above normal may have been due to other causes. He was suffering from acute indigestion. This may have had something to do with it. Furthermore, the very fact that he was undergoing an examination may have had some bearing upon the condition of his pulse, temperature, and respiration. When it was sought to ascertain from the witnesses whether or not in their opinion appellee's injuries were permanent, the answers of the physicians were to the effect that he would likely grow worse. There was no positive statement from which it could be fairly deduced that appellee's power to earn money would be permanently impaired. Notwithstanding the testimony of the physicians that appellee was not in fit condition to do proper work, the fact nevertheless remains that he was actually employed in the work of a steam fitter, and that his wages for that service had been increased from $2.25 to $2.35 per day. The physicians seem to have been rather guarded in their opinions, and it is apparent from their testimony that appellee might continue to grow worse for a certain length of time and thereafter grow better. All that they say may be true, and yet appellee have suffered no permanent impairment in his power to earn money. They were just as positive in their opinions that he was not capable of doing proper work at the very time that he was doing proper work as they were in the belief that he would continue to grow worse. In our opinion their testimony partakes too much of mere speculation and is by no means convincing that appellee was permanently injured. That being the case, we conclude that, although a punitive damage instruction was authorized by the evidence, a verdict for $5,000 was so excessive as to appear at first blush to have been the result of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury. We are therefore of the opinion that the ends of justice require that this case be remanded for a new trial.

Judgment reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

MILLIKEN, County Treasurer, et al. v. GEORGE L. GILLUM & SON.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 5, 1909.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 204*)—ALLOWANCE OF CLAIM—ORDER—INDEFINITENESS.

An order of the fiscal court that "the following claims were allowed and made payable out of the county levy for 1906: 'Roads,' Flowers, J. S. Commissioner at Duncan's on Muddy River $1,650.00," held void for indefiniteness; it being impossible to determine from the language of the order whether he was appointed commissioner to construct a bridge, public road, or some other public improvement not described.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 317; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 387*)—COUNTY RECORDS—EXTRANEOUS EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The fiscal court, like other courts, must speak through its records, and extraneous evidence is not admissible to show the meaning of its orders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1702; Dec. Dig. § 387.*]

3. BRIDGES (§ 20*)—FISCAL COURTS—DELEGATION OF DISCRETION.

Although the fiscal court cannot delegate to an agent the discretion with which the law

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes clothes it, it may after determining the necessity therefor appoint a commissioner, not a member of the court, to construct a bridge or contract for its construction, but it should in advance direct through its records the character of the bridge and its cost, and not allow the commissioner a round sum for the work, or leave to his judgment the character of the work and the cost, or allow him to obtain the money in advance for the doing of the work, either by a sale or assignment of the warrants therefor, or collecting it from the county treasurer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

4. COUNTIES (§ 155*)—FUNDS—DISPOSITION.

The fiscal court has no power to order the county treasurer to pay into the hands of a third person the county's money, to be paid out by him months later in satisfaction of county indebtedness created by him, nor does the fact that such method is customary sanction or legalize the method.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 223-225; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

5. COUNTIES (§ 64*)—FISCAL COURTS—VOID APPOINTMENTS.

An order of the fiscal court appointing one of its members a commissioner to do certain county work was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

6. COUNTIES (§ 167*)—FISCAL COURTS—VOID ORDERS—COUNTY WARRANTS—EQUITY.

Plaintiffs discounted two warrants issued to a bridge commissioner upon a void order of the fiscal court of L. county. Both parties acted in good faith. The parties to the transaction only followed a custom which, though unsanctioned by law, had long obtained in the county. The bridge constructed with part of the money received from plaintiffs was of excellent material and workmanship, and its cost was less than expected by the fiscal court. The fiscal court accepted the bridge, which was used regularly by the people, and is worth the cost of construction. Held, that equity required that defendant county should pay plaintiffs the amount they furnished to construct the bridge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 249; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

7. COUNTIES (§ 167*)—FISCAL COURTS—VOID ORDERS—COUNTY WARRANTS—EQUITY.

Since the bridge commissioner sold plaintiffs void warrants, he is liable to them for the difference between what they paid him for the warrants and the amount for which they were given judgment against the county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 249; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Logan County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by George L. Gillum & Son against John W. Milliken, as treasurer of Logan county, and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. W. Davis and S. R. Crewdson, for appellants. Browder & Browder, for appellees.

HOBSON, J. The fiscal court of Logan county during its regular October term, 1905, allowed numerous claims, including one of $1,650 involved in this action. That part of the order allowing this claim is as follows: "The following claims were allowed and made payable out of the county levy for 1906: 'Roads.' Flowers, J. S. Commissioner at Duncan's on Muddy River $1,650.00." Soon after the allowance of the claim, Flowers, who was a magistrate of Logan county and therefore a member of the fiscal court, procured of the clerk of the Logan county court two warrants covering the amount named; one of them being for $450 and the other for $1,200. In November, 1905, he assigned the two warrants to appellees, George L. Gillum & Son, a firm composed of George L. Gillum and Perry Gillum, engaged in the hardware business in Russellville, and received of them $1,552.40 therefor. Of the amount thus received, Flowers expended $1,108.17 in constructing an iron bridge on Muddy river, where it is crossed by the Russellville and Morgantown road near Duncan's in Logan county. Following the completion of the bridge, the appellees, George L. Gillum & Son, demanded of the appellant John W. Milliken, treasurer of Logan county, payment of each of the warrants assigned them by Flowers, but that officer refused to pay them, and appellees thereupon brought suit against him in his official capacity and against Logan county and also against J. H. Flowers to recover the $1,650 claimed to be due them upon the warrants.

The answer filed by the treasurer for himself and Logan county denies any liability on their part upon the warrants, claims that both are void for uncertainty, that the fiscal court was without power to appoint Flowers commissioner to construct the bridge, and that the assignment of the warrants by the latter to appellees was unauthorized and void, as were his acts in constructing the bridge and expending therefor such part of the money he received from appellees as was applied to that purpose. The answer of Flowers alleged the bona fides of the assignment of the warrants to appellees, and of his acts in constructing the bridge and expending therefor the money received of appellees, and also alleged that out of the balance of $444.23 he claimed was left in his hands after paying for the bridge he paid $200 for road work in the Russellville magisterial district which the fiscal court had directed him as commissioner to have done, but later refused to pay him for, and was entitled to $42 for his services in superintending the building of the bridge, and these sums, it was averred, he was entitled to be paid out of the $444.23, left in his hands, but $184.23, and the latter sum he was, as alleged, entitled to retain for services rendered by him as commissioner of public roads by order of the fiscal court. Responsive pleading controverting both answers was filed by appellees.

The circuit court on the issues thus made, and following the taking of proof by the parties, rendered the following judgment, viz.: "These consolidated causes coming on to be heard upon the pleadings and testimony and the court being advised, it is now adjudged by the court that the plaintiffs, George L. Gillum and Perry Gillum, partners trading as George L. Gillum & Son, recover of the defendant, Logan county, the sum of $1,108.17, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 1st day of January, 1907, and two-thirds of their costs in these actions expended, for which execution may issue after 10 days. To which judgment the defendant Logan county objects and excepts, and prays an appeal to the Court of Appeals, which is granted. It is further adjudged by the court that the plaintiffs as above named recover of the defendant J. H. Flowers the sum of $454.83, with interest thereon from January 1, 1907, until paid at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and one-third of their costs in these actions expended, for which execution may issue after 10 days. To all of which judgment against him the defendant J. S. Flowers objects and excepts, and prays an appeal to the Court of Appeals, which is granted. The court delivered a written opinion in these actions, which is hereby filed and made a part of this record, and these cases are hereby continued." We concur in the conclusions expressed in the written opinion of the circuit court that the order allowing Flowers the $1,650 was and is void, because of its indefiniteness and the want of authority on the part of the fiscal court to appoint Flowers, one of its members, a commissioner to construct a bridge. It is impossible to determine from the language of the order for what purpose Flowers was appointed a commissioner, whether to construct a bridge, public road, or some other public improvement not described.

The fiscal court, like other courts, must speak through its records. Extraneous evidence to show the meaning of its orders will not be allowed. As the fiscal court, though a court of record, is one of limited jurisdiction and powers the greater reason exists for applying to its records the rule referred to, otherwise the counties of the state could not conduct their monetary affairs with safety, or protect themselves from expensive and unnecessary litigation. The fiscal court cannot delegate to an agent the discretion with which the law clothes it. It may, after determining the necessity therefor, appoint a commissioner, not a member of the court, to construct a bridge or contract for its construction, but in doing so it should in advance direct through its records what character of bridge it should be and its cost, instead of allowing him a round sum with which to do the work and leaving to his judgment what shall be the character of the work and its cost, or allowing him to obtain the money in advance of the doing of the work, either by a sale and assignment of warrants therefor, or collecting it from the county treasurer.

The treasurer of the county is the legal custodian of its money and responsible upon his official bond for its safe-keeping and payment, and the fiscal court has no power to order the county's money paid by the treasurer into the hands of another person to be paid out by the latter some months later in satisfaction of the county's indebtedness created by the person receiving the money. Nor can the fact that such a method of building and paying for roads and bridges had long been a matter of custom in Logan county sanction or legalize the method. In the instant case the warrants embracing the sum allowed for the construction of the bridge were assigned to and discounted by appellees in November or December, 1905, when the commissioner had not made a contract for the construction of the bridge, and did not know what it would cost. The money he received upon the warrants he held until the summer of 1906, when about two-thirds of it was paid on the bridge, leaving the remainder in his hands, which, it is claimed for the county, has not since been expended as contemplated by the fiscal court. Such methods of conducting the business of a county cannot receive our approval. In no event had the fiscal court the power to appoint Flowers commissioner to construct the bridge in question, as he was a magistrate of Logan county, and by virtue thereof a member of the fiscal court of the county. In the case of Pulaski County v. Sears, 117 Ky. 249, 78 S. W. 123, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1381, it was held that an order of the fiscal court investing the county judge with the general supervision of the roads of the county and making the magistrate in each magisterial district his assistant was void. In Boyd County v. Arthur, 118 Ky. 932, 82 S. W. 613, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 906, it is said: "The statutes that we have referred to have the same end in view when they forbid members of the fiscal court being interested in any contract or work. * * * Vaughn v. Hullett, 119 Ky. 380, 84 S. W. 309, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 35; Daviess County v. Goodwin, 116 Ky. 801, 77 S. W. 185, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1081. It is patent, however, from the record that the warrants issued to Flowers were discounted by appellees in good faith, and that Flowers also acted in good faith in so disposing of the warrants. Indeed, the record casts no reflection upon the character of any of the parties to the transaction, but, on the contrary, shows that they but followed a custom which, though unsanctioned by the law, had long obtained in Logan county. It is conceded that the bridge constructed across Muddy river near Duncan's, under the supervision of Flowers, was of excellent material and workmanship, and that its cost was less than was expected by the fiscal court. As before stated, the bridge cost $1,108.17, and this sum was admittedly paid by Flowers out of the $1,552.40 obtained from appellees upon the warrants. As the fiscal court of Logan county seems to have accepted the bridge and it has been in use by the people of the county since its completion and is conceded to be worth the amount expended by Flowers in its construction, we think equity requires that Logan county should pay appellees the $1,108.17 they furnished to construct the bridge. Therefore in so adjudging the circuit court did not err. As Flowers, however innocent of any purpose to wrong them, sold and assigned appellees the two void warrants, he is liable to them for the difference between what they paid him for the warrants and the amount for which they were given judgment against Logan county; that is, they were entitled to recover of him $454.83, with interest from January 1, 1907, and for this sum and interest the circuit court very properly gave appellees judgment against Flowers.

The circuit court did not pass upon the credits and demands asserted against the claim of appellees and against Logan county by the answer of Flowers, nor will we do so, as it appears that these matters cannot be relied on to defeat appellees' claim, and besides they, with other like demands, are involved in another action between Flowers and Logan county, pending in the Logan circuit court.

Finding no error in the judgment appealed from, it is affirmed both as to Logan county and J. H. Flowers.

WICKHAM'S ADM'R v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a watchman employed to keep trespassers on a railroad track from being injured by trains suddenly stepped without looking from a place of safety before an approaching train, which he knew was due, he was negligent as a matter of law barring a recovery for his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 739; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 137*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CARE REQUIRED OF MASTER.

A railroad does not owe to its watchman employed to keep trespassers on the track from being injured by trains the duty of regulating the speed of its trains, and it is not liable for the death of the watchman struck by a train, merely because it operated the train at a negligent speed, because of the fact that the public customarily used the track at that point, which was within an incorporated town.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 274; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Spencer County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by John Wickham's administrator against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Reasor & Crume, Edwards, Ogden & Peak, and Peak & Holland, for appellant. Luther C. Willis and Benjamin D. Warfield, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellant, J. W. Crume, as administrator of John Wickham, instituted this action against appellee, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, to recover damages for the destruction of the life of John Wickham. At the conclusion of all the testimony the court awarded appellee a peremptory instruction.

The deceased, John Wickham, was killed on April 29, 1908. At the time of his death he was 53 years of age. He was then in the employ of appellee in its South Louisville yards as day watchman, and had been working in that capacity for about six months. He was earning $40 per month. His duties as watchman were to protect the property of appellant in its yard at the point where he was stationed, and to see that school children and other trespassers were kept off the track and not injured by passing trains. The deceased was killed in Highland Park, an incorporated town of about 2,000 inhabitants. Highland Park is situated about one-half mile south of the southern limits of the city of Louisville. Its principal thoroughfare is Ottawa street, which crosses the tracks of appellee about 150 feet north of the station at Highland Park, about 680 feet south of the "FX" tower, and about 700 feet south of the point where decedent was killed. At the "FX" tower, the point near which decedent lost his life, appellee had three tracks, namely: North Main, South Main, and "Drill track." Just north of the "FX" tower the tracks became numerous and constitute appellee's yards; there being 12 tracks in all. There is a street on each side of the yards, one on the east and one on the west, running north from Ottawa street. They run for a short distance only. At the place where decedent was killed, appellee's right of way was about 80 feet wide. There was proof tending to show that a number of persons passed across the track at this point. Appellant was struck by train No. 4, which is a fast passenger train running between Nashville and Cincinnati. It was due at the "FX" tower just north of Highland Park at 8:43 a. m. It was on time on the morning of April 29, 1908. It was then running between 25 and 30 miles an hour. Its speed was a little less than its usual rate. Just prior to the accident the decedent was in the tower house talking to one Harry Barker. In the presence of decedent, and at a time when decedent was close enough to hear, Mr. Daniels, the tower operator, told Barker that No. 4 was approaching. Barker and decedent then left the tower house. Train No. 4 did not stop at the tower house. When it arrived it gave the usual signals of its approach by blowing the whistle and continually ringing the bell. The decedent went to a point between North Main track, that on which No. 4 was running, and track No. 1. At that time he was in a safe place. These tracks were about 10 feet apart. He then walked a distance of about 25 feet between these two tracks until he got where the switch target was located. As decedent approached the switch target, the yard engine was coming toward the switch target with a number of freight cars attached, and was making the usual and customary noises incident to a moving freight train. When decedent reached the switch target, he turned to pass between it and the North Main track. This brought him in dangerous proximity to train No. 4, which was then passing. Up to that time he had been in a safe place. When he attempted to step between the switch target and the North Main track, train No. 4 was right on him, and he was struck by the engine and killed.

It is not charged that there was any negligence in failing to give the usual, customary, and timely warning of the approach of the train. It is not alleged that those in charge of the train saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen, decedent in time to avoid injuring him. The only negligence relied upon is the speed of the train. To sustain this contention it is argued that it was shown that there was a customary use by the public of appellee's tracks at that point, and, as the accident happened in an incorporated town, appellee should have run its train with reference to the presence of such persons, and that it was negligence on its part to pass that point at a speed of 25 or 30 miles an hour. In considering this question, it must be remembered that there was some evidence tending to show that decedent had actual notice of the approaching train. Whether this be true or not, it is certainly true that decedent was employed to keep trespassers on the tracks from being injured. He had been employed as watchman for six months. It was his duty to know the time of the arrival and departure of trains at that point. What, then, was the duty of appellee towards decedent?

In the case of Conniff v. L. H. & St. L. Ry. Co., 124 Ky. 763, 99 S. W. 1154, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 982, where damages were sought for the death of a flagman who was stationed by the railroad company at a street crossing in Louisville to warn persons of the approach of trains, this court said: "It was as much the duty of Conniff to keep a lookout for trains approaching the crossing, and give warning to travelers, when he was arranging the switch targets, as it was when he had finished his task and was engaged in no other way than as flagman. Resting the case upon this ground, appellee did not owe Conniff any lookout duty, and was under no obligation to give him warning of the approach of its trains; in fact, owed him no duty, until, as the court said in the instruction, he was discovered to be in peril."

In the case of Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r (Ky.) 115 S. W. 699, the distinction between the duty owing by railroad companies to a licensee and to those whose duty it is to know of the time of the arrival of trains is clearly pointed out. There the decedent was a brakeman in the employ of the Southern Railway Company. He was at work in the railroad company's yards at Georgetown, Ky., and was engaged with others in shifting cars. This court, in discussing the question of excessive speed, said: "If Harrod had been a section workman in the yards at Georgetown, his case would not have been less than it is. Sectionmen work in railroad yards, as well as in the country, at all times, and may reasonably be expected there at any time. They must be aware of the time of the running of the trains over the track on which they are at work. Even though those in charge of a fast train knew they were working at that point, or might reasonably be expected to be working there, they also knew it was their duty to maintain a clear track for that train, and to themselves keep out of its way, as they well could. Would the speed of the train, even though negligence to the passengers or licensees, have been negligence as to them? We think not, and it would make no difference whether they were in the yards at Georgetown, at Kincaid, or in the country, where there was no station, for it must always be borne in mind that negligence toward a person is the antithesis of a duty owing to that person. But the facts of this case carry us one step further. Decedent actually knew that train No. 4, a fast through passenger train, was due to pass his point at 6:50. He obtained the knowledge for the very purpose of keeping out of its way. When it came along at the very moment it was due to come, it were as if he had at that moment notice of the fact. Why do trains whistle and ring their bells? Obviously to notify people, whom they owe a duty to, of their approach. If, then, the person to be notified already knows the fact, why again notify him? L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Taaffe's Adm'r, 106 Ky. 535, 50 S. W. 850, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 64; Helm v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 33 S. W. 396, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 1004; Craddock v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 16 S. W. 125, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 18. And why are trains required by the common law to slacken their speed when passing through populous settlements? Because it is far more probable that one or more persons from among so great a number may be, and probably will be, rightfully using the tracks of the railroad at that point at that moment unaware of the train's approach, and, if the too high rate is maintained, they will be run over and killed or injured before they could get out of the way even after learning that the train was coming. But those who know that the fast train is due and coming in cannot rely upon its duty towards others ignorant of the fact, so as to charge its operatives with negligence in running it at high rate of speed, for with their knowledge, by keeping off the track, the speed of the train would be harmless to them. But the facts here carry us still another step. Decedent unnecessarily went from a place of safety to one of great hazard to serve his own convenience alone, and thereby put himself in a position where no amount of care in operating train No. 4 would have saved him. They could not see him until he suddenly stepped out on the track immediately in front of their engine. Whether running 20 or 50 miles an hour then, the train could not have been stopped in time to avoid striking him. Between the tracks was a safe place in which to do his work. On the west side was safer, though not quite so convenient. To step in to the middle of the main track, at the moment a fast, heavy train was due, and which he knew was due, without looking, is such an act of negligence that its quality is not debatable. Nor can it be ignored in law. Being established without question, its legal effect is a pure question of law."

The rule laid down in I. C. R. R. Co. v. Murphy's Adm'r, 123 Ky. 787, 97 S. W. 729, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 93, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332, is not applicable to this case. There Murphy was one of the public, and a licensee. In this case the decedent was an employe whose duty it was, not only to keep others out of the way of approaching trains, but himself likewise. Furthermore, Wickham, who had been in a place of safety, suddenly stepped before the approaching train, which he knew was due, and without looking. As said in the case of Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r, supra, this was such an act of negligence that its quality is not debatable.

In view of the foregoing authorities, we conclude that the speed of the train at the time of the accident was not negligence as to the decedent. It would be a strange rule, indeed, that would require a railroad company to regulate the speed of its trains with reference to the presence of a watchman, whose duty it was to know when the train would arrive and keep others and himself from being injured by it. As no other negligence is relied upon, we conclude that the court properly directed a finding in favor of appellee.

Judgment affirmed.

OFFUTT & BLACKBURN v. DOYLE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Oct. 29, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 964*)—CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

The action of the court in directing that an original cause of action and a cause of action presented by cross-petition shall be heard together by the same jury will not be disturbed unless it appears that in the exercise of a sound discretion, the court should have ordered separate trials before separate juries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3834; Dec. Dig. § 964.*]

2. JURY (§ 95*)—COMPETENCY OF JURORS—PRIOR SERVICE—SIMILAR CAUSE.

In actions by buyers of seed wheat based on the seller's warranty that the wheat was good, and the fact that it did not germinate, the seller made his pleading a cross-petition against a warehouseman alleging that he had stored the wheat in the latter's warehouse, and that the latter violated his agreement. Some of the actions by the buyers were tried before juries without the issues made by the cross-petition being heard. Thereafter the actions on the cross-petitions were consolidated, and were called for trial at the same term of court. Held, that the refusal of the court to continue the consolidated action or to impanel a new jury to try it on the ground that the jurors on the regular panel had served in trying the issues in the original actions was proper; the issues being entirely different, though in relation to the same subject-matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 428; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 406*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—RECEIPTS—CONTRACTS.

A receipt issued by a warehouseman stating the receipt of a specified quantity of wheat for delivery on the presentation of the receipt properly indorsed and the payment of the charges, and which provides that the wheat is held for the owner at his risk as to fire or depreciation, that the grain may be mixed with grain of like quality and may be delivered from any bin containing like quality of grain, is more than a receipt, and is a contract fixing the rights of the parties, and parol evidence is inadmissible to vary its terms, in the absence of fraud or mistake, though a receipt may be contradicted by parol evidence without any averment of fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1825; Dec. Dig. § 406.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where a written contract between the parties to an action is set up or relied on in the pleadings or is introduced in the evidence, the court should instruct on the writing, and, though there is evidence of mistake or fraud or want of consideration, the court should charge that the writing is the contract unless the jury believe that it was not executed, or that it was without consideration, or was procured by fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 604, 607; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§§ 431, 432, 433, 434*)—PAROL—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where there is a denial of the execution of a written contract relied on or an averment of want of consideration or of fraud or that by mutual mistake it does not contain the contract, parol evidence is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1975-2020; Dec. Dig. §§ 431, 432, 433, 434.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 244*)—INSTRUCTIONS—POINTING OUT PARTICULAR EVIDENCE.

The rule that it is not proper to point out particular evidence in an instruction or to give undue prominence to any fact applies to parol evidence, and not to written evidence of a contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 578; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Scott County.

"To be officially reported."

Consolidated cross-action by Ed. Doyle, a defendant in several actions, against Offutt & Blackburn. From a judgment for the former, the latter appeal. Reversed, and new trial granted.

B. M. Lee, for appellants. Bradley & Bradley, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellants are seed warehousemen, and in July, 1907, the appellee Doyle stored in their warehouse some 600 bushels of wheat. In the fall of the same year the appellee sold this wheat to a number of farmers, who wanted it for seedling purposes. The farmers to whom the wheat was sold sowed it, and it failed to germinate. Thereupon the farmers brought suits against appellee for damages, and each of them recovered judgment against him for the price paid for the wheat. The suits of the farmers were based on the ground that the wheat was bought to be used as seed wheat, and for no other purpose, and that appellee warranted it to be good seed wheat. In his answer to these various suits, which was in substance a traverse, appellee made his pleading a cross-petition against appellants, averring in the cross-petition: That, when he stored the wheat in the elevator of appellants, he informed them that it was to be sold as seed wheat, and they agreed to store the same in a separate bin or elevator and deliver to him, or the persons to whom he might sell, the identical wheat stored, and also to deliver No. 2 wheat. That in violation of their agreement appellants failed to keep the wheat in a separate bin or elevator, and mixed it with other wheat, allowing it to become overheated, and also that they failed to deliver to him No. 2 wheat. He also averred that by mistake appellants issued to him the following receipt: "Received in store from Ed. Doyle 601 bushels of wheat, grade No. 2, which we will deliver to Ed. Doyle or order, upon presentation of this receipt properly indorsed, on payment of charges. This property is held for the owner in store at his risk as to fire or depreciation from any cause. This grain may be mixed with grain of like quality, and may be delivered from any bin containing like quality of grain." And that, when he learned the contents of the receipt, he notified them that a mistake had been made in its issue, and they told him to keep the receipt, and they would store his wheat in a separate bin or elevator. He asked judgment against them for the amount of any judgment that might be obtained against him by the farmers who had sued him. To this cross-petition the appellants filed an answer denying all its material allegations, but they did not set up or rely on the receipt as containing the contract between them. It appears from the record that three of the suits filed by the farmers against appellee were tried before juries without the issues made by the cross-petition being heard or disposed of, and that after verdicts had been returned in favor of the farmers in these cases the actions of appellee against appellants on his cross-petition in the cases in which the farmers had obtained judgments were by consent consolidated and called for trial at the same term of the court at which the farmers who sued appellee had obtained judgments against him. When the consolidated actions on the cross-petition were called for trial, the appellants moved the court to continue the case or impanel a new jury to try the issues upon the ground that the jurors upon the regular panel had served in trying the issues on the original petition between the farmers and appellee. The court overruled the motion, and the record shows that the panel of jurors who tried the case on the cross-petitions of appellee against appellants was composed, with one exception, of the same persons who sat as jurors in the cases of the farmers against the appellee. We are asked to reverse the verdict in favor of appellee for the alleged error of the court in refusing to continue the case or select new jurors before whom it might be tried, and for error in giving and refusing instructions.

Although the record does not contain the evidence heard in the cases of the farmers against Doyle, it is entirely probable, and we so assume, that in those cases the juries heard a good deal about the suits pending on the cross-petitions of Doyle against Offutt & Blackburn; and possibly they formed some opinion as to the merits of the case pending between Doyle and Offutt & Blackburn. The issues in the two cases, however, were very different. In the suits between the farmers and Doyle there were really only two questions in dispute: One, whether the wheat was bought for and represented to be good seed wheat, the other whether or not it germinated; whereas, in the suit between Doyle and Offutt & Blackburn, the issues were first whether or not Offutt & Blackburn agreed to keep the wheat in a separate bin, or so that it would not become heated; and, second, whether or not they committed a breach of this agreement in putting it in bins with other wheat and permitting it to become overheated, and in failing to deliver No. 2 wheat. But without respect to the similarity or difference in the facts in the cases between the farmers and Doyle, and those between Doyle and Offutt & Blackburn, it is a sufficient answer to the argument of counsel to say that the court in its discretion might have directed the actions of Doyle against Offutt & Blackburn to be tried with the suits of the farmers against Doyle. Doyle's cause of action against Offutt & Blackburn was affected by and grew out of the original cause of action against him. If his contention was true, the suits of the farmers against him were caused by the negligence or breach of contract on the part of Offutt & Blackburn. If the court had directed the original cause of action, and the cause of action arising on the cross-petition to be heard at the same time before the same jury, the jurors in place of hearing both cases at different times would have heard both of them together, and it is plain that the effect on their minds would be precisely the same. If the facts they heard in the cases of the farmers against Doyle operated to prejudice them in any way against Offutt & Blackburn, it would have affected them the same way if the cases had been heard together. And so we are unable to perceive how Offutt & Blackburn were prejudiced by the ruling of the court.

It is quite a common practice for the trial court to order an original cause of action and a cause of action presented by cross-petition to be heard together by the same jury; and, although this practice may sometimes operate to the disadvantage of one of the litigants, it will not be ground for reversal unless it is made to appear that in the exercise of a sound discretion the trial court should have ordered separate trials and before jurors who did not sit in the first trial. It is, of course, of the highest importance that jurors who are called upon to decide issues of fact should be free from bias or prejudice for or against either of the parties to the litigation, and that their minds should be in such condition as to receive, free from former opinions or impressions, the evidence introduced in support of the respective contentions of the parties. But this much-desired end cannot in all cases be obtained; and in trials where cross-petitions are allowable, and the court in the exercise of a sound discretion directs the issues on the original and cross-petition to be heard together, the jurors necessarily hear evidence in one branch of the case that may have a tendency to influence their judgment upon the other.

We may further add that, if a new jury had been impeached, they would necessarily have learned all about the suits of the farmers in the trial of the case between Doyle and Offutt & Blackburn. Doyle's cause of action against Offutt & Blackburn was rested solely on the ground that he was obliged to pay damages to the farmers who sued him. And so, in the trial of his case against Offutt & Blackburn, the facts as to his loss and how it occurred and everything relating thereto would necessarily be brought to the attention of the jury.

Counsel for appellant requested the court to give an instruction saying, in substance, that the warehouse receipt was the written evidence of the contract between the parties, and the law presumed that it expressed the true agreement, and the jury should so find, unless they believed that the contract between the parties was that the wheat should be stored in a separate bin and kept as seed wheat, and that by mutual mistake this part of the agreement was omitted from the receipt. But the court refused to give this or any instruction based on the receipt. Offutt & Blackburn introduced evidence showing that the receipt contained the only contract they had with Doyle, while the evidence for Doyle tended to show that the receipt did not contain the contract, and that this fact was known to and in effect acknowledged by Offutt & Blackburn. There was also evidence conducing to show that Offutt & Blackburn did not properly handle the wheat or deliver No. 2 wheat. The execution and delivery of the receipt was admitted; the only contention of Doyle being that it did not fully express the contract. In the absence of mutual mistake as to its contents, the receipt was the contract between the parties. It not only acknowledged the receipt of the wheat, but contained an agreement upon the part of Offutt & Blackburn to deliver it. Although called a warehouse receipt, it was more than an ordinary receipt, and must be treated as a contract fixing the right of the parties as to the matters it related to. When there is a written contract between the parties engaged in litigation, and the contract is set up or relied on in the pleadings, or is introduced in evidence, the court should give an instruction based on the writing. A writing is the best evidence of what the parties agreed to do; and, when its execution is admitted, in the absence of fraud, want of consideration or mistake, their rights must be settled according to its terms. Where there is a denial of the execution of a paper, or an averment that it was obtained by fraud, or that by mutual mistake it does not contain the contract, or a want of consideration is pleaded, it is proper to admit oral evidence to sustain the pleas. But this does not change the rule that the court should instruct the jury that the writing is the contract; and they should so find, if it was executed, unless they believe from the evidence that it was executed without consideration or by fraud or mistake as the case may be. A writing like this does not stand on the same footing as parol evidence. It has been ruled time and time again that it is not proper to point out particular evidence in an instruction, or to give undue prominence to any fact; but this practice applies to parol evidence, and not to written evidence of a contract. If in the trial of an ejectment case the plaintiff introduces deeds and records showing that he has a good paper title, the court should instruct the jury that the record evidence invests the plaintiff with a good title and they should so find, unless they believe it is avoided by some defense set up by the defendant that is supported by the evidence. And so in a suit on a promissory note, judgment, or other record, the law gives high regard to written contracts, and, when engagements or undertakings are reduced to writing, the legal presumption is that they express the true agreement between the parties.

It should, however, be noted that the rule stated with reference to written contracts, deeds, and records does not apply to an ordinary receipt acknowledging the payment of money or other thing, or to the recital in an instrument of the amount of the consideration paid or received. A receipt is only prima facie evidence of the truth of what it contains. It may be assailed and contradicted by parol evidence without any averment of fraud or mistake in its execution or delivery. The distinction in this particular between deeds, contracts, and other agreements and receipts is well pointed out in Gully v. Grubbs, 1 J. J. Marsh. 387, where, in discussing this question, the court said: "Wherever a right is vested or created or extinguished by contract or otherwise, and writing is employed for that purpose, parol testimony is inadmissible to alter or contradict the legal and common-sense construction of the instrument. But that any writing, which neither by contract, the operation of law, nor otherwise, vests or passes, or extinguishes any right, but is only used as evidence of a fact, and not as evidence of a contract or right, may be susceptible of explanation by extrinsic circumstances or facts. Thus a will, a deed, or a covenant in writing, so far as they transfer or are intended to be evidences of rights, cannot be contradicted or opposed in their legal construction by facts 'aliunde.' But receipts or other writings, which only acknowledge the existence of a simple fact, such as the payment of money for example, may be susceptible of explanation and liable to contradiction by witnesses." This principle has been approved in Caldwell v. Hardin, 3 T. B. Mon. 349; Peddle v. Hill, 4 T. B. Mon. 370; Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Metc. 285, and many other cases.

If, therefore, the contract did express the agreement between the parties, Doyle was not entitled to recover unless Offutt & Blackburn failed to deliver to him No. 2 wheat, or were guilty of negligence in storing or handling the wheat. On another trial of the case the court will in addition to the other instructions given, in substance, instruct the jury that the receipt was the contract between the parties unless by mutual mistake it failed to express the true agreement between them, and the jury should find for Offutt & Blackburn if they delivered to Doyle No. 2 wheat and were free from negligence in storing or handling it. There should also be incorporated in instruction No. 1 the idea that the receipt controlled, unless there was a mistake in it.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

PATRICK et al. v. PATRICK.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Oct. 28, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§§ 439, 450*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

The court in construing a will should aim to ascertain testator's intention, and should, if possible, so construe the will as to uphold each item or clause thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 952, 966; Dec. Dig. §§ 439, 450.*]

2. WILLS (§ 672*)—CONSTRUCTION—CREATION OF TRUST—IMPLICATION.

Testator devised all his property to his son, provided he should pay a specified sum to each of his sisters, and declared that the property should be kept together until the death or remarriage of the wife, and that the son should remain with the family and manage the estate until the wife's death or remarriage, when the property should pass as provided for. Held, that the wife was the beneficiary of the entire estate for life or during widowhood, with remainder to the son, who took the title as trustee for the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1579; Dec. Dig. § 672.*]

3. WILLS (§ 821*)—CHARGE ON PROPERTY DEVISED—NATURE.

A testamentary gift to testator's son, provided that he pay to each of his sisters a specified sum and that if any of the sisters should be dead at testator's death the sum should be paid to her bodily heirs, was a gift to the son on condition that the payments to his sisters were made, which payments must be made at the death of testator, and the amount due each, with interest from the end of the year succeeding testator's death, was a charge on the son's interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2114, 2116; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

4. WILLS (§ 686*)—CONSTRUCTION—TRUSTS CREATED—TERMINATION.

Where testator devised all his property to his son, provided that he pay to each of testator's daughters a specified sum, and declared that the property should be kept together until the death or marriage of testator's wife, and that the son should remain with the family and manage the estate until the wife's death or remarriage, the fact that the son removed from the property did not affect the trust created in favor of the wife or the rights of the wife, where the son continued to faithfully execute the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1631, 1637; Dec. Dig. § 686.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 315*)—TESTAMENTARY TRUSTS—COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE.

Where the will creating a trust does not declare that the trustee shall not be compensated for the services rendered in executing the trust, the court may allow him a reasonable compensation therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 433-435; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

6. WILLS (§ 602*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CREATED.

Testator devised all his property to his son, provided he pay a specified sum to each of testator's daughters, and declared that the property should be kept together until the death or marriage of testator's wife, and that the son should remain with the family and manage the estate until the wife's death or marriage, and that if the son should die without bodily heirs his share should go to his surviving sisters or to their bodily heirs. Held, that the son acquired a fee in the entire estate, subject to defeat by his death without living issue before the death or marriage of testator's wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1351-1359; Dec. Dig. § 602.*]

7. WILLS (§ 602*)—CONSTRUCTION—DEFEASIBLE FEE—TIME OF CONTINGENCY.

The rule that where an estate is given by will which may be defeated on the happening of a contingency, and there is no other period apparent or intended in which the event shall occur, it shall refer to an event happening within the lifetime of the testator, does not obtain when the will shows on its face with reasonable certainty that the event to which the contingency refers is in contemplation of testator to occur after his death.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Davless County.
"To be officially reported."

Action between W. T. Patrick and others, and Fannie Patrick, for the construction of the will of R. E. Patrick, deceased. From a judgment construing the will, the former appeal. Affirmed.

Miller & Todd and C. S. Walker, for appellants. La Vega Clements and Ben D. Ringo, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. R. E. Patrick died in Davless county leaving a will which was duly admitted to probate. So much of the will as it will be necessary to consider is as follows:

"(1) I will all my property real, personal and mixed to my son, W. T. Patrick, after paying all my debts and funeral expenses, provided, he shall pay to each one of my daughters, to wit, Maggie Bishop, Cora Jesse, Mollie Ayers, Minnie Patrick, Fannie Patrick, Annie Patrick, Luvena Patrick, $100.00. If any of my said daughters shall be dead at my death, then the $100.00 shall be paid to her bodily heirs, if any; if none, the $100.00 shall belong to said W. T. Patrick.

"(2) If my beloved wife shall survive me I will and desire my property be kept together just as it is until her death or marriage, my son, W. T., to stay with the family and manage the estate to the best possible advantage until her death or marriage when the property shall pass as in item one.

"(3) If my son shall die without bodily heirs his share of my estate shall go to his surviving sisters, or to their bodily heirs, if any shall be dead leaving bodily heirs."

The testator was survived by his widow and the son and seven daughters named in the will. The son resided on the real estate devised at the time of the testator's death, but has since removed to another home acquired with means of his own. While the fact does not clearly appear from the record before us, we take it for granted that the widow and daughters of the testator, or such of the latter as are unmarried, still reside on the land devised. By the present action brought in the court below the widow set up claim to an estate for life or during her widowhood in the property devised, asked a construction of the will, that the executor, W. T. Patrick, be required to settle his accounts as executor, and pay her the net income arising from the estate. The answer, in substance, denies that she owns any interest in the estate devised, asserts title in appellant to the whole estate and his right to certain credits in the settlement of his accounts as executor. The issues presented by the pleadings made a construction of the will necessary, and the construction given it by the circuit court was that the appellee as widow took, under its provisions, an estate for life, or during her widowhood, in the property devised, with remainder at her death or marriage to appellant. Therefore by the judgment rendered it required of appellant the accounting asked, and he, being dissatisfied with the judgment, has appealed.

A will should, if possible, be construed so as to uphold each item or clause thereof. The end to be attained is the ascertainment of the testator's intention. Applying these well-known rules to the will under consideration, we think its meaning is that appellee, after the payment of the testator's debts, takes or becomes the beneficiary of the entire estate devised, for life, or during her widowhood, with remainder to appellant. The title, however, to the estate which she takes is, by the will, vested in appellant as her trustee. In other words, so long as she lives and remains unmarried, appellant holds in trust for her the title to the property devised. At her death or marriage the trust will cease, and, if he is then living, the estate devised becomes his absolutely. The requirement of the will that the property after the death of the testator shall be "kept together just as it is until her death or marriage, my son, W. T., to stay with the family and manage the estate to the best possible advantage until her death or marriage," means something more than that the support of the widow shall be a mere charge or burden upon the estate. Its meaning is an estate to her for life or widowhood in the property devised, although the son is to hold and manage it as her trustee, devoting the income of the estate to her use and to the support of such of the daughters as may live with her and constitute a part of the family. If such was not the intention of the testator, what meaning can be given the following language as to the disposition of the estate after the death of the widow, "when property shall pass as in item one," namely, to the appellant, W. T. Patrick? While the language of the second clause of the will does not in express terms declare that appellant is to take and hold as trustee for appellee, during her life or widowhood, the title to the entire estate devised by the first clause of the will, it obviously does so by implication, and as obviously makes the widow of the testator the cestui que trust. It is not clear that the daughters are also to be regarded as cestui que trust, but such of them as may remain with their mother, as a part of the family, are, we think, to be supported from the estate as long as she lives and continues a widow; but, with her death or marriage, the right of the daughters to live upon or receive a support from the estate will cease, as will the trust itself. Not only does appellant take the property devised by the will subject to the life estate or widowhood of appellee, though holding in trust the title and possession thereof during that period, but he also takes it upon the condition that he shall pay to each of his seven sisters $100. We think it was contemplated by the testator that the $100 to each of his daughters should be paid by appellant at his death, not from the estate, but out of his own means, for the will provides: "If any of my said daughters shall be dead at my death, then the $100.00, shall be paid to her bodily heirs, if any; if none, the $100.00 shall belong to said W. T. Patrick." It appears that all the daughters were living at the testator's death and are still living, but does not appear whether they have been paid the $100. If not, the amount due each should be a charge upon appellant's remainder interest in the testator's estate, with interest from the end of the year succeeding the testator's death.

Our conclusion that appellee took under the will a life estate in the property of the testator seems to us to be consistent with all of the provisions of that instrument, and not less consistent with its provisions do we regard the further conclusion as to the creation of the trust under which appellant is to preserve the estate and apply its net proceeds or income to appellee's use. The language of the will from which the trust is to be implied is not merely suggestive, recommendatory, or in the form of a request from the testator, with which appellant might or might not in his discretion have complied, but is of such a precatory character as to reasonably satisfy us from the language itself, taken in connection with its effect upon the disposition of the testator's property, that the latter's intention to create a trust beneficial to his widow is as complete as if he had given the property to hold upon a trust declared in express terms and in the customary manner. Pomeroy's Eq. § 1016. If correct in our conclusion that the property devised appellant in trust for appellee is an estate for life or during her widowhood, in all the property left by the testator, it would seem to follow that she is entitled to receive, year by year, from the trustee the entire net profits of the estate as long as she lives and continues a widow. The fact that appellant has removed from the property of which he is trustee does not affect the trust or the rights of appellee, if he continues to faithfully execute the trust. As the will does not declare appellant shall not be compensated for the services he renders in executing the trust committed to him, we think the circuit court should allow him reasonable compensation therefor, and, as appellee has not taken a cross-appeal from that part of the judgment declaring appellant entitled to a reasonable compensation, the question will not be considered by us.

The third clause of the will was not construed by the circuit court; but, the entire will being before us, we will give our interpretation of that clause, as it may prevent further controversy between the parties. The question suggested by the reading of the clause is: At what time would the death of appellant without "bodily heirs" cause "his share" of the testator's estate to "go to his (appellant's) surviving sisters, or to their bodily heirs, if any shall be dead, leaving bodily heirs"? Numerous cases may be found in which this court held that where an estate is given by will which may be defeated upon the happening of a contingency, and there is no other period apparent or intended in which the event shall occur, it shall refer to an event happening within the lifetime of the testator; but this rule does not obtain when the will shows on its face with reasonable certainty that the event to which the contingency refers is, in contemplation of the testator, to occur after his own death. We think the clause under consideration has reference to the death of appellant before the death or marriage of his mother, the life tenant. If the testator had had in mind the death of appellant before his own death, he doubtless would have said so in clause 3, as he did in clause 1 with respect to the bequest to his daughters of $100 each to be paid by appellant; it being therein declared: "If any of my said daughters be dead at my death, then the $100.00 shall be paid to her bodily heirs, if any; if none, the $100.00 shall belong to said W. T. Patrick." But the third clause simply provides: "If my son shall die without bodily heirs his share of my estate [i. e., the remainder] shall go to his surviving sisters," etc. In our opinion the testator here meant that, if appellant should die childless before the death or marriage of his mother, in that event his sisters, or the children of such of them as may then be dead, will take the estate devised him; that is, the will gives appellant a defeasible fee in the entire estate devised; in other words, the fee in remainder to the whole, subject to be defeated by his death, without living issue, before the death or marriage of his mother. Baxter v. Isaacs, 71 S. W. 907, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1618; Lewis v. Shropshire's Trustee, 68 S. W. 426, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 332; Birney v. Richardson, 5 Dana, 424.

As the judgment of the circuit court in all essential particulars conforms to the conclusions herein expressed, it is hereby affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH, for Use of CITY OF LOUISVILLE, v. ROSS et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 5, 1909.)

1. STATUTES (§ 190*)—CONSTRUCTION—EXISTENCE OF AMBIGUITY.

The doctrine of practical construction cannot be applied unless the language of the statute is so ambiguous as to leave the judicial mind in doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 269; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 224*) — CONSTRUCTION — AND FROM OTHER STATUTES.

To aid the construction of a statute as to when a bond recorder in a city should account, the court may look to all other statutes relating to public officers receiving public revenue for which they are required to account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 302; Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 162*) — BOND RECORDERS—FEES—ACCOUNTING—STATUTES.

Ky. St. § 2947 (Russell's St. § 626), authorizes the appointment of a bond recorder in a city of the first class by circuit court judges for a term of four years; qualifications, oath and bond to be as required of county clerks, compensation to be the same as allowed to justices of the peace in trials for breach of the peace, to be paid by the party for whom the services are rendered, two deputies to be appointed to be paid out of fees collected, a record of bonds to be kept by him, and all moneys received over $4,000, exclusive of the deputy's salary, to be paid to the city treasurer. Held, that since all other statutes relating to officers receiving public revenue required an accounting of moneys collected at least once a year, and the recorder's fees and expenses are on an annual basis, the bond recorder must make at least annual settlements with such officials as the city shall designate, keep an accurate record of all amounts collected by him, and, when he is shown to have collected enough to pay his salary and his deputies and other legal expenses for the current year, he must account to the city for the balance every month, if so desired by the city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 306; Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 215*) — CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION—WHEN ALLOWABLE.

Contemporaneous construction will not be allowed where to apply it will override a fixed legislative purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 291; Dec. Dig. § 215.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 162*)—BOND RECORDERS—COMPENSATION—STATUTES.

Such section of the statute imports that the bond recorder is to receive $4,000 a year, and $1,000 a year for each deputy actually employed, not exceeding two.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by the Commonwealth, for the use of the City of Louisville, against Joseph Hunter Ross and others, for an accounting. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., C. B. Blakey, Asst. Atty. Gen., and J. M. Chilton, for appellant. Kohn, Baird, Sloss & Kohn, Arthur B. Bensinger, and Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh, for appellees.

O'REAR, J. This suit was instituted against appellees Joseph Hunter Ross and his surety upon the former's bond as bond recorder for the city of Louisville, for an accounting by Ross of the fees collected by him during his term, and for judgment for balance in his hands. Ross was elected to his office in December of 1905, for a term of four years, and on December 2, 1905, executed the bond and entered upon the discharge of his official duties. The petition charges: That in the month of December, 1905, he collected as fees for accepting and recording appearance and peace bonds, at $2 for each bond, $430. That during the year ending December 31, 1906, he likewise collected as fees, $6,330; for the year ending December 31, 1907, $8,050; for the year ending December 31, 1908, $9,663; and for taking other bonds in criminal proceedings (in the Jefferson circuit court), $1,619, during the three years and one month named. That he had upon demand by the city of Louisville for an accounting refused to account or pay over to the city any of these sums, or any part of them, but had taken his records from his office and concealed them, refusing to allow the city's authorities access to them. That he had collected large sums in addition as fees, which the plaintiffs were unable to state because of his conduct in secreting his records. The prayer was for a judgment for the sums stated, less his salary and deputies' salaries, and for a reference to the commissioner of the court to ascertain the further amount collected by him as fees, and for a full accounting by him. Interest at 6 per cent. per annum and penalties of 20 per cent. on the sums due the city at the end of each settlement period were also sought.

The statute under which appellee Ross was elected, which governs in fixing the times of settlement and payment by him, as well as fixes his salary, is section 2947, Carroll's Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 626), a part of the act of 1893, governing cities of the first class, and is as follows: "There shall be appointed by a majority of the judges of the circuit court having jurisdiction in said cities, a bond recorder for said cities. He shall be appointed for a term of four years, and shall have the qualifications, take the oath, and give the bond required of the county clerks, and he shall be subject to the same fines and penalties to which they are subject; and for neglect and violation of his duty he may be prosecuted, punished or removed, in the same manner in which said clerks may be prosecuted, punished or removed. The bond furnished by said recorder, and the requisite surety thereon, must be approved by said judges. Said bond recorder shall have exclusive right to take all bonds required by law to be taken or given by persons arrested in the city in and for which he is appointed, for their appearance before the proper tribunal; also all bonds or recognizances required by law to be taken or given by or in the police court of said city; and no person in custody shall be released therefrom, before trial, unless bond be first given as herein required. Said bond recorder shall be allowed for his services the same compensation as now allowed by law to justices of the peace in trials for breach of the peace, to be paid by the party for whom the services are rendered. He may appoint two deputies, and the salary of each of said deputies shall be $1,000.00 per annum, and shall be paid from the fees collected by the said bond recorder. Said deputies shall give bond the same as the recorder, and he is hereby given power to administer oaths to parties offering as sureties on bonds, and for all purposes necessary for the proper conduct of his office, to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and enable him to properly execute his duty. And no officer or other persons shall have power to take any bond or administer any oath herein mentioned, except said recorder. Said bond recorder shall keep a record of all the bonds taken by himself or his deputy, showing the date, amount of bail, the name of defendant, and the charge under which arrest was made; and all money received by the bond recorder, over and above the amount of four thousand dollars, exclusive of the deputy's salary, shall be paid into the treasury of the city for which the recorder is appointed. Said recorder, or one of his deputies, shall be in his office at all hours, for the purpose of taking bonds. All bonds and affidavits shall be returned within twenty-four hours to the proper tribunal. In continued cases, the bond recorder may require a memorandum from the clerk of the court, showing the charge, amount of bail, and date of continuance."

The defense to this suit is that it was brought prematurely. The answer is styled a "plea in abatement." It assumes, as the proper construction of the foregoing statute, that the bond recorder of the city of Louisville is not required to settle his accounts, or to pay over to the city any balance in his hands from the fees of his office, except at the end of his term. The chancellor, in an opinion delivered in overruling a general demurrer to the petition, indicated that, reading the statute alone, he could not say that the time of settlement and payment was at the end of the term, but, evidently in response to argument, that the statute was ambiguous on that point, and if the officers of the city had, by a practical contemporaneous construction during the 15 years since its enactment, construed it so, that was a fact to be pleaded. Thereupon the defendants filed their answer, or plea in abatement, in which they asserted that such had been the practical contemporaneous construction by the city officials, and of appellee Ross and his predecessors in office. A demurrer to this answer was overruled. The city declined to plead further, and its petition was dismissed. This appeal is prosecuted from that judgment.

Before the doctrine of practical contemporaneous construction can be applied to the interpretation of a statute, the language of the enactment must be so ambiguous as to leave the judicial mind in doubt as to the legislative purpose. The statute in question deals with the duties and compensation of a collector of public revenues. By the terms of the section he is placed on the plane of county court clerks—public officials who are paid out of the fees of their offices, and whose duties include the collection of public moneys. Turning to the statute bearing on the duty and liabilities of county court clerks when their duties are analogous to those to be performed by the bond recorder, we find that by section 4242, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 6171), county court clerks are required on the first day of each circuit court to make out and file with the court an account showing all public money received by them, and pay it over to the trustee of the jury fund on the order of the court. By section 4248, a failure is penalized by fine of from $200 to $300. Section 4255 requires the clerks to keep a well-bound book in their offices showing all money received by them for the commonwealth. Section 1761 (Russell's St. § 2732) requires county court clerks in all counties having a population of 75,000 or more to pay over to the auditor of public accounts on the first of each month the money due the state from them, and to file a statement showing the amount due. Every officer who collects or holds money for the state or county is required to make frequent settlements—none less often than once a year—and to then, or oftener, pay over the public funds in their hands. The State Auditor and Treasurer are required to have their accounts examined monthly (section 4630 [Russell's St. § 4930]); the sheriff is required to settle annually (section 4143, Ky. St.); county court clerks and circuit clerks monthly (section 1761). The jailers are required to pay over monthly (section 1773); the Clerk of the Court of Appeals and the assessor in counties having population of 75,000 or over, in January of each year; sheriffs, clerks, county judges, police judges, constables, justices of the peace, marshals, and other officers authorized to receive money due the commonwealth are required to report on the first day of each circuit court (three times a year). Section 4252, Ky. St. It appears the bond recorder collects money, which is due the city, amounting to $5,000 or more annually. The settled policy of the state is to require frequent settlements of all of its collecting officers. These various statutes may be looked to to ascertain the legislative purpose in the statute under examination, as to when the recorder should settle his accounts. The allusion in the statute to the duties and liabilities of county court clerks clearly meant to embody those provisions so far as applicable to the bond recorder. While the reports to and settlements with the same officers are not, of course, required, settlements with the proper officials of the city are as clearly indicated by the allusion; but his fees and office expenses are to be deducted from his collections. They are based upon an annual basis. It cannot be known before the expiration of the year, possibly, whether anything would be due from the office, as it is possible that for the first 11 months not enough would be collected to defray its expenses. From the scope of the section, and its allusions to other statutes, so far as applicable, we think the proper construction is: That the bond recorder must make at least annual settlements with such officials as the city council may designate; that he must keep an accurate record at all times in the book in his office, which shall be a public record, of the amounts collected by him; that when he is shown to have collected as much as will pay his salary, and his deputies', and other legal expenses for the current year, the balance is due to the city, and may be required to be paid over each 30 days if the city so demands; but that, until there is a demand and a failure to settle and pay, there is not a default, and no penalty could be attached till after such demand and default.

The plea of contemporaneous construction, one always of last resort, at least always deferred as a source of information until the interpretation put upon the language by the Legislature itself is applied, if it has given such interpretation, cannot avail in this case. To allow it would be to override the fixed legislative purpose, as indicated by a great number of provisions, applicable to every class of collecting officers, by a kind of surference of administrative officials. It is not probable—there is no reason for supposing it likely—that the Legislature intended to make an exception of this official and to allow him to hold in his hands many thousands of the public dues for four years, while the public was being taxed to pay indebtedness to which the fees on hand were applicable. Something more than mere passivity of the city officials, and of the course pursued by the predecessors in the office of the recorder, must concur to authorize the courts to adopt that construction as the one the Legislature intended.

As to the compensation of the bond recorder, we think that the language of the section imports that he is to receive $4,000 a year, and $1,000 a year for each deputy actually employed, not exceeding two.

The case should have been referred to the commissioner to ascertain the true amount due by the bond recorder for each year of his term, and the judgment should be for the balance found due each year after deducting the salaries alluded to, plus 6 per cent. per annum interest on each balance.

Reversed and remanded for proceedings consistent herewith.

COMMONWEALTH ex rel. AUDITOR'S AGENT v. LOUISVILLE GAS CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 5, 1909.)

1. TAXATION (§ 45*)—UNIFORMITY—TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS AND INDIVIDUALS—"PROPERTY TAX"—"PRIVILEGE TAX."

Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), provide that certain corporations, including gas companies, shall, in addition to other taxes, annually pay a tax on their franchise to the state and a local tax thereon to the county, town, etc., where the franchise is exercised; and each corporation shall report the amount of tangible property in the state, and where situated, and assessed and the fair cash value thereof; and the board of valuation and assessment is required to fix the value of the capital stock of each corporation and from such amount deduct the assessed value of all tangible property assessed in the state; the remainder to be the value of its corporate franchise subject to taxation, etc. By another provision all the property of domestic corporations, including intangible property considered in determining the value of the franchises, shall be subject to taxation unless exempt by the Constitution. Held, that within Const. § 174, requiring the property of corporations and natural persons to be similarly taxed, and allowing such further license, income and franchise taxes as the Legislature may deem proper, the tax on the franchise of a gas company was a "property tax" on the intangible property, and not a "privilege tax" for engaging in a business that natural persons could not, since under section 4082 natural persons engaged in such business are taxed as such corporations are.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-103; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5729, 5730; 5590, 5591.]

2. TAXATION (§ 45*)—UNIFORMITY—TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS AND INDIVIDUALS.

Held, also, that the franchise tax is not a privilege tax imposed on the right to be a corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-103; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 122*)—SHARES OF STOCKHOLDERS—EFFECT OF TAX ON CORPORATE PROPERTY.

Under such statute, where the corporation does report and pay taxes on all its property as required, then the stockholders of the corporation are not required to list their shares in the company for taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 221; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 122*)—SHARES OF STOCKHOLDERS—EFFECT OF TAX ON CORPORATE PROPERTY—SHARES OWNED BY OTHER CORPORATION.

Where a gas company is a shareholder in an electric company, all the property of which has been reported and taxed, including its franchise under such statute, the gas company's liability for taxation on its shares are precisely as any other shareholder, and hence the shares are not assessable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 221; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 376*)—CORPORATE FRANCHISE—MODE OF VALUATION.

Held, also, that the bonds of the electric company owned by the gas company were to be computed in determining the value of the latter's franchise as any other property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 625, 629-631; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

6. TAXATION (§ 406*)—CORPORATIONS—OMITTED PROPERTY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Under said statutes, in a proceeding to assess omitted property, the burden of proof is on the state to show that the bonds of the electric company held by a gas company were omitted from the latter's report of its taxable property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 406.*]

7. TAXATION (§ 406*)—CORPORATION—OMITTED PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY OF REPORT.

Under such statutes, where the gas company reports what it claims to be all its taxable property, but the report does not specifically show that bonds of an electric company which the gas company owns are listed, the bonds cannot be taxed as omitted property, where the board of assessment does not require a further report.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 406.*]

8. COURTS (§ 89*)—PRECEDENTS—STARE DECISIS.

Where ruling precedents as to the construction of a statute are long and definitely settled, and the business of the state has become adapted to it, the construction will not be departed from.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 311, 312; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

"To be officially reported."

Proceeding by the Commonwealth, on relation of the Auditor's Agent, against the Louisville Gas Company. From a judgment for the Gas Company, the Commonwealth appeals. Affirmed.

M. J. Holt, for appellant. Humphrey, Davis & Humphrey, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. This is a proceeding begun in the Jefferson county court to assess as omitted property certain stocks and bonds of another corporation owned by appellee gas company. The judgment was for the taxpayer. Formerly the Louisville Gas Company operated in Louisville, in addition to its plant for the manufacture of gas, an electric light plant. In 1902 it sold the light plant, and took in part payment $1,500,000 5 per cent. bonds of the purchasing company, called the Louisville Lighting Company, and 16,667 shares of the capital stock of the latter company of the par value of $100 a share. These bonds and stock were owned by appellee for the tax year of 1904. In August, 1904, it sold all the bonds except $670,000 worth, par value, since which date it has owned that amount of bonds and the stock named. The capital stock of appellee is $3,600,000. The bonds of the lighting company had during the years in question (which are the years of 1904 and 1905) a market value of 102 and 103, and the stock paid regularly a dividend of 4 per cent. Appellee is what is called a "public service corporation." It is, by the provisions of section 4077, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 6050), required to pay, "in addition to the other taxes imposed on it by law," "annually a tax on its franchise" to the state, and "a local tax thereon to the county, incorporated city, town and taxing district, where its franchise may be exercised."

The first question is, What is the franchise to be taxed? the second is, How is its value to be ascertained? the third is, Has it been done in the manner provided by the statute?

Appellant contends that the franchise to be taxed is not the intangible property of the corporation, but is a privilege tax; that is, it is a tax imposed upon the privilege of engaging in a business that a natural person could not engage in. But that position cannot be maintained of the Kentucky Statutes. Natural persons may engage in the business of manufacturing and selling gas, as well as in some of the other business that is subjected to this tax. When they do, they are taxed upon the same principle as corporations are that are engaged in like business. Section 4082, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 6055); Providence Bk. Co. v. Webster Co., 108 Ky. 527, 57 S. W. 14, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 214. Nor is a tax imposed upon the right to be such a corporation. The organization tax imposed by section 4225, Ky. St., which is one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the authorized capital of such corporation, is the only tax exacted of a corporation for being and exercising the trade allowed by its charter. The Constitution requires taxes to be imposed alike upon the property of corporations and natural persons (section 174), and it allows in addition the imposition of a license tax, an income tax, and a franchise tax, as the Legislature may determine upon. So far the Legislature of this state has not provided for an income tax, and license taxes are imposed upon certain kinds of business, but not upon that of serving the public as do corporations like appellee gas company. The assessing board created and empowered by the statute (section 4077, supra) to value the franchises subjected to the tax is given a large discretion in the manner of its procedure; but it is required of the property owner subjected to the tax to make a report showing, among other things, the amount of the capital stock of the corporation, the nature of its business, how its shares are divided, the amount of paid-up stock, its par and market values, the highest price at which the stock has been sold at a bona fide sale in the preceding 12 months, the amount of surplus fund and undivided profits, "and all other assets"; the total indebtedness as principal; the gross and net income, "and including interest on investments"; the value of its tangible property, "and such other facts as the auditor may require" (section 4078, Ky. St.); the length of line of railroads and other common carriers, and other provisions especially applicable to corporations doing an interstate business. The direction

to the board is then summed up (section 4079, Ky. St.): "Said board from said statement, and from such other evidence as it may have, if such company, corporation or association be organized under the laws of this state, shall fix the value of the capital stock of the corporation, company or association as provided in the next preceding section (4078), and from the amount thus fixed shall deduct the value of all tangible property assessed in this state, or in the counties where situated. The remainder thus found shall be the value of its corporate franchise subject to taxation as aforesaid."

It is thus made clear that the tax imposed is a property tax, pure and simple. It groups all the property of the corporation, and values it according to its earning or producing capacity. In a sense the capital stock of the corporation represents all its property; but it was known that sometimes the market value of such stock differs from its actual or earning value. The franchise value takes into consideration all these elements which go to make the real value of the corporation property considered as an entirety. It has been so construed and held in Henderson Bridge Co. v. Commonwealth, 99 Ky. 623, 31 S. W. 486, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 389, 29 L. R. A. 73; Hager v. American Surety Co., 121 Ky. 791, 90 S. W. 550, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 782; Commonwealth v. Cumberland Tel. Co., 124 Ky. 533, 99 S. W. 604, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 723; Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 106 U. S. 154, 17 Sup. Ct. 532, 41 L. Ed. 953; Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Commonwealth, 106 Ky. 165, 49 S. W. 1069, 57 L. R. A. 33; Ætna Life Insurance Co. v. Coulter, Auditor, 115 Ky. 803, 74 S. W. 1050; Marion National Bank of Lebanon v. Burton, Sheriff, 121 Ky. 876, 90 S. W. 948, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947; Commonwealth v. Walsh's Trustee (Ky.) 117 S. W. 398. Had we doubt of the correctness of that construction, we should not feel at liberty to depart from it after it has been so long and definitely settled, and the business of the state has become adapted to it.

The corporation in this state is required to pay taxes on all its property, not specifically exempt by the Constitution from taxation. When the corporation does report and pay the tax on all its property, as required by the statute, then the stockholders of the corporation are not required to list their shares in the company for taxation. Section 4088, Ky. St.; Commonwealth v. Walsh's Trustee, supra. The Louisville Lighting Company is a domestic franchise-taxed corporation. Appellee gas company is a shareholder in the lighting company. The gas company's liability to taxation upon the shares of the lighting company owned by it are precisely the same as on other shareholders. It is conceded that the lighting company was assessed and paid its franchise tax. Being so, the shareholders are not assessable. So appellee was not required to pay upon so much of its intangible property as was represented by those shares, a fact doubtless taken into consideration by the State Board in fixing the value of appellee's franchise. Commonwealth v. Steele, 126 Ky. 670, 104 S. W. 687, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1033; Commonwealth v. Ledman, 127 Ky. 603, 106 S. W. 247, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 452; Commonwealth v. Ames, 106 S. W. 306, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 569. But upon the bonds appellee was required to pay precisely as it did upon its other intangible property; that is, the bonds, and their market value and earning quality were pertinent facts to be reported to the State Board, and in estimating the value of appellee's franchise those bonds were considered, or ought to have been, as any other chose in action owned by appellee.

Appellee contends that the action of the State Board of Valuation and Assessment in valuing a franchise for taxation is one act, not severable, and whether it considered all the evidence bearing upon the value of the franchise, or omitted to take some evidence that it might have required, cannot be reviewed by the courts in a proceeding to list omitted property; that the thing being now considered, i. e., whether the bonds were included in the gas company's report and the board's estimate, might be omitted evidence, but not omitted property, as there was no warrant for the board to assess the bonds in any event as property. This franchise tax is new. It is substitutional as a method of valuation only. Its like existed under the old statutes of this state where choses in action and the like were grouped as "miscellany." Then a taxpayer could have reported, say, $10,000 in "miscellany," which was supposed to embrace all his notes and accounts; but suppose he had notes to the amount, and solvent, of $20,000, not an erroneous valuation of those reported as $10,000, but $10,000 in addition. It would scarcely have been contended that the failure to list C. D.'s notes for $10,000 was merged in the listing of the A. B. notes. The Legislature could have required corporations to pay on each item of their intangible property, on their notes, bonds, accounts, capital stock, and so forth, in detail; but it allowed all these properties to be grouped for purposes of taxation, as a more convenient and just method of assessing. It was not contemplated that the privilege thus accorded the taxpayer was to be a shield for his neglect or fraud in omitting a material part of his property. If, for example, a railroad corporation owns two different lines of railroad in this state, but reports only one of them, and the earnings of but one, it must be apparent that the failure to report the other is something more than an omission of evidence. It would be an omission of property. It is not true that the bonds in appellee's hands are not taxable. They are. The Constitution prohibits their exemption. Section 174. But the manner of assessing them is to have them reported to the State Board, and there valued as a part of the owner's "franchise." When they are omitted, property liable to taxation is omitted. It may be brought in and assessed as omitted property under section 424, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 4815).

But were the bonds omitted? Appellant took the burden of showing that they were. He produced the reports filed with the Auditor of State by the gas company. The reports did not name the bonds; but the reports did show that the company reported its gross income from "coke, tar, ammonia, etc.," at $187,886.18 for one of the years, and approximately the same for the other, while it reported "gross earnings from gas" at $391,569.45. The reports did not disclose the facts as they should have done, and as the State Board might have required. Appellee's bookkeeper testified that the bonds were reported by and included in that item. The books of the company would have shown. Appellant might have compelled their production; but it did not. The evidence in the record then is that the bonds were not omitted from the report, and actually went into the consideration of the board in fixing the value of the franchise; that is to say, the income produced by the interest on the bonds was treated as part of the company's gross earnings, and, whether from bonds or the sale of gas, went to enhance the value of the company's money earning capital by that much. So that it appears that the bonds were in fact, though perhaps not in name, as effectually valued in making the franchise assessment as if they had been reported specifically as they should have been.

Finding no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment must be affirmed.

LOW v. RAMSEY et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 821*)—CHARGE ON DEVISE—CARE OF CHILDREN—LIEN ON LAND.

A provision in a will, charging a son to whom all the property was given with the duty of caring for two younger children of the testatrix till they reached a certain age, created a lien on the land in their favor for this purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 2118; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

2. WILLS (§ 824*)—LIABILITIES OF PURCHASER FROM DEVISEE.

A purchaser from a devisee is charged with notice of provisions of the recorded will, and holds the land subject to the liabilities imposed on the devisee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1913, 2122; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

3. WILLS (§ 639*)—CONSTRUCTION—VESTING OF DEVISE—CONDITION PRECEDENT OR SUBSEQUENT.

A provision in a will imposing on a son, to whom all the property was given, the duty of supporting and caring for other children of the testatrix, was neither a condition precedent to the vesting of a devise in him, nor a condition subsequent, which by failure to perform would forfeit the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1524; Dec. Dig. § 639.*]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 72*)—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION—INFANT'S RIGHTS UNDER WILL.

Where an infant was entitled under the terms of a will to support and maintenance by a devisee till she reached the age of 15, her cause of action thereunder to enforce a lien on the land first accrued when the devisee failed to furnish her support, and her full cause of action was protected when she reached that age.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 390; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 72*)—COMPUTATION OF PERIOD—EFFECT OF INFANT'S DISABILITY.

One who was an infant when a right of action accrued had the same length of time to sue after becoming of age that she would have had had she been of age when the cause of action accrued; Ky. St. § 2525 (Russell's St. § 191), expressly providing as to infants entitled to sue that action may be brought within a like number of years after removal of their disability that is allowed to a person having no such impediment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 390; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 28*)—LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE—ACTION ON CONTRACT NOT IN WRITING.

An action to enforce an undertaking to support a minor assumed by one accepting property under a will providing therefor is governed by the five-year limitation of Ky. St. § 2515 (Russell's St. § 224), as to actions on contracts not in writing, and the mere fact that the acceptance of the devise charged the property with the liability undertaken by him does not extend the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§§ 180, 182*)—PLEADING—DEMURRER RAISING DEFENSE.

The statute of limitations must be pleaded, unless the petition shows not only a sufficient lapse of time, but nonexistence of any ground of avoidance; but when the petition shows that the action is barred, and that plaintiff is not within any exception contained in the statute which saved his right to sue, the question may be raised by demurrer.

Action by Josie Low against Charlie Ramsey and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Williams and Jas. I. Hamilton, for appellant. Lewis L. Walker, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. Mrs. Mary L. Low died, after making her last will, which was probated in January, 1888. By this will the testatrix gave to her son Wiatt Low all of her personal and real estate, declaring that he should pay $1 to each of her children, viz., Mary E. Jordan, Harry, Josie, Aaron, Elgie, and Samuel. The balance of her estate, both real and personal, she devised and bequeathed to him "with the understanding that he is to take and raise my children Harry and Josie until they are 15 years old." At the time the testatrix died, Josie Low was between seven and eight years old. Shortly after the probate of the will Wiatt Low sold the real estate devised to him to James Ramsey, and moved out of the state, taking with him Harry Low. Ramsey remained in possession of the land from the time he bought it from Wiatt until his death in 1908, when it descended to his widow and children, the appellees herein. In 1908 Josie brought this suit against the Ramsey heirs, charging that Wiatt Low immediately after the death of the testatrix abandoned her, and did not at any time provide her with food, clothing, money, or property of any sort. She alleged that she was entitled to a lien on the land for the reasonable cost of her care and support from the time of her mother's death until she became 15 years of age, and that the reasonable cost of caring for and supporting her during this period would be $1,000. She further alleged that when Ramsey bought the land from Wiatt he had actual and constructive knowledge of the contents of the will. She asked that she be adjudged a lien on the land, and that it be subjected to the payment of her demand of $1,000. The lower court sustained a general demurrer to her petition as amended, and, declining to plead further, her action was dismissed, and she appeals.

In our opinion the provision in the will charging Wiatt Low with the duty of caring for Josie and Harry until they were 15 years old created a lien upon the land in their favor and for this purpose, and as the will was put to record the vendee of Wiatt was charged with notice of its provisions and held it subject to the liabilities imposed upon Wiatt.

It is insisted by counsel for appellant that the provisions in the will imposing upon Wiatt the duty of supporting and caring for these children was either a condition precedent to the vesting of the devise in him, or a condition subsequent, that by his failure to perform forfeited the estate; but in this view we do not agree. Giving to the provision in the will the same effect that was given to similar provisions in the wills construed in the cases of Pearcy v. Greenwell, 80 Ky. 616, and Bryant v. Dungan, 92 Ky. 627, 18 S. W. 636, 36 Am. St. Rep. 618, we hold, as did the court in Pearcy v. Greenwell, that Wiatt took the estate subject to the charge upon it in favor of Harry and Josie.

Assuming then that it was the duty of Wiatt to support and care for these beneficiaries, the question remains whether or not the appellant has not surrendered her claim by the long delay before attempting to enforce it. Her cause of action first accrued when Wiatt failed to furnish her support, and her full cause of action was perfected when she became 15 years of age. She might then, under the facts stated in the petition, have recovered everything that was due her under the will; but, as she was an infant when her right accrued, she had the same length of time after becoming of age to bring the suit that she would have if she had been of age when her cause of action accrued—section 2525 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 191), reading: "If a person entitled to bring any of the actions mentioned in the third article of this chapter, except for a penalty or forfeiture, was, at the time the cause of action accrued, an infant, * * * the action may be brought within the like number of years after the removal of such disability, * * * that is allowed to a person having no such impediment to bring the same after the right accrued."

The next question is: How many years did she have after becoming of age to bring the action? Section 2515 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 224) provides in part that "an action upon a contract not in writing signed by the party * * * shall be commenced within five years next after the cause of action accrued," and we have no question that this statute applies. The contract attempted to be enforced was not signed by Wiatt. He merely accepted the provisions of a will that imposed upon him an obligation. The undertaking to support and care for appellant was assumed by Wiatt as a personal obligation when he took the devise, and the mere fact that the acceptance of the devise charged the property with the liability undertaken by him does not have the effect of extending the time in which an action to enforce it may be brought beyond five years. This point was adjudged in Collings v. Collings, 92 S. W. 577, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 51. In that case Elisha Collings conveyed to his daughter certain lands in consideration of her agreement to pay specified debts then owing by Collings. In the course of the opinion the court said: "While it is true the deed imposed on the grantee the payment of the debts named in it, which became thereby a lien on the land in favor of the respective creditors to whom owing. It was an express assumpsit, barred by limitation after five years, so far as the grantee was concerned, although as between the original debtor, Elisha Collings, and his creditors, the debts may not have been barred. When the debts became outlawed, so far as they affected the grantee, the lien was likewise discharged. It was not competent for Elisha Collings and his creditors by any subsequent agreement between themselves to prolong the lives of these debts so as to affect Mrs. Alloway, the grantee of the land, without her consent."

As the claim of appellant is barred by the statute, can this defense be presented by a general demurrer? The rule is that the statute of limitations must be pleaded, unless the petition shows not only a sufficient lapse of time but the nonexistence of any ground of avoidance; but when the petition shows that the action is barred, and that plaintiff is not within any of the exceptions contained in the statute which saved his right to sue, the question may be raised by demurrer. Stillwell v. Leavy, 84 Ky. 379, 1 S. W. 590, 8 Ky. Law Rep. 321. The only relief sought is the subjection of the land in the hands of the appellees to the payment of appellant's claim. There is no averment that the appellees in any manner or form assumed the payment of appellant's claim or any part of it. The petition does not seek any relief against the appellees personally, and so it follows that she could not be entitled to any of the exceptions contained in the statute of limitations that would save it from running against her. Under these circumstances we think the question that the claim was barred by limitation could be raised by demurrer.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

PATTERSON et al v. PATTERSON et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 9, 1909.)

1. PERPETUITIES (§ 6*)—CONSTRUCTION OF DEED.

A deed conveying land to a turnpike company for a tollhouse, and providing that, when the house should cease to be used for such purpose, the land and building should revert to certain persons named, did not create a perpetuity in violation of Ky. St. 1909, § 2360 (Russell's St. § 2055), since the grantee might at any time with the sale of its turnpike convey the use of the tollhouse and ground to its vendee, and under section 2359 (section 2054) the reversioners might at pleasure sell their reversionary interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perpetuities, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-30; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 145*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONDITION SUBSEQUENT—COVENANT.

Conditions subsequent are not favored, and, if it be doubtful whether a clause in a deed be a condition or a covenant, courts will incline to the latter construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 471; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

3. PERPETUITIES (§ 6*)—CONVEYANCE FOR HIGHWAY.

The statute against perpetuities (Ky. St. 1909, § 2360 [Russell's St. § 2055]) does not apply to a conveyance of land for a public highway, or for use in connection with the operation of a turnpike, which is a public highway.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perpetuities, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

4. PERPETUITIES (§ 4*)—REVERSIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where a deed conveyed land to a turnpike company for use for a tollhouse, a provision that on cessation of such use the land should revert to certain named persons, instead of the grantor, was valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perpetuities, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-30; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 214*)—DEMURRER—EFFECT.

On demurrer to the petition the facts therein alleged must be accepted as true.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by John Patterson and others against Jacob S. Patterson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

G. Allison Holland and Wallace Muir, for appellants. Allen & Duncan, for appellees.

SETTLE, J. On October 27, 1891, Nannie C. Smedley, spinster, in consideration of $1 in hand paid, sold and by deed conveyed to the Ft. Spring & Pinkard Turnpike Company, a corporation owning and operating a turnpike in Fayette county, a quarter of an acre of ground "for the purpose of building a house for collecting toll for said pike." The deed also provides: "Now, it is further agreed that when said house ceases to be used for collecting toll for said pike, then and at that time the above tract of land with all buildings and fixtures to revert back to Jacob Smedley, Will Waltz, and John Patterson or their heirs." Jacob Smedley was a brother, John Patterson and Will Waltz, brothers-in-law, of Nannie Smedley. On May 9, 1894, the turnpike company, grantee in the deed referred to, sold and conveyed its turnpike to the fiscal court of Fayette county, and that court at once made it a free turnpike and ceased to collect tolls thereon, and to use the tollhouse on the lot conveyed by Nannie Smedley to the turnpike company. Thereupon Jacob Smedley, Will Waltz, and John Patterson without objection from any source took possession of the tollhouse and ground in question, and they, or Patterson and the heirs at law of Jacob Smedley and Will Waltz, have since continuously had and held the actual adverse possession thereof, claiming it as against all others. Nannie Smedley, the grantor in the deed to the turnpike company, was living at the time Jacob Smedley, Will Waltz, and John Patterson took possession of the tollhouse and for ten years thereafter, and all the while residing near the property in question. Nannie Smedley died in 1904, childless, but left a will which was duly probated, following which her estate was in due course settled and distributed as by the will directed. Jacob Smedley and Will Waltz both died after they and John Patterson took possession of the tollhouse and ground, but both left children who are their heirs at law, respectively. Some years after Nannie Smedley's death, and after the distribution of her estate, the appellees, Fanny Hickey and John B. Smedley, the former a sister and the latter a brother of the decedent, set up claim to the lot and tollhouse as her heirs at law, whereupon John Patterson and the heirs at law of Jacob Smedley and Will Waltz, deceased, brought this action in the Fayette circuit court to quiet their title to the tollhouse and lot, alleging their ownership and possession of same under the deed from Nannie Smedley to the turnpike company and its reversion to them by reason of the purchase and freeing of the turnpike by the fiscal court of Fayette county. The devisees and heirs at law of Nannie Smedley, deceased, were made parties defendant to the action, and were duly summoned. But only two of them, Fanny Hickey and John B. Smedley, made defense to the action. This they did by filing a general demurrer to the petition, and without waiving same, later filing an answer.

By the demurrer and answer they resisted appellants' right to the property in question on the ground that the deed from Nannie Smedley to the turnpike company, in so far as it provided that the tollhouse and lot should revert to and become the property of Jacob Smedley, Will Waltz, and the appellant, John Patterson, upon the turnpike company ceasing to use it for collecting toll, was and is void for remoteness and by reason of the statute against perpetuities, and that, therefore, the title, following the abandonment of the use of the property for collecting toll, reverted to the grantor, Nannie Smedley, upon whose death it descended to appellees and the other heirs at law of the decedent. Accepting this view of the matter, the circuit court sustained the demurrer to the petition and dismissed the action at appellants' cost. Appellants, being dissatisfied with the judgment, have appealed.

For appellants it is urged that the circuit court erred in adjudging that the reversion or limitation over contained in the deed from Nannie Smedley to the turnpike company created a perpetuity in violation of section 2360, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 2055). The section reads as follows: "The absolute power of alienation shall not be suspended by any limitation or condition whatever, for a longer period than during the continuance of a life or lives in being at the creation of the estate, and twenty-one years and ten months thereafter." Without entering upon a dissertation as to the meaning of the legal term, "perpetuity," it is sufficient to say that the purpose of the statute is not to compel the vesting of estates, but to prohibit unreasonable restraints upon alienation. Neither in law nor fact did the deed under consideration create or seek to create a perpetuity. It conveyed to the turnpike company for a specific purpose, namely, for use in the collecting of tolls on the pike, the ground described. The deed did not render the property inalienable, for the turnpike company, after receiving it, had at any time the right to sell its turnpike to an individual, company, or the fiscal court, and with such sale convey the use of the ground and tollhouse to its vendee, and that vendee to another, ad libitum, so long as the property was used for the single purpose to which it was devoted by the Smedley deed. On the other hand, appellants had like power to sell and convey at any time the reversionary interest in the tollhouse and ground conveyed them by the deed. Section 2359, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 2054). The deed contains no language which imports that the grant was to become void in case the purpose for which the land was conveyed was not carried out, nor does it reserve to the grantor the right, in that event, to re-enter upon the land and resume possession of it as of her former estate. On the contrary, its language leaves no doubt of the intention of the grantor to give the property to her brother and brothers-in-law named therein when its use as a tollhouse shall cease. "It is a rule of law that conditions subsequent are not favored because they tend to destroy estates, and, if it be doubtful whether a clause in a deed be a condition or a covenant, courts will incline to the latter construction." Carroll County Academy v. Gallatin Academy, 104 Ky. 621, 47 S. W. 617, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 824.

There is another thing aside from the deed itself that has an important bearing on the case. The contingency entitling appellants to the land in controversy matured during the lifetime of the grantor. We think it safe to say that a limitation that would have been void under conditions existing when the deed was executed will not affect the ability of such a limitation, if by reason of circumstances happening subsequent to the execution of the deed but before the death of the grantor it does not offend the rule. The facts averred in the petition and admitted by the demurrer are that the deed from Nannie Smedley to the turnpike company was made in 1891; that the turnpike company conveyed its road and property to the fiscal court of Fayette county May 9, 1894; that upon that day appellants took possession of the tollhouse and ground by virtue of the reversionary interest conveyed them by the deed from Nannie Smedley to the turnpike company, and have ever since been in the actual, adverse possession thereof; and that the grantor, Nannie Smedley, died in 1904, 10 years after appellants took possession of the property, and during the whole of that time set up no claim that it had reverted to her. These facts show that she had knowledge of their taking possession of and retaining the property, and that it was done with her acquiescence, if not actual consent.

Finally, we are of opinion that the statute against perpetuities does not apply to a conveyance of land for a public highway, or for use in connection with the operation of a turnpike, which is a public highway. Gass & Bonta v. Wilhite, etc., 2 Dana, 170, 26 Am. Dec. 446. If the deed from Nannie Smedley to the turnpike company had not provided for the reversion of the title upon the abandonment of the use of the land for tollhouse purposes, nevertheless, under the law of this state, it would in consequence of such abandonment have reverted to the grantor, and, this being true, neither the statute against perpetuities nor other obstacle stood in the way of her providing in the deed for its reversion to another or others instead of herself.

Accepting as true the facts alleged in the petition, and this we must do on demurrer, we think they entitled appellants to the relief asked. Therefore the circuit court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the circuit court to overrule the demurrer, and for further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

CHAVASSE'S ADM'R.†

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 10, 1900.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 340*)—COLLISIONS AT CROSSING—NEGLIGENCE.

A railroad maintained three tracks crossing a street maintained a watchman at the crossing. A pedestrian passed over the main and middle tracks, and came to the third track, on which a freight train was passing. A passenger train on the main track was late. The pedestrian passed the watchman, who said nothing to him, and, on seeing the passenger train approaching, he attempted to recross the main track, and was killed by the passenger train. The watchman, when the pedestrian first passed over the tracks, did not know how late the passenger train was. Held, that the watchman was not negligent in allowing the pedestrian to walk over the crossing without warning him of the approach of the passenger train.

2. RAILROADS (§ 335*)—COLLISION AT CROSSING—NEGLIGENCE.

A pedestrian while standing in the space between the main track and a third track was in a safe position, but, on a passenger train on the main track flashing its headlight over the crossing, he determined to cross in front of the train, and was struck by it and killed. Held, that the railroad was not liable because the passenger train ran over the crossing at a dangerous rate of speed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by E. L. Chavasse's administrator against the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Thornton & Johnson, Edward Colston, and John Galvin, for appellant. Walton, Dickson & Walton and F. S. Spruill, for appellee.

BARKER, J. On the 17th day of March, 1908, at about 6:15 p. m. o'clock, Ernest L. Chavasse was struck by an engine attached to a passenger train of the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company at the point where the tracks of the company cross South Broadway street, in the city of Lexington, Ky. As a result of the injuries received in the collision Chavasse within a short time thereafter died. To recover damages for his death this action was instituted by the administrator of his estate, and in the petition it is alleged that his death was occasioned by the gross negligence of the employes of the company. The defendant filed an answer denying all the allegations of the petition, and pleading affirmatively that the decedent was himself guilty of contributory negligence. The affirmative allegations of the answer having been denied by reply, the issues were made up and a trial before a jury resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. Of the judgment predicated upon this verdict the railway company now complains.

The Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company crosses South Broadway street in Lexington, Ky., from a northerly to a southerly direction; but at the point of crossing the track runs from a southeasterly to a northwesterly direction. Broadway street is 50 feet wide and has three railroad tracks crossing it at the point where the accident occurred, each 4½ feet wide, with 5 feet space between the tracks. The tracks begin to curve very sharply when they leave Broadway street going toward the south. There is a watchman's stand in the corner between Scott's Hotel and Broadway street. On the right of Broadway street, going from the city, and on the north side of the track, the depot is situated.

The decedent, Ernest Chavasse, was boarding at Scott's Hotel, and on the evening of the accident he was proceeding from the hotel towards the city of Lexington. He approached South Broadway, which was occupied by three railroad tracks. The first called the "main" track, the second, being in the middle of the street, called "track No. 1," and the third, which was on the south side of the street, called "track No. 2." As this railroad crossing is used by many people, the company maintains there a watchman, whose business it is to prevent travelers from going upon the railroad crossing at a time when it is dangerous so to do because of the passing trains. On the evening of the accident which is involved in this litigation, Ernest L. Chavasse, as said before, left his hotel and started across South Broadway street. As he walked along the pavement, he passed the watchman, who was going from the street to his stand at the corner. Chavasse crossed the main or northerly track, then crossed track No. 1, which is in the middle of the street, and, when he reached track No. 2, which is on the southerly side of East Broadway street, he found it occupied by a long freight train which was slowly moving across the highway. At this time train No. 2 from the south was overdue; its schedule time being 6:08 p. m., and it was about 10 minutes late. When the decedent encountered the freight train crossing the street on track No. 2, he paused there in order to let it pass, so that he could pursue his journey. While the freight train was passing, the fast passenger train from the south, being No. 2, whistled for the crossing. Thereupon the watchman with his lantern in hand went upon the crossing, and cried out to all persons in the neighborhood "Look out for No. 2!" His attention was especially directed to one or more persons who were about to drive over the crossing. In order to stop this, he made the outcry above recited, and also waved his lantern. When he first made the outcry, "Look out for train No. 2!" Chavasse was standing quietly near the freight train which was slowly crossing the street on track No. 2. While he was thus standing, one Phil Donovan, who also wished to cross at the point the decedent did, was standing by his side. While this condition of things existed, the fast passenger train (No. 2) from the south approached the crossing at a speed of from 12 to 15 miles an hour. As the train neared the crossing it encountered quite a sharp curve, and as soon as it passed this curve it threw its headlight over the crossing. When this occurred, it seemed to attract the attention of the decedent, who at once turned to retrace his steps across the railroad tracks in the direction of his hotel on the north side of the street. He went in a great hurry; the witnesses saying that he ran. Just as he reached the main track, over which the approaching train was to pass, he looked in its direction, it being but a short distance from him, and then, seemingly calculating that he could cross in time, he sprang over the track, with the result that, although he nearly cleared it, the pilot beam on the far side of the engine struck him, inflicting injuries from which he almost immediately died.

The theory of the plaintiff is, first, that the railroad watchman was guilty of negligence in allowing the decedent to go upon the tracks when the fast passenger train from the south was overdue, without having warned him of its approach. The answer to this is that the watchman did not know at the time the decedent passed him when the fast train from the south would arrive. In the second place, it is said that the decedent, as he stood between the main track and track No. 2, was in a perfectly safe position, and, if he had remained in that position, he would not have been hurt, and therefore it was his own fault that he was injured.

The question, then, arises whether or not the company was negligent of any duty that it owed the decedent as a traveler rightfully occupying and crossing the highway at the time he was killed. When the decedent crossed the main track on the company's right of way, and as he stood beside the passing freight train on track No. 2, he was in a perfectly safe position so far as the passing trains were concerned. He had voluntarily taken a position within a few feet of the freight train on track No. 2, and, as said before, was waiting for this to pass the crossing so that he could continue on his way. Behind him there was a space of from 12 to 15 feet before the main track was reached, along which the incoming train was being propelled, and in this space the decedent, Phil Donovan, and the watchman were standing in perfect security. When the headlight of the approaching passenger train was thrown upon the crossing, for some reason that is not explained in the record the decedent changed his mind with reference to crossing the street, and dashed back towards his hotel, evidently with the intention and desire of crossing the main track before the fast approaching train reached it. Just as he got to the main track he paused for a second, apparently considering whether or not he could make the crossing before the oncoming train. Believing that he could do so, he sprang across the main track, with the result that he nearly cleared it, but was struck by the pilot beam on the far side, receiving the injuries from which, as said before, he almost immediately died. It cannot be said with any show of reason that the watchman was guilty of negligence in allowing Chavasse to walk along the crossing as he did without warning him of the approach of the fast passenger train from the south. In the first place, at the time that Chavasse crossed the main track going into the city, the watchman did not know how late the train was, or when it would reach the crossing. He was not in danger from having crossed the main track. When he got between the main track and track No. 2, he was in a perfectly safe position, and all that he had to do was to maintain it. We conclude, therefore, that the company was guilty of no negligence in having allowed him to cross the main track without warning him of the approach of the train from the south.

The only question remaining, then, is whether or not the company was guilty of negligence because the passenger train from the south was running over the crossing at a dangerous rate of speed. We conclude that it was not. The passenger train before reaching Lexington ran a schedule rate of fifty miles an hour, but, when it reached the city limits, its speed was gradually checked until when it reached the crossing where the accident occurred it was running only 12 to 15 miles an hour. But it seems to us that the speed of the train was entirely immaterial. Chavasse knew the train was coming. He had been especially warned by the watchman of this fact, and the evidence leaves no doubt in our minds that, before he undertook to cross the main track, he saw the approaching train, and this when he was in a position of absolute safety. Having concluded that he could safely cross the main track in front of the approaching train, he made the attempt with the result as above stated. It was immaterial whether the train was running at the rate of 5 miles per hour or 50 miles per hour. The decedent having jumped across the track immediately in front of the cow catcher, nothing could have been done to save him by those in charge of the engine. It is not pretended that the engineer or fireman saw, or could by the exercise of the utmost diligence have seen, the decedent before he sprang across the track in front of the engine; and, this being true, the speed of the engine was immaterial.

As said before, it is not explained in the record why Chavassee changed his mind and undertook to retrace his steps over the main track. It is certain that the watchman warned him twice of the approach of train No. 2, and plaintiff's own witness, Donovan, who stood beside Chavassee, heard the warning. If Chavassee had attempted to recross the main track when the first warning was given him, he undoubtedly could have done so in safety; but he seems not to have heeded either the first or second warning to look out for train No. 2, and it was only when the headlight flashed over the crossing that he suddenly determined to cross in front of the train. He was standing in perfect security, and there was nothing in his demeanor which indicated that he did not intend so to do until after the freight train in front of him got out of his way so that he could pursue his journey. Whether Chavassee merely changed his mind and determined to go back to his hotel, or whether he was overcome by fear when he found himself about to be inclosed between two passing trains, cannot now be told; but in either case the company was not responsible for what he did. All that the company owed him was the duty not to permit him to get into a place of danger on the crossing by reason of its negligence; and we are unable to see how anything that the company's agents did or omitted to do contributed to the decedent's injury. If he had stood with the watchman and Donovan, he would have been perfectly safe and no harm would have come to him. The company's servants were not able to know what was passing in his mind, or to anticipate his sudden determination to jump across the track immediately in front of the engine. It is immaterial whether train No. 2 was running fast or slow, or whether those in charge of it gave all or any of the statutory signals of its approach. The watchman had told Chavassee it was coming, and plaintiff shows that he saw it before he jumped to a place of danger. The case readily falls within the principle of C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r (Ky.) 115 S. W. 690; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Tower's Adm'r (Ky.) 115 S. W. 719, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Gilmore's Adm'r,

W. 809, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 599—and the defendant company was entitled to a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for it at the close of plaintiff's testimony. This conclusion renders it unnecessary that we should consider any other instruction either given or refused by the trial court.

Judgment reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HOWERTON et al. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 4, 1900.)

1. BAIL (§ 45*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—AFTER REVERSAL ON APPEAL.

Where a judgment of conviction was reversed by the Supreme Court on September 29th, the judgment was not vacated until the decision on appeal became final when the mandate was lodged in the trial court on November 5th, pursuant to Cr. Code Prac. § 360, as amended by Act March 21, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 144, c. 64), providing that no mandate shall issue or decision become final until after 30 days, excluding Sundays, from the day the decision was rendered, so that under Cr. Code Prac. § 75, prohibiting admitting defendant to bail after conviction, accused could not be admitted to bail on September 30th.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bail, Cent. Dig. § 146; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

2. BAIL (§ 44*)—BOND—VALIDITY—BOND GIVEN AFTER CONVICTION.

Under Cr. Code Prac. § 75, prohibiting admitting a defendant to bail after conviction, the trial court could not admit an accused to bail after conviction, and before the mandate reversing the judgment was filed, and the bail bond given on its attempt to do so was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bail, Cent. Dig. § 145; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Crittenden County.

"To be officially reported."

Proceeding by the Commonwealth against P. A. Howerton and another to enforce the forfeiture of a bail bond. From a judgment for the Commonwealth, defendants appeal. Reversed with directions to quash recognizance.

Jas. A. & John A. Moore, James & James, and L. H. James, for appellants. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, for the Commonwealth.

BARKER, J. Percy Howerton was convicted in the Crittenden circuit court of a felony. From the judgment based upon the verdict of the jury, finding him guilty as charged in the indictment against him, he appealed to this court, where the judgment was reversed on the 29th day of September, 1908. 112 S. W. 606, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 1008. On September 30, 1908, the clerk of the Crittenden circuit court, in obedience to a long-distance telephone message from the circuit judge, admitted the defendant to bail in the sum of $1,000, with the appellants, P. A. and G. W. Howerton, as sureties. Afterwards, on November 5, 1908, the mandate of this court was issued directing the judgment against the defendant to be set aside and awarding him a new trial. The case was then assigned on the docket of the circuit court for another trial. When the trial day arrived, the defendant, having been called, made default and forfeited his bond, and so far as we are advised he is still at large. This procedure is to enforce the forfeiture of the bond against the sureties, the appellants.

The question arising upon the foregoing statement is whether the bond executed by the original defendant, with appellants as sureties, was or not void. Section 75 of the Criminal Code of Practice is as follows: "After conviction, the defendant cannot be admitted to bail." Section 360, as amended by Act March 21, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 144, c. 64) provides: "That no mandate shall issue, nor decision become final, until after thirty days, excluding Sundays, from the day on which the decision is rendered, unless the court, in delay cases, otherwise direct. * * * After the conviction of the defendant he could not be admitted to bail while the judgment of conviction remained in full force and effect. It was not vacated until the decision of this court became final, under the provisions of section 360, supra, and this could not be done until the 5th day of November, 1908, when the mandate was issued and lodged in the circuit court. It seems to us therefore to follow that the admission to bail of the defendant Howerton by the clerk of the circuit court was without any authority, and the bond taken was void. The learned circuit judge was without jurisdiction to authorize the clerk to admit the defendant to bail until the filing of the mandate of this court and the setting aside of the judgment of conviction.

In Commonwealth v. Phillips, 116 Ky. 329, 76 S. W. 118, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 544, it was held that, while under section 74, Cr. Code Prac., a person charged with a felony may not be admitted to bail before being brought before a magistrate, and, though the magistrate issuing the warrant indorsed upon it that the defendant might be admitted to bail, the bond accepted by the sheriff was void. In the cases of Commonwealth v. Ball, 6 Bush, 291, and Covington v. Commonwealth, 3 Bush, 478, it was held that bonds such as involved here, taken by an officer or person unauthorized so to do, are void and impose no obligation on the sureties to the commonwealth. See, also, Branham v. Commonwealth, 2 Bush, 3; Creekmore v. Commonwealth, 5 Bush, 312; Commonwealth v. Roberts, 1 Duv. 199; Morgan v. Commonwealth, 12 Bush, 84.

Judgment reversed, with directions to quash the recognizance upon which the appellants are sureties.

3. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVENESS.

Plaintiff, a married woman, who was a housekeeper, was thrown from her carriage by an obstruction in a city street. She was confined to her bed for several days as she testified, though only for one day as testified by witnesses for the city. She sustained a severe cut over the left eye, which caused a permanent drooping of the eyelid and suffered great pain and became neurasthenic. Physicians testified that her injuries were permanent and that her power to earn money was seriously impaired. Held, that a verdict awarding her $3,000 was not excessive.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Ella M. Tompkins against the City of Louisville. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clayton B. Blakey, Leon P. Lewis, and J. M. Chilton, for appellant. Edward G. Hill, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellee, Ella M. Tompkins, instituted this action against appellant, city of Louisville, to recover damages for personal injuries. The jury awarded her $3,000, and the city appeals.

The accident occurred on May 29, 1908, between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening. At that time a severe rainstorm was in progress. Appellee lived in a tenement house on Poplar street. She left her home and proceeded to a point on that street where her husband had left a mule and wagon. Appellant had caused or allowed to be placed on each side of the roadway of Poplar street piles of granite paving blocks. Some of these blocks were directly in the roadway or travel part of the street. According to the evidence for appellee, there were piles of blocks so near together that only one vehicle at a time could pass between them. According to the evidence for appellant, at least two vehicles could pass between the piles of granite blocks. When appellee reached the wagon she climbed in and started to drive up Poplar street towards her home. When the mule had taken but a few steps, the left front wheel of the wagon came in contact with one of the granite blocks which was lying directly in the roadway. This caused the wagon to careen, and appellee was thrown therefrom to one of the piles of granite blocks and rendered unconscious. She received a severe cut over her left eye, which caused a phosia or permanent drooping of the left eyelid. She was also injured in the lower dorsal and upper lumbar region of the spine and nerves of the hip. Her left side and knee were bruised. In the opinion of the physician who treated her, and of the physician appointed by the court to examine her, her injuries were permanent.

At the conclusion of appellee's evidence, appellant asked for a peremptory instruction on the ground that there was no evidence tending to establish the fact that Poplar street was a public highway. The evidence upon this point was that Poplar street had been used as a public highway for 15 or 20 years. There was also evidence to the effect that the police patrolled Poplar street, although it was also shown that they patrolled private property as well. It is now the settled rule that a grant of a right of way and its acceptance by the proper authority and in the proper manner will be conclusively presumed from an uninterrupted and adverse use by the public as a right, and not the effect of indulgence or permission, for the period of 15 years or more. Greenup County v. Maysville & Big Sandy R. R. Co., 21 S. W. 351, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 699. In the case of City of Louisville v. Brewer's Adm'r, 72 S. W. 9, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1671, the rule is thus stated: "It may now be considered the prevailing opinion that an acceptance may be implied from a long-continued use by the public as a right." To the same effect is Riley v. Buchanan, 118 Ky. 625, 76 S. W. 527, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 863, 63 L. R. A. 642, where it is said: "A dedication of a highway may be impliedly accepted by long-continued user by the public." In view of the foregoing principles, we conclude that the court did not err in failing to award appellant a peremptory instruction. Nor did he err in assuming, in the instructions given to the jury, that Poplar street was a public highway. No serious attempt was made by the city to rebut the presumption arising from the long-continued use of Poplar street as a public highway. After the fact that Poplar street had been used for 15 years or more as a public highway had been established, the court had a right to assume its dedication and acceptance as a highway, in the absence of any proof to the contrary.

It is next argued that the verdict is against the evidence. The only two eyewitnesses of the accident were Mrs. Tompkins and Mrs. Nellie Schuler. While there are some slight discrepancies in their testimony, they are not more than usually occur in such cases. The fact that appellee and her husband are nomads of the Louisville Point is by no means conclusive that they are not worthy of belief. Besides, any facts tending to show that appellee's witnesses were unworthy of belief were matters for the consideration of the jury alone. We are unable to say that the finding of the jury is flagrantly against the weight of the evidence.

It is next insisted that the verdict is excessive. While appellee claims to have been confined to her bed for several days, a number of witnesses for appellant stated that she was not confined to bed after the day of the injury. Whether this be true or not, the evidence shows that she had a severe cut over her left eye which caused a permanent drooping of the eyelid. This drooping would produce a disfigurement which would necessarily cause any one great mental suffering. Dr. Davidson, who treated appellee, stated that her injuries were permanent, and that her power to earn money was seriously impaired. Dr. Boggess, who was appointed by the court to examine appellee, said he was of opinion that she suffered a great deal of pain. She was still suffering pain at the time of the trial. The witness was also of opinion that, if her condition remained the same as it was at the time of the examination, her earning capacity would be practically nothing. Thus it will be seen that there is no evidence to the effect that her injuries are not permanent. Furthermore, it was not necessary to prove the earning power of appellee, in order to show her entitled to damages for permanent injuries. It was shown that she was a housekeeper. In this capacity she had to do the necessary work around the home. She had the right to earn money. Her power to do so was impaired. To what extent was a question for the jury, to be determined by the application of their common knowledge and experience to all the facts and circumstances of the case. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company v. Overfield, 127 Ky. 548, 106 S. W. 242, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 421. In view of the character of appellee's injuries, and of the pain which she must have endured, and of the fact that at the time of the trial, which occurred about a year after the accident, she was still suffering from neurasthenia, a condition which in the opinion of the physicians would thereafter continue and permanently impair her power to earn money, we cannot say that a verdict for $3,000 is so excessive as to strike the mind as being the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. That being the case, the verdict will not be disturbed on that ground.

As another ground for reversal, it is urged that the court erred in failing to give the following instruction: "That the defendant, the city of Louisville, in repairing and constructing and reconstructing its streets and highways has the right to place such materials as may be necessary for said purpose on the sides of its highways, including Poplar street at the place mentioned in the petition, that when said materials were so placed the defendant was not required to anticipate any of said stones being taken or removed from the place where they were piled and put in the driveway, and that the defendant is not required to foresee or provide for or against every possible accident or danger that might occur to persons driving upon its streets, but is only required to exercise reasonable prudence or care in keeping its highways free from obstructions." We deem it unnecessary to copy the instructions given by the court. Suffice it to say that the issue whether or not Poplar street, at the place of the accident, was reasonably safe for public travel, was properly presented in the instructions. It was not error to refuse the instruction offered by the city. The principle announced in the case of Elam v. City of Mt. Sterling (Ky.) 117 S. W. 250, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 512, has no application to the facts of the case at bar. In that case the material was necessary for the construction or improvement of the street upon which it was located. It is not contended in this case that the piles of granite were to be used by the city in the construction or improvement of Poplar street. It is insisted, however, in the brief of appellant, that the materials were to be used in the improvement of a nearby street. Even if that were the case (although there is no satisfactory proof of it), it would not justify the giving of the instruction refused. It is only where the material is piled upon the street to be constructed and improved that the principle announced in the Elam Case becomes applicable.

The question of contributory negligence by appellee was properly submitted to the jury. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that her failure, when seated in the wagon during a severe rainstorm, to observe the rock which came in contact with the wheel of the wagon, constituted contributory negligence.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Kenton County, Common Law and Equity Division.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Charles C. Miller against Henry Dersch and others, consolidated with an action by Henry Dersch against the Cottage Building Association No. 2, of Covington, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff Charles C. Miller, defendant Henry Dersch and another appeal. Affirmed.

J. M. Dial, for appellants. A. E. Stricklett, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. The appellee, Charles C. Miller, under a contract made with the appellant Louis Noble, constructed in front of the latter's lot, in the city of Latonia, a sidewalk and steps leading into the lot, at a cost of $117.93. Upon the completion of the work appellee, by filing in the office of the clerk of the Kenton county court the statement required by section 2463, Ky. St. (section 2383, Russell's St.), duly acquired a lien upon the lot in question. Noble having failed to pay the debt, appellee, within the time fixed by the statute, instituted suit thereon in the court below to recover personal judgment of Noble and obtain the enforcement of his mechanic's lien upon the lot mentioned. The petition contained an accurate description of the lot and the usual statements of fact necessary in such cases to manifest the lien. The Cottage Building Association No. 2, of Covington, and the appellant Henry Dersch were made defendants; it being alleged in the petition that each claimed a lien of some sort upon the lot in question, which they were called upon to assert.

Shortly after the institution of appellee's action, the appellant Dersch brought an action in the Kenton circuit court—but whether in the same division in which appellee's action was brought does not appear from the record—to enforce a mortgage lien for $225, claimed to exist in his favor upon the same lot. In the latter action the Cottage Building Association No. 2, of Covington, seems to have filed an answer, which was made a cross-petition against Noble, also asserting a lien upon the same property; but neither the building association nor the appellant Dersch appears to have filed an answer in the action brought by the appellee. It does appear, however, from an order found in the record, that on motion of the Cottage Building Association the action brought by the appellant Dersch was consolidated with that of appellee, and that by a further order the answer and cross-petition of the building association was taken and to be considered as its answer and cross-petition in the latter case; but no order was entered allowing the petition in the suit brought by appellant Dersch to be taken as his answer to the petition in the action brought by appellee. No defense was interposed by the appellant Noble in either action.

Judgment was rendered in the court below in appellee's favor against Noble for the amount of his debt and costs. In addition, appellee and the Cottage Building Association were given judgment for the enforcement of their lien; that of the building association being given priority. The appellant Dersch was also given judgment for the enforcement of his lien upon the same property; but his lien was adjudged inferior to those of appellee and the Cottage Building Association. From the judgment in question both Dersch and Noble have appealed.

It is contended by Noble that the court below erred in giving appellee a personal judgment against him for the amount of his debt; and this is his sole complaint, which rests upon the theory that as to such a claim only a judgment in appellee's favor enforcing the lien was proper. The contention is untenable. It is true that in the matter of improvement liens made under the ordinances of a city this court has held that a personal judgment against the property owner is not allowable, the contractor being, in such cases, restricted to the enforcement of his lien; but this rule does not obtain where the improvement is made under a contract between the maker of the improvement and the owner of the property. In the latter case the contract, like any other, personally binds the property owner and renders him liable for the cost of the improvement. Therefore the personal judgment against him was proper.

It is complained by the appellant Dersch that his mortgage lien was created before the filing by appellee of the statement for his mechanic's lien in the clerk's office, and therefore the circuit court erred in giving appellee priority. If this were true, Dersch would seem to be entitled to the priority claimed; but it does not so appear from the record. Though made a defendant in the action brought by appellee, Dersch did not, by answer or otherwise, set up his mortgage lien in that action or claim priority over that of appellee. The petition in his action was not made an answer to appellee's petition, and no defense or objection was made by him to appellee's lien, or as to the priority thereof. Indeed, the record is incomplete, presenting only a partial showing of the proceedings had in the two cases in the court below. In the absence of a complete record, and the petition of appellee being sufficient to support the judgment in his behalf, we must take it for granted that the court had before it all the facts sufficient to justify it in giving appellee's lien priority over that of the appellant Dersch. In other words, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, we must conclude that the judgment of the circuit court is in all respects such a judgment as should have been rendered in the case.

As the appellants did not file a schedule in the office of the clerk of the circuit court within the time required by the Code, we might have summarily disposed of the appeal by dismissing it; but, its dismissal not being asked upon that ground, we have concluded to dispose of the case as otherwise presented by the record, upon its merits.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF OWENSBORO v. GABBERT.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 4, 1900.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 219*)—ASSUMED RISK—OBVIOUS DANGERS.

A ditch two feet wide and six feet deep, which a servant was digging through sandy soil when the sides caved and injured him, was not such an obviously dangerous place of work that one of common understanding would not have continued to work therein, though its walls were not supported in any way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 610-624; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 222*)—PLACE OF WORK—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Where the place of work is not such as to impose upon the master the full duty of providing a safe place, and, though somewhat dangerous, it is not so obviously so that one of ordinary intelligence would not work there, and a servant is assured by the master or his representative that there is no danger, or is directed to continue the work, he may recover for injuries caused by the dangerous place of work, though the risk is as open to him as to the master; the doctrine of assumption of risk in case of equal knowledge of the danger not being strictly implied when the servant acts under the master's direction, as he may then rely on the master's judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 648-651; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 222*)—INJURIES—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—PLACE OF WORK—WORK UNDER MASTER'S DIRECTION.

Where a ditch which plaintiff was digging when it caved was not so obviously dangerous for want of shoring up that one of ordinary intelligence would have quit the work, the master was liable for injuries caused by its caving, where he impliedly directed plaintiff to continue work after plaintiff had called his attention to the probable danger and necessity of bracing it, even if the place was such that plaintiff created the danger in the progress of the work, so that the rule as to a safe place of work would not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 648-651; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 107*)—INJURIES—SAFE PLACE OF WORK—DUTY TO MAKE SAFE—EXCAVATING WORK.

While the rule requiring a master to furnish a safe place of work does not apply to many works of construction where the unsafe condition is necessarily made during the progress of the work, the master was bound to make reasonably safe, by shoring the walls, a ditch two feet wide and six feet deep which was being built through sandy soil; such precaution being possible at a slight expense, and the danger from working without it not being obvious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Daviess County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by G. M. Gabbert against the City of Owensboro. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. W. Slack, for appellant. Le Vega Clements and Ben D. Ringo, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment in favor of appellee in an action brought by him against the appellant to recover damages for injuries sustained while in its employment as a laborer digging a ditch.

It appears from the evidence that appellee, under the direction of a superior servant of the city, was engaged in digging a ditch two feet wide and six feet deep in a sandy soil. The ditch was not braced or supported in any way, although it could have been shored up and made safe at little expense, and the sand in the side of the ditch gave way, causing the solid earth on the surface to cave in and fall on appellee. The argument is made in behalf of the city that appellee, who was a man of mature years and ordinary intelligence, knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, the dangers incident to the employment, which it is said were obvious, and that he assumed the risk of being injured in the manner he was; and it is further insisted that, as this was a work of construction, and the dangerous place was being made by appellee in the course of his labors, the rule putting on the master the duty of furnishing reasonably safe places for the servant to work in does not apply. Complaint is also made of alleged errors committed by the court in giving and refusing instructions.

Excepting appellee and the physicians who testified in his behalf, no witnesses were introduced by either party. During the examination of appellee, he was asked the following questions: "Q. Now, Mr. Gabbert, at the time the walls of the ditch caved in, you knew it was going to cave in? A. Certainly not, or I would not have been in there. Q. Did you know the danger of its caving in? A. No, sir; I never worked in such sand and dirt as that before. Q. Upon whose judgment did you rely in that matter? A. Doc Woods. Q. You knew Mr. Woods well? A. Certainly. Q. And you had been working under him? A. Yes, sir. Q. You knew he was an experienced man? A. Yes, sir. Q. How long had you been digging ditches of that kind and depth? A. I don't know as I ever dug any besides that of that kind and depth. Q. How long had you been digging at six feet in that place? A. Something like two days, I guess. It was deeper out there where it caved in than where we commenced. Q. It hadn't caved in anywhere else, had it? A. No, sir; that was the first cave-in in that ditch. Q. Could you see anything more about that soil than the shape of that ditch, or know anything more about it than Mr. Woods could see? Was there anything he could see or know about it that you could not see or know? A. I can't say anything about that. Mr. Woods should have understood his business and knew the disposition of the soil. Q. Did you see that sand crumbling? A. No, sir; I didn't see any sand crumbling. I was cleaning up the bottom of the ditch when it caved in, and I don't remember watching it. Q. You received all of your orders from Mr. Woods, did you? A. Certainly. Q. Did anybody else about the work have authority to give orders to the men except Mr. Woods? A. No, sir. Q. Did you have any warning at all before it caught you? A. No, sir; none at all. Q. What, if anything, had you said to the foreman about the ditch? A. I just remarked to Mr. Woods, who was 10 or 12 feet behind me, awhile before that happened, that I thought it ought to be braced, that there was sand there, and he said, 'Maybe we will get through without it,' and just went on that way."

It thus appears that appellee, although not sure that the place was dangerous, felt some uneasiness about it and made the inquiry above set out to his foreman, Woods, who, in effect, assured him that there was no danger. It cannot be said that the place was so obviously dangerous that no person of common understanding would have continued to work in it, and so the principle announced in Wilson v. Chess-Wymond Co., 117 Ky. 567, 78 S. W. 453, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1655, Shemwell v. Owensboro & Nashville R. Co., 117 Ky. 556, 78 S. W. 448, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1671, Duncan v. Gernett Bros. Lumber Co., 87 S. W. 762, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 1039, and other like cases, does not apply. The rule in this state is that when the place in which the servant is engaged in working is not such as imposes upon the master the full duty of providing a safe place, but is somewhat hazardous or dangerous, although not obviously so, or the danger of continuing is not so apparent that a person of ordinary intelligence would not undertake it, and the servant is assured, in substance or effect, by the master, who is present, that it is reasonably safe, or that there is no danger, or is directed by him to go on with the work, the servant may recover for injuries received, although the risk or hazard in prosecuting the work is as well known to the servant as it is to the master. When the master is present, the doctrine of equal knowledge and assumed risk, that is sometimes invoked in cases like this to relieve the master, should be sparingly applied. The position of the two is very different, and out of this difference grows the right of the servant to depend upon the master, if he be present directing the work, as he has a right to presume he will warn him of danger and save him from needless exposure to injury or death. In Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 186, this idea is well expressed in the following language: "The true rule in this as in all other cases is that, if the master gives the servant to understand that, he does not consider the risk one which a prudent person should refuse to undertake, the servant has the right to rely upon his master's judgment, unless his own is so clearly opposed thereto that in fact he does not rely upon the master's opinion. So, if the peculiar risk of the act commanded by the master is not obvious, the servant has the right to assume that he is not sent into any unusual peril, and is not bound to investigate into the risk, before obeying his orders. A servant is not called upon to set up his own unaided judgment against that of his superiors, and he may rely upon their advice, and still more upon their orders, notwithstanding many misgivings of his own. * * * The servant's dependent and inferior position is to be taken into consideration, and if the master gives him positive orders to go on with the work, under perilous circumstances, the servant may recover for an injury thus incurred, if the work was not inevitably or immediately dangerous." So that, if we should put this case upon the ground that the servant was engaged in a work of construction, and was himself by his labor making the danger, and hence the strict rule for the protection of the servant in respect to safe places should not be applied, we would yet feel obliged to say that the master in this case made himself liable by his implied direction to the servant to go on with the work after his attention was directed by the servant to the probable danger and the necessity for shoring or bracing. As said in Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Holtby, 93 S. W. 652, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 523, a case in many respects like the one at bar: "There are exceptions to the rule that relieved the master from liability when the servant is injured by appliances or tools or unsafe places, when the danger is one that might have been discovered by the servant by the exercise of ordinary care. Among them, and applicable to the facts in this case, is the doctrine that, although an appliance, tool, or place may be unsafe, and the danger discoverable by reasonable or ordinary inspection, yet if the master is present and orders the servant to perform the duty, or the servant depends on the master's presumed knowledge of the defective appliance or unsafe place, or relies on the master's inspection of the premises, and acts under his immediate direction, the master will be liable."

But, aside from this, the character of the work, although constructive, was not such as to relieve the master from the duty of making it reasonably safe. There are a great many works of construction in which it would not be practicable for the master to keep a safe place in which the servant could work while engaged in the undertaking; the nature of the work being such that a continual change is going on with which the servant must familiarize himself and take such precautions as are necessary to avoid accident or injury. To this class of constructive work a lower standard of liability on the part of the master, and in many cases no liability, will be applied than in cases where the work has been finished and is being used in the ordinary conduct of the business. Bailey on Master & Servant, §§ 29, 267; Ballard & Ballard Co. v. Lee (Ky.) 115 S. W. 732. But where an excavation like the one involved in this case is being made, and there is danger that the walls may cave in, and this is or should be in the exercise of ordinary care known to the master, and can easily and with little expense be obviated by shoring them up, there is no reason why the duty of the master to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place in which to work should not be applied in its fullest extent, unless the danger is so obvious that a person of ordinary intelligence would not undertake it. This doctrine is well supported by numerous authorities, among which we may mention Thompson on Negligence, §§ 3912, 3913; Bailey on Master & Servant, § 98; American & English Encyclopedia of Law, vol. 20, p. 59; 26 Cyc. 1178; Welch v. Carlucci Stone Co., 215 Pa. 34, 64 Atl. 302, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 209.

As the instructions given by the court conformed to our views of the law applicable to the case as we have expressed them in this opinion, and the verdict is not excessive, the judgment of the lower court must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Leslie County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action between John H. Napier and Mack Bentley and others. There was a judgment in favor of the former, and the latter appeal. Affirmed.

Jno. B. Minlard, Wootton & Morgan, and Greene, Van Winkle & Schoolfield, for appellants. J. G. Begley, O. K. Calvert, J. W. Wright, and W. W. Rawlings, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Many years ago William Sizemore lived on Rock House creek in Leslie county. He laid off to his son, Joe Sizemore, a boundary of land. Before a deed was made, Joe Sizemore sold the land to John H. Napier, and then William Sizemore made Napier the deed in the year 1879. Napier entered upon the land, claiming to the line which was shown him, and held up to this line until this controversy arose, in the year 1907, between him and the heirs at law of William Sizemore, who had died previous to the year 1890. The only question in the case is what land is embraced by the calls of the deed from William Sizemore to John H. Napier. The calls of the deed are as follows: "Beginning at a rock near the forks of the Rock House creek on the east side of said creek; thence up said Rock House with the calls of the patent to the second ford of said creek to a marked line; thence square across said creek each way down to the beginning, containing 125 acres, be the same more or less together, with all and singular the appurtenances and improvements therewith belonging." William Sizemore owned a body of land lying on the waters of Rock House creek and extending out on each side to the crest of the ridge. The figure 1 on the following plot, which roughly represents the situation, is at the beginning point of the deed; the line A B being the upper line of the tract as claimed by the heirs of Sizemore and the line C X D being the upper line of the tract as claimed by Napier.

Napier, and that he had conveyed to Napier to this line. Napier also showed that in the year 1890 William Sizemore's heirs sold to El. H. Patterson, trustee, a large body of land which they owned, and that by this sale they sold and conveyed to the line C X D; that he was at home when the surveying was done, and they sent for him and had him bring his deed, and the line was then run and re-marked as his line. After this some of the Sizemore heirs held some of the land under Napier, and another pointed out to persons cutting timber under Patterson where Napier's line ran, so that he would

The proof for the heirs of Sizemore is to the effect that the second ford on the creek, counting from its mouth, is where the line A B crosses the creek; that this is a marked line, and that the land below this line amounts to 99.6 acres. The proof for Napier is that when he bought the land he was shown the line C X D, which was then marked; that he settled upon the land when he bought it, and has since claimed to this line. Joe Sizemore also testified that his father laid off the land to him before he sold it to Napier, and marked to him the line C X D; that the land was not surveyed, and they had little idea how much land was in the boundary within the crest of the hills. A survey shows now that there are something like 385 acres below the line C X D. In addition to this Napier proved by four witnesses, who were neighbors and friends of William Sizemore, that he had shown them the line C X D, telling them that he had marked this line off for Joe; that Joe had sold to not get over the line on Napier. In addition to this, previous to the year 1890, there had been no dispute between Napier and William Sizemore or his heirs as to the line C X D being the true line, and after 1890, when they sold to Patterson, trustee, they gave in no land for taxation on Rock House creek, and set up no claim to any land there; there being no controversy until about the year 1907, when this suit was brought. On these facts the court gave judgment in favor of Napier and the Sizemore heirs appeal.

It is earnestly insisted for the appellants that the deed which Napier accepted is conclusive for them that only the land up to the line A B was conveyed to Napier because it is said the proof clearly shows that this is a marked line, and crosses the creek at the second ford. The deed is very inartificially drawn, and we are to read the whole description without giving special prominence to any one expression. It is evident from the whole description that William Sizemore conveyed to Napier a body of land lying on both sides of Rock House creek and extending up to a marked line. There is not sufficient proof in the record that William Sizemore made a marked line at A B, or that he ever recognized this line for any purpose. On the other hand, the proof is conclusive that the marked line which he referred to was the marked line when he had marked off the land to Joe Sizemore a short time before, and which they had pointed out to Napier shortly before the deed was made. The proof shows that there was a ford at X, and a short distance below it another ford; these fords being above what was known as Buffalo Hill. When he used the expression "the second ford," he evidently had in mind the upper of these two fords, which were close together and in the same vicinity. What was then known as the second ford is a matter of proof; and, while this may not have been the second ford across the creek counting from its mouth, it may have been known colloquially as the second ford. The marked line being here, and being indisputably established, the other part of the description should be read to harmonize with it. Parol proof is always admissible to show where the objects called for in a deed are located on the ground; and, where the location as actually made by the parties is established, this must control. In view of the subsequent conduct of all the parties, we have no doubt that the line C X D is the true line. It is true that this line gives Napier three times as much land as his deed calls for, but when he bought the land, land was selling very cheap, or at from $1 to $2 an acre. The parties made no survey, and really had no adequate idea what the distance was from the crest of one hill to the crest of the other, and perhaps, when they put the quantity at 125 acres, they had in mind the land below the cliffs. But however this may be, it being plain that the line was marked and established as called for by Napier, he cannot now be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

BURNES et al. v. DAVIESS COUNTY BANK & TRUST CO.'S ASSIGNEE et al.

FRANKE et al. v. SAME.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 9, 1909.)

1. PLEDGES (§ 23*)—DELIVERY AND POSSESSION—WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS—BONDS—VALIDITY.

A bank issued to depositors certificates termed "mortgage certificates of deposit," which recited the deposit, and that the certificate was secured by an equal amount of bonds or lien notes. When such certificates were issued, the bank would indorse on one of its mortgage bonds or lien notes the fact that it was pledged as security for certificates issued, and the bond or note so indorsed was placed in a box retained by it with others similarly indorsed, and a similar indorsement was made on the register opposite the entry of such bond or note, and, when such indorsed bonds or notes were paid, another bond or note belonging to the bank was indorsed and placed in the box with the others. The indorsements were not dated and ordinarily not signed by the bank officers. Ky. St. § 1908 (Russell's St. § 2102), makes every charge upon personality, unless actual possession in good faith accompanies it, void as to any creditor prior to the recording of the charge. Held, that a pledge of personality could only be created by actual or symbolic delivery of the property to the pledgee, and, while the pledge of the bonds, etc., was valid as between the bank and the certificate holders, the statute made it void as to other creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS (§ 178*)—REMEDIES OF ASSIGNEE—SETTING ASIDE ASSIGNMENT—RIGHT.

Under Ky. St. § 84 (Russell's St. § 396), vesting in the assignee property fraudulently transferred by an assignor for the benefit of creditors before the assignment, if a transfer by the assignor is void as to his creditors, it is void as to the assignee, since he represents them, and holds the property in trust for their benefit, so that the fact that a pledge of property by an assignor for the benefit of creditors without delivering possession was good as between it and the pledgees would not prevent the assignee from setting it aside as void against the assignor's creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. § 525; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Daviess County.

"To be officially reported."

Proceedings by E. B. Anderson to settle his accounts as assignee for the benefit of creditors of the Daviess County Bank & Trust Company. From the judgment entered, Edward Franke and Sam Burnes appeal. Affirmed.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney, Miller & Todd, J. D. Atchison, and Geo. W. Jolly, for appellants. Le Vega Clements, Ben D. Ringo, C. M. Finn, J. R. Hays, W. F. Hays, and C. W. Wells, for appellees.

HOBSON, J. The Daviess County Bank & Trust Company began business in Owensboro, Ky., on August 7, 1900. On April 28, 1908, it made a general deed of assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and E. B. Anderson was appointed as trustee. He filed this action in the Daviess circuit court for a settlement of his accounts. There were a large number of depositors in the bank, some of whom held the ordinary certificates of deposit. Others held what is denominated in the record "mortgage certificates of deposit." The latter were in these words: "Owensboro, Ky., ———, $——. This is to certify that ——— has deposited in the Daviess Bank & Trust Company ——— dollars payable to his order on return of this certificate properly indorsed twelve months after date with interest thereon at ——— per cent. per annum, interest to cease on the ——— day of — 19—. This certificate of deposit is one of a series of similar certificates, and is secured by an equal amount of first mortgage bonds or lien notes on real estate in Daviess county, Kentucky, worth at least double the amount loaned." These certificates were issued pursuant to an order of the board of directors made on March 26, 1903, which was as follows: "At a meeting of the directors of the Daviess County Bank & Trust Company held to-day in the directors' room there were present T. S. Venable, J. J. Griffin, and T. S. Anderson. T. S. Anderson laid before the board a plan for issuing certificates of deposit secured especially by first mortgage bonds or lien notes set aside for that purpose, all money coming in on said certificates to be invested in said class of securities and held as a special fund. Mr. Venable moved that the bank issue such certificates of deposit to be known as mortgage certificates of deposit. His motion was seconded by Mr. Griffin and carried. Board adjourned." The plan adopted by the bank for the issue of these mortgage certificates was this: The bank would issue a certificate of this kind to a person who deposited money with the bank, and it would take from among the mortgage bonds or lien notes a note or bond and indorse upon it in stencil these words: "This bond (or note) is pledged as security for the series of mortgage certificates of deposit issued by the Daviess County Bank & Trust Company." The bond or note thus stamped was then placed in a box with the others so stamped, and an indorsement in stencil was made on the register of the bank opposite the entry of this bond or note similar to the indorsement stamped on it. The indorsements were not dated, and were not ordinarily signed by the bank or any officer of it. When a bond or note thus stamped or an interest coupon was paid, it was paid to the bank in the regular course of its business and delivered to the payor, and another bond or note belonging to the bank was taken from the notes or bonds of the bank, stamped as above, and placed among those previously stamped in the box kept for that purpose. At the time the bank failed it held bonds secured by mortgage of the par value of $206,066. It also held real estate notes to the amount of $23,084. On these mortgage bonds and real estate notes the holders of the mortgage certificates claimed a lien on $74,000 to secure their certificates which amounted to the sum of $73,463.44. These bonds and notes were in the box referred to with indorsements as stated at the time they came to the hands of the assignee, and that they were placed there at the time the mortgage certificates were issued or when other notes previously placed there were withdrawn is conceded. In other words, it is conceded that the bank in good faith undertook to secure these depositors in this way at the time they deposited their money with it; and the only question we are to determine is whether a valid lien may be thus created on notes and bonds to the prejudice of other creditors.

Section 1908, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 2102), is in these words: "Every voluntary alienation of or charge upon personal property, unless the actual possession, in good faith, accompanies the same, shall be void as to a purchaser without notice, or any creditor, prior to the lodging for record of such transfer or charge in the office of the county court for the county where the alienor or person creating the charge resides." Under this statute, it has been held in an unbroken line of decisions that an absolute sale of personal property is per se void as to the purchasers and creditors unless the possession of the property accompanies the title, and that a lien on the property can only be created by a writing recorded in the county clerk's office, where the owner retains possession. Enders v. Williams, 1 Metc. 346, and cases cited. In the case at bar the bank did not surrender possession of the notes and bonds put in the box to secure the mortgage certificates. These notes and bonds were not delivered to the holders of these certificates. If the maker of a note had a set-off against the bank, it was available against the note; but, if he had a set-off against the holder of a mortgage certificate, this could not have been asserted against the note in the hands of the bank and a payment to the holder of one of these certificates would have been no defense to an action by the bank on the note, if the bank had without notice of the payment, settled with the certificate holder. A pledge of personal property can only be created by actual or symbolic delivery of the property by the pledgor to the pledgee. If the property remains in the possession and under the control of the pledgor, the transaction falls within the statute, and is void as to creditors and purchasers. A bank has no greater rights than an individual, and to hold that an individual can create pocket liens upon his property in such a way as this that are valid against purchasers and creditors would be to nullify the statute and entirely defeat the legislative purpose in its enactment. It is said that the assignee for the benefit of the creditors simply stands in the shoes of his assignor, and that the arrangement in contest was good as between the certificate holders and the bank; but by section 84, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 396), if the assignor before making the deed of assignment shall have made a fraudulent transfer of his property, the property so fraudulently transferred vests in the assignee. The assignee holds the property for the benefit of the creditors and as their trustee. If the transfer is void as to the creditors whom he represents, it is void also as to him as their representative. A trustee may always assert the rights of his cestui que trust, and take such steps as are necessary to protect them in a court of equity. Practically the same question we have before us was before the Supreme Court of Louisiana in Succession of Lanaux, 46 La. Ann. 1086, 15 South. 708, 25 L. R. A. 580, and before the United States Supreme Court in Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. Ed. 779, and we concur in the reasoning of those opinions denying a lien to creditors attempted to be created between debtor and creditor by a private arrangement like this. See, also, Grand Avenue Bank v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 135 Mo. App. 366, 115 S. W. 1074.

It is insisted for the appellants that the bank held the bonds and notes as trustee for the holders of the mortgage certificates, and we are referred to a number of cases in which such trusts have been enforced as between trustee and cestui que trusts; but it will be seen from an examination of these cases that in none of them were the rights of creditors or purchasers involved. The arrangement here was valid as between the bank and the depositor if the bank had remained solvent, and the rights of other creditors were not involved; but it would entirely defeat the statute to say that a trust of this sort could be enforced against purchasers or creditors. The purpose of the statute was to declare inoperative and void such transactions as to purchasers and creditors.

We therefore conclude that the circuit court properly held that the holders of the mortgage certificates had no superior lien on the bonds and notes referred to.

Judgment affirmed.

LEWIS v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 108*)—LOSS OR DAMAGE TO GOODS—NATURE OF LIABILITY.

A common carrier is an insurer of freight delivered to it for carriage, and can only escape liability for loss or damage by showing it was caused by the act of God, or the public enemy, or by inherent defects in the goods.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 471-495; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

2. WAREHOUSEMEN (§ 24*)—NATURE OF LIABILITY.

A warehouseman is not an insurer of goods placed in his warehouse, and is only liable for such loss or damage thereto as is caused by his negligence for failure to exercise ordinary care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Warehousemen, Cent. Dig. §§ 48, 49, 51-54; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 114*)—DELIVERY OF GOODS—TIME FOR REMOVAL BY CONSIGNEE.

A consignee should have a reasonable time to remove goods after they have been placed in a carrier's warehouse at their destination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 608-620; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 84*) — TRANSPORTATION OF FREIGHT—DUTY AS TO CARRIAGE AND DELIVERY.

The duty of a carrier accepting freight for transportation does not end by merely carrying the goods in its cars to the point of destination, but it must deliver them at such place in or about its station as will enable the consignee to conveniently get them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-298; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 114*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LIABILITY FOR LOSS OR INJURY—TERMINATION THEREOF.

A carrier may keep goods in its cars or place them in its warehouse, but wherever it keeps them, except against loss or damage by act of God, or the public enemy, or by inherent defect, it insures their safety till the consignee has a reasonable time to remove them after their arrival, as the delivery contemplated is not fully performed till then.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 608-620; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 149½*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

In view of Const. § 196, forbidding a common carrier to contract for relief from its common-law liability, a common carrier cannot, by any stipulation in the contract or bill of lading, reduce its liability as an insurer of the safety of goods till the consignee has had a reasonable time to remove them after their arrival.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-653, 660-662; Dec. Dig. § 149½.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 114*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—REMOVAL BY CONSIGNEE — "REASONABLE TIME."

The period of reasonable time for the removal of goods begins when the consignee knows, or, in the exercise of reasonable diligence should know, that they have arrived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 608-620; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

8. CARRIERS (§ 136*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—ACTIONS FOR LOSS OR INJURY—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Reasonable time for removal of goods by a consignee, and reasonable diligence on his part to inform himself of their arrival, are in general questions for the jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Bell County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by R. J. Lewis against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company for loss of goods burned in defendant's warehouse. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jas. H. Jeffries and N. R. Patterson, for appellant. C. W. Metcalf, Benjamin D. Warfield, and Chas. H. Moorman, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The questions presented by this record are: When does the duty and liability of a common carrier of goods as a carrier cease upon the arrival of the goods at the point of destination, and when does its duty and liability as a warehouseman begin?

It is agreed that there was shipped to the appellant Lewis over the road of the appellee

company to Pineville, Ky., three packages of goods that were in its warehouse at Pineville on the night of September 16th, when the building and its contents, including this freight, was destroyed by fire; that the fire commenced at a late hour on the night of the 16th, or an early hour on the morning of the 17th, and was not caused either directly or indirectly by the negligence, fraud, or wrongdoing of the company or any of its agents, servants, or employes; that at the time of the fire, and for some five years prior thereto, Lewis was engaged in selling goods as a merchant at a point some 25 miles distant by the nearest traveled route from Pineville; that during this time all of the goods and merchandise that he sold was delivered to him by the company at its Pineville station, and this fact was known to its agent at Pineville, who also knew where Lewis lived and his postoffice address; that two of the packages of merchandise destroyed reached Pineville on the 13th of September, and were placed in the company's warehouse on that day, and the other package destroyed was placed in the warehouse at noon on September 16th; that neither Lewis nor any one for him made inquiry about or called at the warehouse for the goods, nor was any notice of the arrival of the goods or any of them sent or given by mail or otherwise to Lewis, and he did not at the time of the fire have any knowledge or notice that the goods or any of them were in the warehouse. It is further agreed that, on account of the heavy traffic on the road, it was impossible for Lewis to know with reasonable certainty when the goods which were shipped from distant points would reach Pineville, and that the goods in question were transported without unreasonable delay, although it appears that one shipment that left Louisville on August 28th did not reach Pineville until September 13th, while another package that left Louisville on September 14th reached Pineville on September 16th, and the package that was sent from Knoxville, which is only about half the distance from Pineville that Louisville is, did not arrive at Pineville until September 13th, although it was shipped on September 6th. Upon these facts the trial court held as matter of law that the company was not liable.

There is really no contrariety of opinion as to the difference between the liability of a common carrier and the liability of a warehouseman; it being everywhere agreed that a common carrier is an insurer of the freight delivered to it for carriage, and can only escape liability for loss or damage to the goods by showing that the loss or damage was caused by the act of God, or the public enemy, or by inherent defects in the goods. It is equally as well established that a warehouseman is not an insurer of goods placed in his warehouse, and is only liable for such loss or damage to the goods as is caused by his negligence or failure to exercise ordinary care.

From these rules it will be seen that, if the goods in controversy were in the custody of the company as a common carrier at the time of their destruction, it would nevertheless be liable for their value; while, if they were in its custody as a warehouseman, it would not be liable, as the loss was not occasioned by its fault or negligence. Although the liability of a carrier and that of a warehouseman is well defined, and the distinction between them in this respect clearly pointed out in all the authorities, there is wide and irreconcilable conflict concerning when the liability of a common carrier as a common carrier ceases, and its liability as a warehouseman begins. In Massachusetts and other states the rule is that when the carrier has delivered the goods at the point of destination, removed them from its cars and placed them in its warehouse, its liability as a carrier immediately ceases, and thereafter it holds the goods as a warehouseman. In New Hampshire and other jurisdictions the rule is that the carrier continues liable as a carrier after the goods have reached their destination and have been placed in the warehouse, and for a reasonable time thereafter, in which time the consignee must remove them or otherwise the carrier will hold them as a warehouseman. While the Supreme Court of New York and other state courts of last resort hold that unless the consignee is present when the goods arrive, he must be notified of their arrival and have a reasonable time after notice in which to remove them before the liability of the carrier as a carrier ceases. Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) §§ 701, 710; Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) § 1527; note to Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Peterson, 97 Am. St. Rep. 76; East Tenn., etc., R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 699, 20 S. W. 312, 17 L. R. A. 691, 30 Am. St. Rep. 902. In this state we have no statute on the subject, but the question we are considering has been before this court in three cases. In Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Mahan, 8 Bush, 184, and Wald & Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 92 Ky. 645, 18 S. W. 850, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 850, the point involved was what constituted a reasonable time in which a passenger might remove from the depot the baggage that came on the train with him. In Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Cleveland, 2 Bush, 468, the question presented was in many respects like the one now before us, and the court in delivering the opinion followed what may be called the New Hampshire rule. In that case suit was brought to recover the value of goods shipped by freight and destroyed by fire on the night of April 26th, while they were in the warehouse of the carrier at the place of destination. The goods in the ordinary course of transportation should have arrived on the 20th, but, on account of delays, they did not arrive until the evening of the 25th; and the owner inquired at the warehouse for them on each day from the 20th to and including the morning of the 25th. On the morning of the 28th a notice to the owner of the fact that his goods had arrived, was deposited in the post office, but not received. In the course of the opinion the court said: "Whether the responsibility of the company, after the arrival and storage of the goods in Detroit, was that devolved by law on carriers or only that of depositaries, it was not necessary in our opinion that the company should either give notice of the arrival of the goods or make actual delivery of them, as is now done by express companies, in order that the liability of carriers should cease after reasonable time had elapsed for the owner to attend and remove the goods. * * * But the liability of railroad corporations as common carriers for goods transported on their railroads continues until the goods are ready to be delivered at their place of destination, and the owner or consignee has had reasonable opportunity of receiving and removing them. * * * What such reasonable time should be must in the nature of the case when not provided for by express contract depend on the character of the freight, the distance to which it is to be carried, and the capacity and business of the road, with such other circumstances as would serve to notify the consignee of the probable time when the goods would reach their destination, so that, with proper watchfulness, he might receive them, and thus terminate the carrier's responsibility as soon as practicable." Upon the facts stated, the court held that the owner did not have a reasonable time in which to remove the goods after their arrival, and that the carrier at the time of their destruction was holding them as a carrier and hence liable. The liability was put upon the ground that the owner had exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain when the goods would arrive, and, as their arrival was delayed several days after the time when they should have reached their destination, the owner was not obliged to continue his inquiries as to when they would come, and the notice was not sufficient to enable him by reasonable diligence to remove the goods during the day on which the notice was sent.

Although disposed towards the view that the carrier should give notice if it desires to be relieved of its duty as a carrier, yet we are not fully prepared to overrule the Cleveland Case on this point. This being so, the only question left open is the one relating to reasonable time in which to remove the goods. That the consignee should have such time after the goods have been placed in the warehouse we have no doubt. When a carrier accepts freight for transportation, its duty as a carrier does not end by merely carrying the goods in its cars to the point of destination. It must deliver as well as carry, although by this we do not mean that it must deliver them as express companies do to the home or place of business of the consignee, but it must deliver them at such place in or about its station as will enable the consignee to conveniently get them. It may, if it desires, keep them in its cars or place them in its warehouse, but, wherever it keeps them, it insures their safety except against the causes mentioned until the consignee has reasonable time to remove them, as the delivery contemplated is not fully performed until the consignee has had this time after the arrival of the goods in which to remove them. And this is true, although the bill of lading or contract for carriage, as in this case, provides "property shall be at the risk of the owner from the time of its arrival at destination whether in the vessel, car, depot or place of delivery; if not taken possession of and removed by the party entitled thereto within twenty-four hours thereafter, shall be subject to a reasonable charge for storage, or at the option of the carrier may be removed or otherwise stored at the owner's risk and cost," as neither this nor any other stipulation in the contract or bill of lading will be allowed to reduce the liability of the carrier below what it was at common law. Our Constitution (section 196) provides in part that "no common carrier shall be permitted to contract for relief from its common-law liability"; and, under the common law, the duty and liability of the common carrier was not terminated until the goods after the carriage were delivered to the consignee. 2 Kent, Com. 604; Moses v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 24 N. H. 71, 55 Am. Dec. 222. But, as it is not deemed reasonable to require a railway carrier of freight to deliver the goods to the consignee at his residence or place of business, the rule of the common law in the interest of and for the convenience of this class of carriers has been modified, and now it is only required that the delivery shall be at the point of destination, and at this place the consignee must come for and remove his goods within a reasonable time after their arrival during which time the common-law liability of the carrier continues.

The question then comes up: What is a reasonable time? How is it to be determined? Is it to be decided by the court as a matter of law or by the jury as a matter of fact? Some courts hold that a reasonable time for the consignee to remove the goods is not to be measured by any peculiar circumstances in his own condition or situation rendering it necessary for his own convenience and accommodation that he should have a longer time or better opportunity than if he resided in the vicinity of the warehouse and was prepared with the means and facilities for taking the goods away; or, to put it in another way, a reasonable time is such time as will enable one living in the vicinity of the place of delivery in the ordinary course of business and in the usual hours of business to remove the goods. Moses v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 32 N. H. 523, 64 Am. Dec. 381; L. L. & G. R. Co. v. Maris, 16 Kan. 333; Wood v. Crocker, 19

Wis. 363, 86 Am. Dec. 773; United Fruit Co. v. New York Transportation Co., 104 Md. 567, 65 Atl. 415, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240, 10 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 437; Columbus R. Co. v. Luden, 89 Ala. 612, 7 South. 471; 5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 263-274; 6 Cyc. 445. It must be conceded that this rule has at least the merit of easy application, and that its adoption would solve the question of what is a reasonable time with little difficulty. Under it the only issue of fact left open would be the time of day the goods arrived at the station, as, if they arrived in time to remove them on that day in the usual hours of business, then they must be removed on that day or afterwards the carrier would hold them as a warehouseman; and so, if they arrived in the night, they must be removed in the hours of business on the following day. And it is manifest that, if this rule should be applied to the case before us, the carrier would be relieved of responsibility, even as to the package of goods that arrived at noon on the 16th, as a person living in the vicinity of the depot could have removed this package as well as the ones that came on the 13th, during the afternoon of the 16th. But we do not feel disposed to follow the rule announced. Nor was it observed in the Cleveland Case, supra. There the goods, although they arrived on the 25th, were not destroyed until the night of the 26th, and yet, notwithstanding the fact that the consignee had the entire day of the 26th in which to remove them, the carrier was held liable as a carrier. In our opinion the true test of what is a reasonable time depends, not on whether the consignee lives in the vicinity of the station, or whether he could remove the goods in the usual hours of business on the day of their arrival, but on the question whether or not he exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain when the goods would or did arrive, and reasonable diligence in their removal, after he received, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have received notice of their arrival. If the consignee is present, or if he has notice of the time of the arrival of his goods, or if he is notified by the consignee that his goods have been shipped on a certain day, and the train upon which they are shipped arrives on schedule time, he should remove them within a reasonable time thereafter, and, if he fails to do so, the liability of the carrier will be reduced to that of a warehouseman. On the other hand, if he is not present, and has no notice of when they arrive, or there is delay in the transportation of the goods, he should exercise reasonable diligence to inform himself of their arrival and have a reasonable time thereafter to remove them. In other words, the period at which the reasonable time for removal begins is when the consignee knows or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should know that his goods have arrived.

exercise reasonable diligence to inform himself of the arrival of the goods, and, if he wishes to hold the carrier liable as a carrier, must remove them within a reasonable time thereafter, whether it be a day or a week. What is reasonable diligence being, like reasonable time, a question of fact varying with each case, it is manifest that no fixed rule can be laid down to measure reasonable time or reasonable diligence. What would be reasonable in one instance would be unreasonable in another, and so in these particulars each case must be adjudged upon the facts it presents. If the consignee is to have a reasonable time in which to remove the goods, then it is not just that this should be measured by his proximity to the depot, or his ability to remove the goods on the day of their arrival. All consignees should be treated alike, no matter whether they live close to or far from the depot. If the consignee has exercised reasonable diligence in ascertaining when his goods arrived and in removing them, then he has removed them in a reasonable time. If he has not exercised reasonable diligence in finding out when his goods have or should have arrived, and in removing them, he has not removed them in a reasonable time. This, notwithstanding the respect we have for the courts that define reasonable time in the manner before stated, is, we submit, the true rule, and that the other definition is both illogical and unsound. How can it be said that a consignee who does not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care cannot know, that his goods had arrived, has had a reasonable time to remove them? How can it be said that a person has failed to do a thing within a reasonable time when he has no notice that he will be required to do it? It would be just as well to abolish the rule of reasonable time as to say that the time when reasonable time commences to run is the time when the consignee had not and could not in the exercise of reasonable diligence know of its beginning. The test of reasonable time should not be made to turn on whether or not the consignee might remove them on the day of their arrival if he can do this in the business hours of that day. To illustrate, under this rule if a box of goods arrived at noon, and the warehouse was open in the afternoon, the consignee, if present, or notified that his goods would be sent on the train that arrived at noon, and the train reached the station on schedule time, would have a reasonable time in the business hours of that day to remove them. But, let us suppose that he is not present, and has no notice that his goods have arrived, or are expected to arrive, how can it be said that he has had a reasonable time to remove them on the day of their arrival, when he does not and by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could not learn of their arrival until the following day or the day thereafter? Or let us suppose that the consignee has notice that his goods have been shipped at a certain time, and that in the ordinary course will reach their destination at a certain hour, and the consignee is at the station when the train is due, but it is delayed and does not come until the next day or the day following, must the consignee wait until its arrival? Or let us suppose that the goods in the course of shipment are in some way delayed and do not come for a week, must he wait in attendance at the depot? These examples, which are of common occurrence, illustrate that the rule requiring the goods to be removed on the day of their arrival, if this can be done in the usual business hours, is not the proper test of what constitutes a reasonable time in which the consignee must remove his goods after their arrival. Nor are we wanting in authority for the views we have expressed as to what constitutes reasonable time. In Redfield on the Law of Railways (6th Ed.) § 175, the learned author, speaking upon this point, says: "Upon principle it seems more reasonable to conclude that the responsibility does not terminate until the owner or consignee, by watchfulness, has had, or might have had, an opportunity to remove them. * * * There is then no very good reason, as it seems to us, why the responsibility of the carrier should not continue until the owner or consignee by the use of diligence might have removed the goods. The warehousing seems to be with that intent, and for that purpose. And, if we assume, as we must, we think that there is no obligation upon railway carriers to give notice of the arrival of the goods, there does still seem to be reason and justice in giving the consignee time and opportunity to remove the goods by the exercise of the proper watchfulness, before the responsibility of the carrier ends." We appreciate the fact that the rule we have announced is open to objection on account of its uncertainty and the difficulty of its application; but it is not more uncertain or difficult of application than any other matter involving like questions of fact. The decisions of many of the most important business affairs that come before the courts turn upon the question of what is reasonable time, and what is reasonable diligence. These two factors enter into cases that come up every day. Nor does the rule impose any particular hardship on the carrier, as it can, by giving notice to the consignee of the arrival of his goods, reduce its liability to that of a warehouseman, if the consignee within a reasonable time after the reception of the notice does not remove them. We may also add that what is reasonable time and reasonable diligence is, except in rare cases, a question for the jury, although it might become, as any other question of fact about which there was no dispute, an issue to be decided by the court.

In conformity with these views, the court should on another trial of the case submit the issues of fact to a jury, and instruct them in substance that if they believe from the evidence that Lewis knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known, when his goods arrived, they should find for the railroad company if he failed to remove them from the warehouse within a reasonable time after he knew or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known of their arrival. But if he did not, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have known the time of the arrival of the goods, and did not fail to remove them within a reasonable time after he so knew or could have known, they should find for Lewis.

In the trial each party should be permitted to introduce all pertinent evidence throwing light upon the question of whether or not Lewis exercised reasonable diligence, and failed to remove the goods in a reasonable time.

The judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to grant appellant a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

CALOR OIL & GAS CO. v. FRANZELL et al. (Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 4, 1909.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 93*)—COMPENSATION—GROUNDS—RIGHT OF WAY FOR PIPE LINE.

The owner of land sought to be condemned by a gas company for a pipe line may not add to the value of the property to be taken the damages arising from the supposed exhaustion of a gas reservoir under his property by the use which the gas company intends to make of its gas wells, for the destruction of the gas reservoir will not arise from the mere fact that the pipe line is laid through his land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 237, 238; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 238*)—ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES—BURDEN OF PROOF.

On appeal in condemnation proceedings, the condemnor has the burden of proof, and is entitled to the concluding argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 136*)—MEASURE OF COMPENSATION—LAND FOR PIPE LINE.

The measure of compensation for the right to lay and maintain a pipe line along a railroad right of way across the owner's land is, in the absence of evidence that the strip has peculiar adaptability for a pipe line, the fair market value of the property at a fair and voluntary sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 363-366; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 203*)—ASSESSMENT OF COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in proceedings to condemn a right of way for a pipe line, the strip sought to be taken had no peculiar adaptability for a pipe line, evidence of the value of the land, based on any supposedly peculiar adaptability for pipe line purposes, was inadmissible.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Meade County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Condemnation proceedings by the Calor Oil & Gas Company against Nicholas Franzell and others. From a judgment awarding compensation, petitioner appeals, and defendants file cross-appeal. Affirmed on cross-appeal, and reversed and remanded on original appeal.

L. A. Faurest and E. P. Humphrey, for appellant. J. W. Lewis, J. M. Richardson, Matt O'Doherty, and McQuown & Beckham, for appellees.

BARKER, J. This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion upon the first is to be found in 128 Ky. 715, 109 S. W. 328, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 98. The question involved on this appeal is whether or not the verdict fixing the value of the piece of property sought to be condemned at $700 is or not excessive. We shall not undertake to restate the facts of this case. They are minutely set forth in the opinion on the first appeal, and we refer to that for a more complete statement of them and of the questions heretofore adjudicated. When the case returned to the lower court for another trial consistent with the opinion on the first appeal, there was really but one question to be determined—the value of the strip of ground sought to be condemned. All others had been adjudicated. There is, however, now a new question arising on the cross-appeal, which will be discussed further along.

We decided on the first appeal that the strip of land sought to be condemned had no peculiar adaptability for a pipe line which would bring it within the principle enunciated in Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206, and we said that the measure of damages was what the property would bring at a fair, voluntary sale, where the seller was not obliged to part with his property and the buyer was not forced to purchase it. The owner of the ground had no right to add to the value of the property sought to be condemned the damages arising from the supposed exhaustion of the gas reservoir under his property by the use which the condemning corporation intends to make of its gas wells in Meade county. We held on the first appeal that the Calor Oil & Gas Company had a right to make a legitimate use of the gas flowing from its wells, and if in so using them the gas field as a whole was exhausted, this was a loss which all the parties interested would suffer in common. The destruction of Franzell's reservoir of gas, supposed to be under his farm, will not arise from the fact that the pipe is laid through his land, and his injury as to this will be the same whether the pipe line runs over his farm or over the farm of another; and it cannot be maintained that he has a right to add to the value of the land taken for the purpose of laying the pipe the damages arising from the supposed destruction of his gas reservoir by the use of which the Calor Oil & Gas Company proposes to make of its wells in Meade county. If Franzell would have no cause of action against the Calor Oil & Gas Company for the destruction of his reservoir if the pipe line did not run over his land, the fact that it does so will not give him a cause of action. This proposition is so plain that it needs no further elucidation, nor does it need any citation of authority to sustain it.

The court properly held that the burden of proof was upon the condemnor, and awarded it the concluding argument. Shelbyville & Eminence Turnpike Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., 51 S. W. 805, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 548. In the case cited it was held that, where both parties file exceptions to the amount awarded by the viewers or commissioners, the burden of proof is upon the condemning company.

The strip of ground sought to be condemned in this case is about an acre of land. It is a part of the right of way of the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railroad, which runs through the Franzell farm. The railroad owns a perpetual and exclusive right of way through the farm, and the strip of ground in question is within this easement, and is 1,450 feet long by 27 feet wide. In this strip a pipe line 10 inches in diameter is to be buried. The jury awarded the owner of the land $700 as damages. The commissioners appointed to assess the damages, in their report, fixed it at $21.75. Franzell himself testified that his land was worth $40 an acre. The additional servitude placed upon one acre of the right of way of the railroad cannot be worth as much as an acre of the land with no easement upon it; and yet the jury awarded the owner $700 for an additional servitude on one acre, when the owner would have sold it at $40 without any easement at all upon it. The amount assessed is flagrantly excessive, and the judgment will have to be reversed for this reason.

Upon another trial the court will not permit any questions as to the value of the land based upon any supposedly peculiar adaptability for pipe line purposes, as we decided on the former appeal that it has no such peculiar adaptability. Nor will counsel be permitted to interrogate witnesses concerning the lamp black factory, or any other extraneous question. The instruction given by the court to the jury is in accord with the principles enunciated on the first appeal, and will be given on another trial as upon the first.

For these reasons, the judgment is affirmed on the cross-appeal, and reversed on the original appeal, for proceedings consistent herewith.

SEELBACH HOTEL CO. v. COMMON-WEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 11, 1909.)
INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 163*)—SUNDAY SALES—INNKEEPERS.

An innkeeper, not being exempt from Ky. St. § 1304 (Russell's St. § 3631), by which no one can sell intoxicating liquors without a license, violates section 1303 (section 3630), declaring it an offense to sell such liquor on Sunday, by serving it with a Sunday meal, though an innkeeper's ordinary business is one of necessity within Sunday closing acts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 179; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Criminal Division.

"To be officially reported."

The Seelbach Hotel Company appeals from a conviction. Affirmed.

Gibson, Marshall & Gibson and Kohn, Baird, Sloss & Kohn, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

O'REAR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction against appellant in a penal action instituted for four alleged violations of section 1303, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 3630), which section reads as follows: "Any person who shall, on Sunday, keep open a barroom or other place for the sale of liquors, or who shall sell or otherwise dispose of such liquors, or any of them on Sunday, shall be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars for each offense." The case was submitted and decided in the circuit court upon an agreed state of facts, disclosing: That the appellant was at the time mentioned in the petition (on a Sunday) a duly licensed hotel and inn keeper in the city of Louisville, and operating its hotel in good faith, having all the essentials and conveniences to enable it to do so. That appellant also had a bar attached to its hotel, but that on the occasions named its bar was closed. That appellant furnished a guest at its hotel, who was a citizen of Louisville and came to the hotel for his dinner, a quart of champagne as a part of his dinner, partaken of by him and his friends who accompanied him; to another guest, who was a traveling salesman from New York, a cock-tail and a pint of white wine as part of his dinner; to another guest, who was then living in the hotel, as part of his dinner, a pint of claret; to another guest, then living in the hotel as a guest, as a part of his supper, a mug of beer. That the liquors were ordered by the guests as parts of their meals, and were served to them in good faith as parts of their entertainment, "and that said persons, according to their mode of living, manner, and habits, required and generally took for and as part of their meals as a beverage liquors, and they had acquired the habit of drinking, instead of coffee or tea, such liquors with their meals, and it was necessary for them to have the same for their comfort and habits." It was further agreed that such habits and customs existed with a large number of people who patronized that hotel, became its guests, and took their meals therein. This additional statement was incorporated in the stipulation of facts: "That there has been a statute in this state, differing in character, forbidding labor and doing of business on the Lord's Day, or Sunday, for more than 100 years, and that under all the statutes in this state, during all of said time, hotels and innkeepers have been permitted to serve their guests with liquors at their meals, and it was never attempted to enforce any statute against them, exercising such rights, although several statutes of this state on this subject have been enforced at various times that they never have been considered as applicable to hotels and innkeepers and never have been sought to be enforced against them until recently within a year or 18 months past."

That the sale of intoxicating liquors is a subject for the state's police regulation is no longer an open question. Anderson v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 485. In this state no person has the right to sell such liquors at all as a matter of right, nor until they shall have been granted a license by the state to do so. Section 1304, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 3631). This regulation applies as well to innkeepers as to other people. If the state may regulate the sale, and to that end may require a license to be obtained by the vendor as a prerequisite to his engaging in the business, it is equally competent for the state to regulate the times during which the privilege secured by the license may be exercised, and the places where liquors may be sold, and the persons to whom they may not be sold. It is probably true that the reason Sunday is excepted from the times when liquors may be sold in this state was in deference to the religious views of a vast number of people; but whether that was the reason, or not, or whether it was to enforce a day of rest and quiet as tending to enhance public health and peace, or whatever the reason, it was competent for the Legislature to prohibit the sale on that day in the exercise of the police power of the state. For that matter it was equally competent to have prohibited the sale on Monday, or Saturday, or election days, as is done (section 1575, Ky. St. [Russell's St. § 3430]), or to require the selling to cease at midnight of every day (McNulty v. Toof, 116 Ky. 202, 75 S. W. 258, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 430). Sales to minors are forbidden (section 1306, Ky. St. [Russell's St. § 3633]), as are sales to inebriates (section 1307 [section 3634]). Could it be successfully urged that these provisions against selling to minors and inebriates are not applicable to tavern keepers? In this state local option may be voted by any town, county, or precinct. Section 61, Const. If such territory votes "dry," and if by the terms of the vote druggists are included, then no one can sell liquors in such territory by retail. Such is the unqualified prohibition of the statute. Section 2557a, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 3636). In none of these statutes are innkeepers excepted. Wholesale dealers selling their own product at place of manufacture by wholesale and physicians are expressly excepted. If the Legislature had intended to except others, they would have been named.

It is idle to argue that as some people habitually drink wines, beer, or other liquors with their meals, instead of coffee or tea, the innkeeper must provide these guests with what they demand. Unless the innkeeper is licensed to sell liquors, he cannot lawfully do it, no matter what the tastes or habits of his guests may be; and, if his license does not permit him to sell liquors on Sunday (and it does not), it is as unlawful for him to do so as it would be to sell them on Monday without any license. Appellant's contention is, in short, that innkeepers are, by reason of the customary requirements of their calling, excepted from the operation of the Sunday statute (section 1303, supra), because their guests are themselves not prohibited from drinking liquors at their own tables on Sunday; but it does not follow. Granted that a man may drink what he pleases at his own table on Sunday, nevertheless sales to him of liquors on that day are prohibited. Whether he buys from the bar, or the merchant, or the druggist, or the tavern, the sale is forbidden. The drinking is not. When the tavern keeper sells his guest a mug of beer on Sunday, the act is as clearly within the prohibition of the letter and terms of the statute as if the sale had been by the barkeeper.

Nor do we regard the fact set out in the stipulation as to the construction of the Sunday closing statute for the past hundred years of any significance in this case. If one's ordinary business is a necessity (which a tavern keeper's is), he is not within such statute. If his business is not prohibited, the statute would not apply at all. For example, some sorts of traveling on Sunday are regarded as necessary. On that ground the operation of a railroad train was allowed as not contravening the Sunday closing statute. Commonwealth v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 80 Ky. 298, 44 Am. Rep. 475. But if the railroad company carried passengers upon whom there was no urgency for going on that day, it would not be liable under the statute. If innkeepers are, by virtue of their calling and the habits and wants of their customers, bound to furnish their guests food and drink as called for, and on that ground, and that the usage and customs of hospitality here and abroad in the past have included the furnishing of intoxicating drinks as part of the entertainment of hotel guests, exceptions by implication to the sweeping prohibition of our liquor statutes, then, on the same ground, it would follow that they are excepted from the statutes requiring license to liquor sellers, and from the statutes forbidding sales to minors (who may also be guests at inns), and that in local-option territory they would be excepted from the operation of the vote, and that dining-car companies, pullman-car companies, restaurants, cafés, lunch counters, and all places where eating is provided, drinking also might be provided, regardless of license, Sunday closing, or any other regulation. We find no warrant for such sweeping construction. The Legislature did not intend to except hotel keepers from the operation of the statutes aimed to stop the liquor traffic for one day in seven. At least no such intention is manifested.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. CRUTCHER. (Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—INJURIES—ACTION—JURY QUESTION—GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

In a switchman's action for injuries caused by being thrown from a switch engine cab, whether plaintiff was thrown from the engine by the gross negligence of the engineer in running it at a dangerous rate of speed held for the jury.

2. RELEASE (§§ 16, 17*)—VALIDITY—MISTAKE.

If an injured servant signed a release of a claim for injuries believing it to be a receipt for wages due him, and the question of a settlement was not mentioned at the time, the release was invalid as being obtained by fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. §§ 31, 32; Dec. Dig. §§ 16, 17.*]

3. RELEASE (§ 58*)—JURY QUESTION—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the testimony was conflicting as to whether a release was signed under the belief that it was a receipt for wages, as claimed by one party thereto, the question was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. §§ 109-114; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

4. RELEASE (§ 55*)—ACTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A written release of all claims for injuries, signed by plaintiff, made out a prima facie defense when introduced in a personal injury action, and the burden was on plaintiff to avoid the release by showing its invalidity.

6. RELEASE (§ 59*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENT—CONCRETE INSTRUCTIONS.

In a switchman's action for injuries by being thrown from a switch engine cab, in which defendant offered a release, which plaintiff claimed was signed by him under the belief that it was a receipt for wages, an instruction that if the jury believed the paper relied on by defendant as a release was executed by the parties, each understanding that it was a release of all of plaintiff's claims against defendant on account of the injury, they should find for defendant, but, if they believed that it was executed by the parties under a mutual understanding that it was for the time lost by plaintiff for 12 days on account of his injuries, the jury should regard the paper as a release, was not sufficiently concrete, and the court should have instructed, in connection with an instruction authorizing a recovery if plaintiff was thrown from the engine by the gross negligence of defendant's engineer, that plaintiff could recover if the jury believed that the paper read in evidence as the release was executed upon the mutual understanding of both plaintiff and defendant that it was for time lost by the plaintiff for 12 days on account of his having been injured, and that plaintiff executed the release by mistake, or fraud of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 295*)—INJURIES—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—CONCRETE INSTRUCTIONS.

In a switchman's action for injuries by being thrown from a switch engine cab, where plaintiff claimed that the accident was caused by the swaying of the engine while it was run at a dangerous speed, an instruction that when plaintiff entered defendant's service he assumed all the risks ordinarily incident to his employment, and, if the injury received by him was in his ordinary employment and in the ordinary operation of the engine he was on, the jury should find for defendant, was not sufficiently concrete, and the court should have instructed that when plaintiff entered defendant's service he assumed all risks ordinarily incident to the business conducted with ordinary care, including the danger from operating the engine on which plaintiff was when injured, unless the engineer was guilty of gross negligence in running it at a dangerous rate of speed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1168-1179; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 296*)—INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—CONCRETE INSTRUCTIONS.

In a switchman's action for injuries by being thrown from an engine cab, where defendant claimed that the engine was running at an ordinary rate of speed, and plaintiff was starting to get off when he fell and his foot turned on a lump of coal, but plaintiff claimed that he was thrown out by the swaying motion of the engine, which was running at a high speed, an instruction that, though defendant's agents were negligent, yet, if plaintiff was himself negligent, and such negligence, if any, contributed to the injury, which would not have occurred without it, the jury should find for defendant, was not sufficiently concrete upon the issues, and the court should have instructed that if plaintiff's fall was caused by his negligently undertaking to step from the engine when it was running at a dangerous speed, or by stepping upon a lump of coal and losing his balance, and not by the speed of the engine, or if he failed to exercise such care for his own safety as a person of ordinary prudence similarly situated would usually exercise, and but for which omission he would not have been injured, the jury should find for defendant.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Franklin County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Justus Crutcher against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

McQuown & Beckham, Chas. H. Moorman, and Benjamin D. Warfield, for appellant. Leslie W. Morris, Wm. Lindsay, and T. L. Edelen, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Justus Crutcher was a switchman in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company in its yard at Paris, Ky. The crew to which he belonged used an engine known as "No. 603." It was a road engine, and had been converted into what is known as a "yard engine." When used as a road engine it had three driving wheels on each side, and a truck composed of four small wheels supporting the front of the engine. To change it from a road engine to a yard engine, the pilot was taken off, a step being put in its place, and the truck of four small wheels was removed. These small wheels served to steady the engine when running, and, to compensate for taking them out, the position of the boiler was changed to balance the machinery upon the three pairs of driving wheels so as to steady it for use in the yards. In January, 1908, the crew were going with the engine up in the yard to move a car, Crutcher being in the cab of the engine. As to what happened the proof is conflicting. The proof for him is to the effect: That the attempt to steady the engine had been unsuccessful. That it rocked as it went to such an extent that it had acquired the name "Ocean Wave," and this was known to all of them. That the engineer, as they were going up after this car, being in a hurry to get out of the way of a train that was about due, was running about 15 or 20 miles an hour. This caused the engine to oscillate violently, and by reason of this oscillation Crutcher was thrown from the cab. He caught the handhold as he was thrown out, which caused him to swing around with great violence against the step, which struck him in the side, causing violent hemorrhages from the lungs, and by reason of his injuries his capacity to earn money was practically destroyed. The proof for the defendant is to the effect that the engine was running only at its ordinary rate of speed at 4 or 5 miles an hour, that Crutcher started to get down off the engine for the purpose of throwing the switch while the engine was in motion, and that as he stepped his foot turned on a lump of coal, and he lost his balance and fell for this reason. After he had been laid up for 12 days with his injuries, and when they were not regarded as serious, as they afterward appeared, the defendant paid him $28.80, and he executed to it a release of all claims on account of his injuries. Afterwards he brought this suit to recover damages, and the defendant pleaded the written release in bar of a recovery. It also traversed the allegations of the petition and pleaded contributory negligence. A reply was filed by him, and the issue was made up. The case was submitted to a jury, who found a verdict for him in the sum of $6,000, and the defendant appeals.

The court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant. If this engine wobbled as much as the proof for the plaintiff tends to show when run over 6 miles an hour, there was evidence of gross negligence on the part of the engineer in running it 15 or 20 miles an hour; and, if by reason of this dangerous speed Crutcher was thrown from the engine, the question of gross negligence should be submitted to the jury.

Crutcher was making $2.40 a day. He had been unable to work for 12 days, and he was paid $28.80. This he testified was paid him for his lost time, and that the question of a settlement for his injuries was not mentioned. He signed the paper in ignorance of its being a release, and believing it to be simply a receipt for his wages. If his evidence was true, the settlement was obtained by fraud or mistake, and this question was for the jury.

The court, at the conclusion of all the evidence, gave the jury these instructions: "Instruction No. 1. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured on January 11, 1906, by the gross negligence of the defendant's engineer in the operation of engine No. 608, in the yards at Paris, by which negligence he, the plaintiff, was thrown from the said engine, injuring him, then they will find for the plaintiff such sum as will compensate him for his pain and mental anguish, if any, which he has heretofore suffered, and which from the evidence it is reasonably certain that he will hereafter suffer, if any, for the impairment of his power to earn money, if any, not exceeding in all $10,000, and, unless they so believe, they will find for the defendant. Instruction No. 2. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the paper relied on by the defendant as a release was executed both by the plaintiff and the defendant, each understanding and agreeing that the said paper was a release for all claims which the plaintiff had or might have against the defendant on account of the injury received by the plaintiff, then the jury are instructed to find for the defendant; but, if they believe that the paper produced in evidence was signed and executed both by plaintiff and defendant with the mutual understanding that it was for the time lost by the plaintiff for 12 days on account of his having received the injury complained of, then the jury shall not regard the paper as a release of all claims by the plaintiff against the defendant, but it shall be wholly disregarded by them. Instruction No. 3. The court instructs the jury that, when the plaintiff entered the services of the defendant, he assumed all the risks which are ordinarily incident to his employment, and if the jury believe that the injury received by the plaintiff was received in the ordinary employment of the plaintiff by the defendant, and in the ordinary operation of engine No. 608, then they ought to find for the defendant. Instruction No. 4. Even though the jury may believe that the defendant, by its agents and servants then in charge of the engine mentioned herein, was careless and negligent, yet, if they further believe that the plaintiff himself was careless and negligent, and that such carelessness and negligence on his part, if any, contributed to the injury received by him, but for which contributory negligence on his part, if there was any, the injury would not have been received, then the jury ought to find for the defendant." The defendant, among others, asked this instruction: "The court instructs the jury that if they shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, Crutcher, while riding on defendant's engine, leaped or stepped from said engine while it was in motion, and thereby received the injury complained of, the jury should find for the defendant."

The written release barred the plaintiff's action unless the evidence offered by the plaintiff was sufficient to relieve him from it. It made out prima facie a defense for the defendant. The instructions do not so present the matter. The defendant was not required to offer any evidence except the writing to make out its defense. The burden was on the plaintiff to avoid the writing, and the instructions of the court should be so framed as to show this. Another objection to the instructions is that they do not present to the jury in a sufficiently concrete form the plaintiff's case or the defendant's defense. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. King (Ky.) 115 S. W. 196.

In lieu of instructions No. 1 and No. 2, the court should have told the jury that if they believed from the evidence that, by the gross negligence of the engineer in the operation of the engine at a high and dangerous rate of speed, the plaintiff was thrown from the engine and injured, and if they further believe from the evidence that the paper read in evidence as a release was executed upon the mutual understanding of both the plaintiff and the defendant that it was for the time lost by the plaintiff for 12 days on account of his having been injured, and that the plaintiff executed the release by mistake, or by fraud of the defendant, then they should find for the plaintiff such sum as would compensate him for the pain of body and mind, if any, which he has heretofore suffered, or which it is reasonably certain he will thereafter suffer, if any, and of the impairment of his power to earn money, if any, resulting directly and proximately from his said injury, not exceeding in all $10,000, and unless they so believe they will find for the defendant.

In lieu of instruction No. 3, the court should have told the jury that when the plaintiff entered the service of the defendant he assumed all the risks which were ordinarily incident to the business conducted with ordinary care, including the danger from the operation of engine No. 603, unless the engineer was guilty of gross negligence in running it at a high and dangerous rate of speed as set out in No. 1.

In lieu of instruction No. 4, the court should have told the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, Crutcher, while riding on the engine, negligently undertook to leap or step from it when it was running at a rapid and dangerous rate of speed, or if he stepped upon a lump of coal, and his foot slipped, and he thus lost his balance, and this, and not the speed of the engine, was the proximate cause of his fall, or if while riding on the engine he failed to exercise such care for his own safety as a person of ordinary prudence situated as he was would usually exercise, and but for this would not have been injured, then, in any of these events, they should find for the defendant.

We see no other error in the record.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

STIRMAN v. CRABTREE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 12, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONSIDERATION FOR DEED.

The recital of a deed as to the consideration being explainable by parol, in a suit for possession of a farm occupied by defendant after plaintiff purchased it, it was competent for defendant to show by parol that, as part of the consideration for the sale of other real estate by defendant to plaintiff by a deed reciting that the conveyance was for a good, valuable, and adequate consideration in cash, plaintiff agreed to buy a farm for defendant.

2. EQUITY (§§ 377, 381*)—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES TO JURY.

Though, in a suit involving matters of equitable cognizance, the chancellor may properly decline to submit issues to a jury, he may do so on his own motion, though he need not follow their findings in adjudging the rights of the parties.

Appeal from Circuit Court, McLean County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by Wilbur F. Stirman against George W. Crabtree to recover land. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Little & Slack, W. A. Taylor, and J. H. Miller, for appellant. W. B. Noe and L. P. Tanner, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In 1904 the appellee, Crabtree, owned some real estate in Owensboro that he purchased for $9,500, paying in cash $3,500 and executing for the deferred payments six notes of $1,000 each, due, respectively, on the 1st day of March, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, and 1909. There was a condition in the notes that all of them should become due at the option of the holder if there was default in the payment of any of them at maturity. In the early part of 1904 the appellant, Stirman, became the purchaser of these six notes, and some time before September 1st of that year he notified Crabtree, who had not paid anything on the note due March 1, 1904, that unless the note was paid, or some better security given, he would bring suit upon all the notes. As the result of various conferences between the parties that will be stated more fully in the course of the opinion, Crabtree conveyed all the Owensboro property to Stirman, and Stirman surrendered to Crabtree all the notes he held against him. The consideration is not stated in the deed; but it recites that the conveyance was made for "a good, valuable and adequate consideration to them in cash paid by the party of the second part, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged." By the consent of Stirman, Crabtree was permitted to remain in the occupancy of the property, a part of which was a livery stable, until January 1, 1905. In January, 1905, Stirman purchased 173 acres of land in McLean county from Neal and wife for $2,600. Six hundred dollars of this amount he paid in cash, and executed five notes of $400 each for the remainder of the purchase money, due, respectively, on the 1st day of January, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, and 1910; each bearing interest from date. The deed conveying this land was made to Stirman. In the early part of 1905, Crabtree moved on this land, and was in possession of it in October, 1907, when Stirman brought suit against him for the recovery of the land and $600, the reasonable rental for the years 1906-7. In the pleadings in this suit he alleged, in substance: That at the time he purchased the notes the property was not worth as much as $6,000, but Crabtree assured him he had made arrangements to pay the note due March 1, 1904, at its maturity. That, as Crabtree failed to pay any part, he notified him he would bring suit upon all of the notes in the October term, 1904, of the Daviess circuit court and enforce his lien upon the property. That thereupon Crabtree besought him not to do so, saying that if the property was sold under a judgment it would not bring his debt, and that if he would not sue him he would surrender the property and convey it to him, which he did. He said that, after Crabtree consented to make the conveyance, he agreed with him in parol that he might occupy the property, rent free, until January 1, 1905, and that in the meantime, if he could find a purchaser for it who would pay more than the amount of the notes and interest, he (Crabtree) could have the excess. That there was no consideration for this agreement on his part, and he was induced to make it out of sympathy for Crabtree. That in December, 1904, Crabtree informed him he could not find any purchaser for the stable and would surrender possession on January 1, 1905, and then appealed to him to help him get a farm. That shortly afterwards Crabtree reported that he had found a farm in McLean county that could be bought for $2,600, and, if he (Stirman) would buy it and allow him to occupy it, he would be able to pay for it out of the proceeds of his crops; and that as an accommodation to him he agreed to, and did, purchase the farm, taking the deed to himself. And, further, that Crabtree had failed to pay either of the notes due January 1, 1906 and 1907, or any part of the consideration, and that he had been compelled to take up the notes.

To this suit, Crabtree filed an answer, set-off, and counterclaim, in which he said, in substance, that in August, 1904, it was agreed in parol between himself and Stirman that if he would convey to Stirman the Owensboro property Stirman would surrender to him the notes he held, and in addition thereto, and as a part of the consideration, would pay for and have deeded to him any farm he (Crabtree) might select in Daviess or McLean county, which could be purchased for $3,000 or less, and that in pursuance of this agreement he selected the Neal land, consenting that the deed might be made to Stirman, but with the parol agreement between himself and Stirman that Stirman should pay off the purchase-money notes executed to Neal, and when these notes were paid convey the land to Crabtree. He further averred that Stirman, in pursuance of this parol agreement, did purchase the Neal farm and place him in possession thereof in 1905, and that during his occupancy he had made valuable and lasting improvements on the land that enhanced its value at least $600, and the land was worth when the suit was brought $5,200. He therefore prayed that he be adjudged the owner of the land, and that Stirman be required to pay for and convey it to him; or, if this could not be done, that he be given judgment against Stirman in damages for the sum of $5,200. Other pleadings completed the issues, and the court upon its own motion transferred the action to the equity docket, but directed that an issue out of chancery be submitted to a jury. A trial resulted in a jury finding a verdict in favor of Crabtree for $3,000. This verdict was set aside by the court, and a new trial ordered, when the court upon its own motion again submitted the following issues to a jury: "(1) The jury will find from the evidence and state in their verdict whether or not in the oral contract for the sale of the livery stable in Owensboro, Ky., by the defendant to the plaintiff, the plaintiff agreed to buy a farm for the defendant that cost not less than $2,500, in addition to surrendering the notes the plaintiff held against the defendant, which were a lien on the stable conveyed by the defendant to the plaintiff; and the jury will also find from the evidence and state in the verdict whether or not the plaintiff did purchase the farm in controversy in this action for the defendant and place him in possession of it, with the understanding and agreement that the defendant accepted it in satisfaction of the $2,500 difference, if any, between the lien notes and the value of the stable conveyed by defendant to the plaintiff. (2) The jury will find from the evidence and state in their verdict whether by a contract of sale by Crabtree to Stirman of real estate in Owensboro, Ky., that Stirman agreed, in addition to the $6,000 in notes which he surrendered to Crabtree, that he would pay to Crabtree $3,000, or pay for a farm for Crabtree of the value of $3,000, or less." In response to these questions, the jury found the following verdict: "We of the jury find from the evidence that, in the sale of the real estate in Owensboro by Crabtree to Stirman, Stirman did agree to buy a farm for Crabtree of the value of $2,500; and we further find from the evidence that Stirman put Crabtree in possession of the farm described in the petition in this action under the agreement, and that Crabtree accepted it in satisfaction of the $2,500 difference between the lien notes of Stirman and the value of the stable agreed on by the parties at the time of the trade." Thereupon the court adjudged that Stirman was the owner of the land, but that Crabtree had a lien on it for $2,500, and was entitled to retain possession of it until this amount was paid to him by Stirman. Other questions in reference to rents and improvements were disposed of by the court; but we do not deem further mention of this part of the judgment necessary to a consideration of the question presented by this appeal.

In behalf of the appellant, it is urged: (1) That the parol contract set up by Crabtree was not enforceable; (2) that the verdict is palpably against the evidence; (3) that the court should not have submitted the issues of fact to a jury; and (4) that the issues submitted were insufficient and misleading.

It has been decided in a number of cases that the recital in a deed of the consideration paid is not conclusive, and that either party may show by parol evidence what the true consideration was. This being so, it was competent for Crabtree to make the defense, and establish it by parol evidence if he could, that as a part of the consideration for the sale of the Owensboro property Stirman agreed to buy a farm to cost $3,000 or less. The fact that the agreement in respect to the consideration contemplated the purchase of a farm did not affect the right of Crabtree to show what the real consideration was. If, as a part of the consideration for the Owensboro property, Stirman agreed to buy a farm at a cost of $3,000, and convey it to Crabtree, although Crabtree could not compel Stirman to purchase the land and convey it to him, he could yet bring a suit to recover the value of the farm; and so we think that Crabtree in his pleading presented a good cause of action.

In view of the fact that there will be another trial, we do not deem it proper to express any decided opinion upon the evidence; it being sufficient to say that, although the weight of it favors Stirman's contention, it was conflicting and sufficient in a common-law action to sustain the verdict of a properly instructed jury in favor of either party. Although this suit involves matters of equitable cognizance, and the chancellor might properly have declined to submit any issues to a jury, yet, under the settled practice, he had the right to do so, although he need not have followed their findings in adjudging the rights of the parties. And so the chancellor acted within a sound discretion when he called in a jury to get their judgment upon the disputed questions of fact; but we are of the opinion that the issue submitted did not fairly present the case to the jury, and as it appears from the judgment entered that the chancellor felt himself bound by the finding of the jury, although he might have disregarded it, it seems to us that the jury should have been advised by the issues submitted to them of the contention of both the parties to the litigation, so that when they came to consider their verdict they might have before them the case of each of the parties. But the court in the two questions submitted really presented only Crabtree's theory of the case, ignoring Stirman's. Stirman's theory was that he did not agree to buy a farm for Crabtree or pay anything for the Owensboro property in addition to the notes he held against him, but that as a matter of accommodation he bought a farm and gave Crabtree the privilege of occupying and cultivating it with the understanding that he (Crabtree) would take up the purchase notes as they fell due, and in addition pay to Stirman what he had paid in cash on the place. This view of the case was not before the jury at all. Their attention was not directed to it by the question submitted.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial, and, if upon a new trial issues of fact are submitted to a jury, they should cover the case as made out for each party, and the chancellor may or may not in his discretion enter a judgment in conformity to their verdict; in other words, the chancellor will decide the case as he thinks right and proper, giving to the findings of the jury such weight as he considers them entitled to.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.
"To be officially reported."

Proceeding by the Commonwealth, by the State Auditor's agent, against Margaret Helm's trustee. From a judgment for plaintiff in the circuit court, reversing a judgment for defendant in the county court, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to affirm the judgment of the county court dismissing the proceeding.

Geo. B. Kinkead and Wallace & Harris, for appellant. D. C. Hunter and Geo. C. Webb, for appellee.

BARKER, J. This is a proceeding commenced in the county court of Fayette county to require the appellant, as trustee for Margaret Helm, to list the personal property of the cestui que trust for taxation as omitted property for the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1908. The merits of the question involved here turn upon whether or not Margaret Helm was domiciled in Fayette county, Ky., during the years mentioned, as is claimed by appellee, or whether her domicile was in Woodford county, as claimed by appellant. This question is one wholly of fact, and is not altogether free from doubt. Margaret Helm's father and mother resided on a large farm in Woodford county, Ky., up to the time of the death of the father. After his death the mother, Mary L. Helm, and her daughter, Margaret, continued to reside in Woodford county, although they were absent therefrom a large part of the time. The farm was rented out, but the mother retained a room in the house which she kept furnished and occupied from time to time. After the death of her mother, Margaret Helm did not continue to keep a room in the house on the farm, but boarded in Lexington, Ky. She was unmarried, and able financially to live how and where she pleased. Her mother died in 1903, and since that time she has for the most part boarded in Lexington. Whether or not that was her domicile is the question for adjudication.

The will of the mother, Mary L. Helm, was probated in Woodford county, and the Security Trust Company was appointed and qualified there as trustee under the will for the daughter, Margaret. It is conceded that each and every year since the appointment and qualification of appellant as trustee it has paid state and county taxes on the trust estate in Woodford county, Ky. The question of domicile is nearly, if not always, one of intent, and often very slight circumstances will serve to turn the judgment in favor of one or another of the different places claimed to be the domicile. It is a firmly settled rule of law that every person has a legal domicile somewhere; and it is equally well settled that, where the domicile is once established, an intent to abandon it and adopt a new one must be satisfactorily shown. Now, in the case before us, it is conceded that, up to the time of the death of the mother in 1903, the domicile of the mother and daughter was in Woodford county. To establish the fact that the daughter, after the death of the mother, changed her domicile from Woodford to Fayette county, the commonwealth proved that for the larger part, if not all, of the time since the death of the mother, the daughter has lived in a boarding house in Lexington, and evidence is given of certain statements of the cestui que trust relative to a proposed change of residence to avoid taxation; but this was after this procedure was commenced, and had reference to escape from city taxation. On the other hand, we have the undisputed fact that the trustee has regularly listed the whole estate for taxation in Woodford county, and paid the taxes due thereon each year. We find, also, that Margaret Helm retained her membership in the Episcopal Church at Versailles, and has never changed it to a church in Lexington; and it is shown that she told the officers of the trust company that she resided in Woodford county, she having been asked this question for the purpose of ascertaining where her estate should be taxed, and this long before any question of taxation in Fayette county arose. In reaching the proper conclusion as to the domicile of the cestui que trust, her sex and status and all her surroundings should be taken into consideration. Being single, with no family ties, it was not necessary for her to own a house; being wealthy, she was not required to go into any business; and, being a female, she might feel a delicacy in keeping a room in the home of her tenant. On the whole, we think that the fact that the estate was listed for taxation during all of the years involved herein in Woodford county, Ky., ought to establish, in the absence of stronger evidence, that Margaret Helm resides in Woodford county.

In the case of City of Lebanon v. Biggers, 117 Ky. 480, 78 S. W. 213, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1528, the question we have here was discussed at considerable length. In the opinion it is said: "It is a maxim of the law that every person must have a domicile, and also that he can have but one, and that, when once established, it continues until he renounces it and takes up another in its stead. Nor can there be any question that a domicile is not lost by temporary absence. The question is one of fact, and it is often difficult to determine. The rule is laid down by Mr. Justice Cooley in volume one of his work on Taxation (3d Ed.) p. 641, quoting Shaw, C. J., as follows: 'No exact definition can be given of domicile. It depends upon no one fact or combination of circumstances, but from the whole, taken together, it must be determined in each particular case. It is a maxim that every man must have a domicile somewhere, and also that he can have but one. Of course, it follows that his existing domicile continues until he acquires another, and, vice versa, by acquiring a new domicile he relinquishes his former one. From this view it is manifest that very slight circumstances must often decide the question. It depends upon the preponderance of evidence in favor of two or more places; and it may often occur that the evidence of facts tending to establish the domicile in one place would be entirely conclusive were it not for the existence of facts and circumstances of a still more conclusive and decisive character, which fixed it beyond question in another. So, on the contrary, very slight circumstances may fix one's domicile, if not controlled by more conclusive facts fixing it in another place.' So, in this case, taking the evidence for the Commonwealth and looking from that point of view, it would appear that Margaret Helm was domiciled in Lexington. Taking that for the appellant, it seems to us that her domicile was in Woodford county. Certain it is that she so believed and intended, and her trustee acted upon this view in giving in the estate for taxation.

For these reasons, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the circuit court to affirm the judgment of the county court dismissing the proceeding of the auditor's agent.

FAIRBANKS, MORSE & CO. v. S. W. HELTSLEY & CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. SALES (§ 340*)—CONTRACT—BREACH—ACTION FOR PRICE.

Where the buyer of an engine from a manufacturer notified the seller before the engine had been seen, tendered, or delivered that he would not accept it, and for this reason there was no delivery and the title at all times remained in the seller, he could not maintain an action for the price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 933; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 570*)—RES JUDICATA—DISMISSAL—INSUFFICIENCY OF PLEADING.

Dismissal of a seller's action for the price because the petition was demurrable for want of facts was no bar to another action for breach of contract.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Todd County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Fairbanks, Morse & Co. against S. W. Heltsley & Co. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Trimble & Mallory, Jas. R. Mallory, Gifford & Steinfeld and Chas. R. Gowen, for appellants. C. A. Denny, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. brought this suit against S. W. Heltsley & Co. in the Todd circuit court. The defendants demurred to the petition; their demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff filed an amended petition. The defendants demurred to the petition as amended. The demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff failing to plead further, the petition was dismissed. The plaintiff appeals.

The facts stated in the petition are briefly these: The plaintiff is a corporation created by the laws of Illinois. On July 30, 1908, it entered into a written contract with the defendants by which it agreed to deliver on board the cars at Elkton, Ky., one 15 horse power gasoline engine, for which the defendants agreed to pay it $660. The plaintiff immediately proceeded to build and equip an engine in compliance with the terms of the contract, and crated and prepared it for shipment from its factory to Elkton; but before it was shipped the defendants notified the plaintiff that they would not receive the engine if shipped, or pay for it, and for this reason it did not ship the engine, although ready and willing to do so. No part of the contract price was paid, and on these facts the plaintiff asked judgment for the contract price, $660, and costs.

In Cook v. Brandeis, 3 Metc. 555, the plaintiff sold certain wheat to the defendants to be thereafter delivered, but the defendants, when the time came for delivery, refused to receive it. The plaintiff thereupon sold the wheat for less than the contract price, and brought a suit to recover damages. In defining his rights the court said: "In such case—that is, where the vendee refuses to receive the thing bargained for—the vendor may consider it as his own, as if there had been no delivery, and recover the difference between the value at the time and place of delivery and the contract price; or he may sell it with due precaution and diligence to satisfy his lien for the price, and then he may sue and recover only the unpaid balance of the contract price, or he may consider it as the property of the vendee subject to his call or order, and then he recovers the full price which the vendee was to pay. In either case the election rests with the vendor; the vendee having violated his contract." In the subsequent case of Bell v. Offutt, 10 Bush, 632, Bell had sold certain hogs to Offutt to be thereafter delivered, and Offutt declined to take the hogs when tendered. Bell thereupon sold the hogs for less than the contract price, and brought suit for damages. The court there laid down the same rule as in Cook v. Brandeis. But it will be observed that in both of these cases the seller had sold the property in the open market for the best price attainable, and the court did not have before it the question what he must do to recover the contract price in order that the thing sold might be regarded as the property of the purchaser. This question was presented in Webber v. Minor, 6 Bush, 463, 99 Am. Dec. 688. In that case, the plaintiff had sold a lot of wood, which the defendant refused to receive, and brought an action for the price while he still had the wood. The court, holding that he could not recover the price, said: "According to the case of Cook v. Brandeis and Crawford, 3 Metc. 555, relied on for the appellee, and the authorities therein cited, the appellee might on the refusal of the appellant to receive and pay for the wood, if he was bound to do so by the contract, have either kept the wood and recovered by proper action the difference between its value at the time and place of delivery and the contract price, or he might have sold it with due precaution and diligence, and then have sued for and recovered the difference between the price received and the contract price, or he might upon making an actual or constructive delivery of the wood have recovered the full contract price, the measure of relief sought in this action. But, although the evidence conduces to sustain the plaintiff's averments of the contract, and his readiness and offer to deliver the one hundred and fifty-four cords of wood, and the refusal of the defendant to receive it, these facts do not in our opinion constitute, actually or constructively, a complete performance of the contract; for, conceding that a substantial compliance with his undertaking did not require that he should place the wood upon the brickyard against the will of the defendant, he should have set it apart for the defendant, and relinquished his own control of it at or as near to the place of delivery as was reasonably practicable. This would have been a constructive delivery of the wood, not merely an offer or tender of delivery. Duckham v. Smith, 5 T. B. Mon. 372; 2 Story on Contracts, § 800. And, as there would have remained nothing more for the plaintiff to do to vest the property in the defendant and render the sale absolute, he might then have recovered the contract price of the wood. But he was not entitled to a recovery to that extent upon the allegation and proof only of a tender or offer of delivery, which, if true, neither divested him of the legal title nor the possession of the wood."

This case followed the rule which had been previously announced in Williams, etc., v.

Jones, etc., 1 Bush, 621, and it has been followed in Wells v. Maley, 6 Ky. Law Rep. 77; Miller v. Burch (Ky.) 41 S. W. 307; Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Cheney (Ky.) 51 S. W. 813; Hauser v. Tate, 105 Ky. 701, 49 S. W. 475, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 1716. A contrary rule was not laid down in Jones v. Strode, 41 S. W. 562, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 1117, or in Hollerbach and May Contract Company v. Wilkins (Ky.) 112 S. W. 1126. In each of these cases the action was brought to recover damages for the breach of the contract. In Benjamin on Sales, § 1117, the rule is thus stated: "When the vendor has not transferred to the buyer the property in the goods which are the subject of the contract as has been explained in Book II, as where the agreement is for the sale of goods not specific, or of specific goods which are not in a deliverable state, or which are to be weighed or measured before delivery, the breach by the buyer of his promise to accept and pay can only affect the vendor by way of damages. The goods are still his. He may resell or not at his pleasure. But his only action against the buyer is for damages for nonacceptance. He can in general only recover the damage that he has sustained, not the full price of the goods. The law with the reason for it was thus stated by Tindal, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the Exchequer Chamber in Barrow v. Arnaud: 'Where a contract to deliver goods at a certain price is broken, the proper measure of damages in general is the difference between the contract price and the market price of such goods at the time when the contract is broken, because the purchaser, having the money in his hands, may go into the market and buy. So, if a contract to accept and pay for goods is broken, the same rule may be properly applied, for the seller may take his goods into the market and obtain the current price for them.'"

Here there was a contract to make a gasoline engine, and to deliver it on board the cars at Elkton, Ky. Before the manufacturer had shipped the engine, and before it had been seen, tendered, or delivered to the purchaser, he notified the seller that he would not take it. The property in the engine had not passed. The engine remained at the manufacturer's factory. It was its property, and was subject to its control. The plaintiff had in no manner released its control of the engine. If the engine had been destroyed, it would have been at the plaintiff's loss, and any insurance upon it would have belonged to the plaintiff. That in such a state of case an action for the price cannot be maintained is sustained by the great weight of American authority. Mechem on Sales of Personal Property, §§ 1091, 1092; Newmark on Sales, § 391; 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1118; Note to Gardner v. Deeds, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 1175, 1176; Oklahoma Vinegar Company v. Carter, 116 Ga. 140, 42 S. E. 378, 59 L. R. A. 122, 94 Am. St. Rep. 112; McCormick v.

Balfany, 78 Minn. 370, 81 N. W. 10, 79 Am. St. Rep. 893, and cases cited.

The plaintiff's petition states no facts to constitute a cause of action for damages for the breach of contract. It is simply an action for the price; no facts being stated upon which a judgment for damages could be rendered. The dismissal of this action will not bar another action for damages for the breach of the contract, as a judgment upon an insufficient petition is never a bar to another action.

Judgment affirmed.

STONE v. ADAMS EXPRESS CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 135*)—DAMAGES—MEASURE—INJURY TO PERSONALTY.

The measure of actual damages for injury to a shaft while being transported, by falling out of the car and breaking, was the difference between the value of the shaft before and after the injury to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 105*)—DELAY IN DELIVERY—SPECIAL DAMAGES.

Where a shaft used in an electric plant fell out of a car in transit and was broken, after which the express company had it repaired and forwarded to the owner, damages claimed for loss of profits in being prevented from running the plant while the shaft was being repaired were special damages, and hence could not be recovered unless the carrier had notice of the use for which the shaft was intended, either actually or by plain inference from the nature of the thing transported.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 459-462; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 105*)—DELAY IN DELIVERY—SPECIAL DAMAGES—NOTICE.

That electric lights in the office of an express company at a place from which electric machinery was expressed for repairs, and to which it was returned under separate contract, were not burning while the machinery was away for repairs, did not give notice to the express company of the purpose for which the machinery was used, so as to make it liable for special damages by loss of profits caused by delay in returning the machinery; its agent making the return contract of carriage not knowing those facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 451-452; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 98*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—DELAY—CAUSES OF DELAY.

A claim for loss of profits by being compelled to stop an electric plant because a shaft used therein was broken en route and returned to the repair shop by the express company to be repaired before it was forwarded to the plant was based upon the owner's being deprived of the use of the shaft, and whether the delay was caused by injury to the shaft or by other reasons was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 396-426; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1171*)—DISPOSITION—AFFIRMANCE—TECHNICAL ERROR.

Under the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex," a judgment for defendant will not be reversed on appeal because plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4553; Dec. Dig. § 1171; Damages, Cent. Dig. § 16.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pike County. "Not to be officially reported."

Action by L. L. Stone against the Adams Express Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

N. J. Auxier, for appellant. Joseph D. Harkins and Walter S. Harkins, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellant, L. L. Stone, is the owner of the Pike Light & Power Company, which operates an electric light plant located at Pikeville, Ky. In the month of September, 1908, a shaft which was in use in the plant was broken. Appellant then shipped it over the line of the Adams Express Company to a machine shop at Ironton, Ohio, for the purpose of having it repaired. After the shaft was repaired, it was delivered to the Southern Express Company to be transported by it and connecting carriers to Pikeville, Ky. The Southern Express Company does not do business in the Big Sandy valley. Upon reaching Kenova, W. Va., it delivered the shaft to the Adams Express Company for transportation to Pikeville. The shaft was placed aboard the Adams Express Company car at Kenova and mounted on skids. To facilitate the handling of the shaft, rollers were placed under the skids and the shaft rolled into the center of the car. The roller nearest the door was removed, leaving one end of the skid upon which the shaft was mounted lying on the floor. A block was placed next to the other roller which was left under the skid. The door was closed by the messenger in charge of the car. While he was in another portion of the car preparing to deliver express at another station, and while the car was going around a sharp curve near Clyffeside Park, some two or three miles from Ashland, Ky., where the shaft was to be transferred to the Big Sandy Division of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, the door of the car opened, and in some way the shaft rolled out of the car. When the train reached Ashland, the messenger noticed the disappearance of the shaft. A man was immediately sent back to search for it. When found the shaft was broken. Thereupon it was again transported to Ironton, to the same machine shop from which it had been shipped, and was again repaired. In about 10 days it was delivered to the Adams Express Company and transported by it to appellant at Pikeville. The expense incidental to the repairs made necessary by the injury of the shaft while in the possession of appellee was $112. This amount was paid by the Adams Express Company. Appellant instituted this action to recover damages by way of profits which he could have realized by running the electric light plant during the 10 days he was deprived of the use of the shaft. At the conclusion of the evidence the circuit court held that the damages sought to be recovered were special damages, and as no notice was brought home to appellee, or the connecting carrier from which it received the shaft, of the special use which was to be made of the shaft, appellant had not shown himself entitled to recover such damages. The jury were therefore instructed to find for appellee.

There can be no doubt that the actual damage occurring when the shaft was injured was the difference between the value of the shaft before and after its injury. When appellee, however, repaired the shaft and restored it to its former condition and paid the expense incident thereto, it settled the actual damages resulting from the injury. The damages arising from loss of profits between the time when the shaft should have arrived and the time when it did arrive were special damages. Illinois Central R. R. Co. et al. v. Hopkinsville Canning Co., 116 S. W. 758, and the cases therein cited; Patterson v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 123 Ky. 783, 97 S. W. 426, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 78. In the case of Brand v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 108 S. W. 356, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 1335, it was held that, in order to recover lost profits as special damages from a carrier for delay in the shipment of goods, the carrier at the time of the delivery of the shipment to it must have notice of the use for which the goods are intended, or the character of the goods must be such that such use may be reasonably inferred therefrom. There was nothing in the appearance of the shaft to indicate the special use that was to be made of it. The shaft, itself, did not therefore give the required notice. Nor did the fact that electric lights were used in the Adams Express Company office at Pikeville, and that they were not burning during the time the shaft was being repaired, bring home to the appellee notice of the use that was intended to be made of the shaft. In the case of Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Mink, 126 Ky. 837, 103 S. W. 294, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 833, it was held that where mill machinery was shipped to be repaired, and then by a separate contract shipped back, to give the carrier notice of special circumstances from which damage would arise from delay in transportation, so as to make it liable therefor, it is not enough that the agent with whom the first contract was made knew thereof, there having been no delay in the first shipment, but the agent with whom the second contract was made must have been informed of such circumstances.

But it is contended by appellant that the action in this case does not grow out of the delay, but arises from the fact that the shaft was injured and he was deprived of its use during the time it was being repaired. In our opinion, however, no just distinction can be made between a case where the delay grows out of an injury to the freight and a case where it is delayed for other reasons. In either case the party seeking damages bases his right of recovery upon the fact that he was deprived of the use of the machinery. In this case the damages sought to be recovered were caused by the delay in transportation and delivery of the shaft. In order to recover damages other than the usual and ordinary damages, notice must be brought home to the shipper of the use for which the goods were intended, or the character of the goods must be such that the use may be reasonably inferred therefrom. The evidence before us is not sufficient to show either actual or constructive notice. While he did show himself entitled to nominal damages, we will not reverse the case on that ground. The maxim, "De minimis non curat lex," applies.

Judgment affirmed.

MADDOX et al. v. MADDOX et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 18, 1909.)

DEEDS (§ 19*)—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION—SUPPORT.

Grantors conveyed to their two sons their property, in consideration of support and payment of $200 to another brother, which payment was made. After supporting grantors for a time, one of the sons died, and the other was unable to support them without the aid of the heirs of the other brother, who were also unable to furnish any support. Held that, as the grantees could not comply with the covenants of the deed, the deed should be set aside, on repayment to the grantees of the money paid and expense of support.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 38; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.
"To be officially reported."

Suit by Mary F. Maddox and another against Mattie Maddox and others to set aside a deed. From a decree entered on sustaining a demurrer to the petition, complainants appeal. Reversed.

J. P. Sanderfur and J. E. Fogle, for appellants. J. S. Glenn and Glenn & Simmerman, for appellees.

BARKER, J. The appellants, J. L. R. Maddox and Mary F. Maddox, his wife, are very old people, who live in Ohio county, Ky. On the 30th day of July, 1900, they conveyed by deed to their two sons, Moses R. Maddox and J. L. R. Maddox, Jr., a tract of land in Ohio county, containing 243 acres, more or less, and which is set out by metes and bounds in the petition. The consideration for the conveyance was that the two sons agreed and undertook, first, to pay W. P. Maddox, a brother, $200 for his interest in the land conveyed; and, second, that the grantees would support their father and mother during their declining years and decently bury them after their death. It appears that the $200 was paid to the brother, and the sons undertook to, and did for a while, support their parents. One of the sons, J. L. R. Maddox, Jr., afterwards became insane and was sent to the asylum, where he has since died, leaving a wife and two children, who are the appellees. After the death of J. L. R. Maddox, Jr., this suit was instituted by the grantors to have the deed set aside and annulled for a failure of consideration—it being alleged that J. L. R. Maddox, Jr., was dead; that the infant defendants and their mother, Mattie F. Maddox, were unable to support the grantors or carry out the covenant made by the husband and father; that they were without means of any sort, and had abandoned the place, and done nothing towards the support or maintenance of the grantors, for two years. The other son, Moses R. Maddox, in his pleading expressed a willingness to carry out the covenant in the deed so far as he is able, but alleges that he is unable to support his parents by himself without aid of the other covenantor. He states that he is willing to pay his brother's children $450, and then take the whole land and carry out the covenant, and alleges that he has already paid to his brother, W. P. Maddox, the $200 stipulated in the deed from his father and mother. To the petition a general demurrer was interposed, and sustained by the court; and, the plaintiffs having declined to plead further, the petition was dismissed.

We are of opinion that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the petition. So far as the defendants were concerned, it appears that they are not able to carry out the covenant of their deceased father and husband. They cannot, therefore, have the land without paying the consideration, and the old people are clearly entitled to their land back, unless the grantees are able and willing to comply with the covenant to support and maintain them throughout their lives and bury them at their death. But, inasmuch as J. L. R. Maddox, Jr., has paid a part of the consideration for the conveyance, it would be inequitable that his wife and children should lose the whole of that for which he had in part paid. The court should have overruled the demurrer, and required the defendants to plead, and, if it appeared that they were unwilling or unable to perform the covenant of J. L. R. Maddox, then the case should have been referred to a commissioner for the purpose of ascertaining what proportion of the whole consideration the father had paid, either in money or service, to be credited, of course, by the value of the use of the land, if any, during the time the service was being rendered, and the balance so ascertained should be refunded to the widow and children of the dead grantee.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed, for further procedure in accordance with this opinion.

SCOTT v. ALPINE COAL CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 19, 1909.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—WATER COURSES—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The name of a water course on which land is located, as a part of the description of its boundaries, is to be deemed no more conclusive than any other part of the description.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-13; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 54*)—PATENT BOUNDARIES—LOCATION.

The question as to the true location of a patent boundary of land is one of fact, and if it appears that the entrant and surveyor actually located the particular tract in dispute at the point at present claimed, errors in the recitals of the patent would not invalidate it; the rule that that is certain which can be made certain applying, and the place where the original survey was made may be shown otherwise than by the testimony of those who participated in it.

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—EVIDENCE—REPUTATION AS TO LOCATION OF LINES AND CORNERS.

Reputation as to the location of lines and corners of a survey is admissible as evidence; it being an exception to the rule against hearsay.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by W. F. Scott against the Alpine Coal Company. There was a directed verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Denton & Wallace, for appellant. O. H. Waddle & Son, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. In this action of ejectment the main question at issue was the location of the plaintiff's boundary of land. It was described as being "in the county of Pulaski, on the waters of Miller's creek, near the head." The description in the patent, in addition, named the trees and other monuments, with courses and distances of lines. The survey upon which the patent was issued was made June 1, 1827. A stream now known as Miller's creek has its source in a small mountain. On the opposite side of the mountain the water flows into a branch, a tributary of what is now known as Martin's creek. The 50-acre patent in dispute is claimed to lie on this watershed, but on the Martin's creek side. There was evidence for the plaintiff on the trial that what is now known as Martin's creek was many years ago called Miller's creek. It was shown, too, or at least there was evidence tending to show, that the plot of land embraced in this survey, claimed by appellant (plaintiff) and his vendors for many years, and consistently throughout, with knowledge and acquiescence of appellee's vendors, was on Martin's creek side, where the trespass in dispute was committed. The trial court granted for the defendant a peremptory instruction at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, upon the notion that, as the patent showed on its face that the land embraced by it was on Miller's creek, it could not be the basis of title for land situated on Martin's creek.

Naming the water course on which the land is located is part of the description of the boundary of land. There is no apparent reason for holding that part of the description as conclusive, more than any other part of it. Reid v. Langford, 3 J. J. Marsh, 420. In a controversy over the true location of a patent boundary of land, the question is one of fact. A tree may be called for as a monument of the boundary. If it should not be there, or never was there, the patent is not void because of that fact. The fact is evidence, from which it may be deduced that the attempted location is not true. A concurrence of many such discrepancies between the recitals of the writing and the physical conditions on the ground would be more conclusive as basis for the deduction that the attempted location was erroneous. Yet, if the fact was that the entrant and surveyor actually located the particular tract in dispute at the point now claimed, and run its lines as is now done, and that fact was made to satisfactorily appear, an error or errors in the recitals of the patent would not invalidate it. While it might be so vague and uncertain as to be insusceptible of location, yet the rule, "That is certain which can be made certain," applies to descriptions in patents, as well as instruments inter partes. It is always relative to show where the original survey for a patent was actually made. After many years this cannot be done by the testimony of those who participated in it. Yet, if it can be shown otherwise, it may be. Reputation as to the location of the lines and corners is admissible as evidence, and is an exception to the rule against hearsay evidence. Smith v. Nowells, 2 Litt. 161; Phillips v. Stewart, 97 S. W. 6.

The circuit court should have admitted the evidence excluded of the reputation of the location of the patent lines and courses, as well as the names by which the streams were formerly known. It was then for the jury to say whether the patent boundary as located by the plaintiff coincided with its location when originally surveyed in 1827.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial consistent herewith.

RISNER et al. v. DUNN.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 19, 1909.)

LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—CONVEYANCE OF TIMBER—WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

An owner of land gave a bond for title for $400, to be paid in merchantable timber suitable for a specified purpose, growing on the land sold and land of the purchaser, any balance to be paid within eight months. Subsequently, within the eight months, the timber not being suitable for the specified purpose, the vendor sold it to another for $700. Thereafter the owner conveyed the land to the purchaser, who was illiterate, and the purchaser executed a deed to the vendor for all the timber on the two tracts of land. Held, that the conveyance of the timber, being in excess of the requirements of the bond for deed, was without consideration, and should be canceled, and the vendor therein was entitled to judgment for the value of timber removed in excess of $400.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Magoffin County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by Elizabeth Risner and others against John M. Dunn, to reform a deed and for other relief. From the decree rendered, complainants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Byrd & Howard, for appellants. D. D. Sublett, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. On October 21, 1899, John M. Dunn, sold to Elijah Risner a tract of land in Magoffin county, containing 75 acres, for $400. Risner was to pay for it in merchantable timber, white oak and pine, 22 inches in diameter 3 feet from the ground, growing upon that land and on an adjoining tract owned by Risner, at 40 cents a tree. The timber was to be such as the Moxley White Oak Timber Company of Tennessee was buying. Any balance left after the timber was applied was to be paid to Dunn by the Risners within eight months. The contract was evidenced by a bond for title. The Moxley White Oak Timber Company declined to buy the timber. Subsequently, but within the eight months, Dunn sold the timber to one Pischel, who branded it, and subsequently removed it, paying Dunn, it is said, about $700 for the trees. A deed conveying the timber was executed by the Risners and Dunn on June 8, 1900. On June 29, 1900, Dunn and the Risners exchanged deeds, Dunn conveyed to Risner the 75 acres of land, and Risner conveyed to Dunn the timber on the two tracts. The Risners were illiterate, unable to read or write. Dunn prepared the deeds and sent them to the Risners by a deputy county court clerk, Dunn's deed to be delivered, and the Risners' to be executed. They were delivered and executed. Shortly afterward Elijah Risner died. Dunn cut and removed the Pischel timber and some additional trees. This suit was brought by Elizabeth (who was also Elijah's widow, as well as one of the parties in the contract) and by the children of Elijah Risner for a reformation of the deeds, and to recover from Dunn the excess in value of the timber cut by Pischel and Dunn above the $400 which was to be paid for the land.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The deeds as executed went far beyond the terms of the bond. The deed from the Risners to Dunn conveyed, not only all the pine and white oak trees 22 inches in diameter, but all the timber growing on both tracts 2 inches or more in diameter, with the privilege to Dunn to remove it at any time within 30 years. It bound Risner to protect the timber, and gave Dunn a lien on both tracts of land for any destroyed, save accidentally, and for any shortage in acreage of either tract. There were a number of other hard and oppressive conditions in the deed not found in the bond. Dunn claims that he and Risner made another trade respecting the land and timber after the Moxley White Oak Timber Company declined to buy, and that the deeds were in execution of the latter contract. There are charges of fraud and deceit made by the Risners against Dunn, and considerable evidence was introduced on that issue.

While Dunn and the Risners had the power to rescind the contract of May, 1899, and to make another in lieu of it, we find from the record that such was not the intention of the parties—at least, not of the Risners. To have effected a rescission, both parties to the original contract must have concurred in it. Risner had bought the land. He never consented to cancel the bond evidencing his purchase. When Pischel was substituted for the Moxley Company as vendee of the trees, it became immaterial what the Moxley standard was. The purpose of the stipulation was to insure Dunn's receiving the $400 that he was to get for his land. When the trees were sold to Pischel for more than $400, and Dunn was paid, he no longer had an interest in the matter. The trees of the kind and sizes originally set apart to pay Dunn had been sold by his consent and procurement to another, which satisfied the undertaking of the Risners in the bond. There was, then, no consideration to support the deed made by the Risners to Dunn June 29, 1900. Whether or not it was procured by the fraud of Dunn, it was executed by the Risners under a clear mistake of fact and of their legal liability. It should, therefore, have been canceled by the judgment of the chancellor in this action; but it was not. The sale to Pischel was of all the trees on both tracts of the dimension and kind named. They were branded and removed by Pischel, or on his behalf, and he has paid Dunn for them. Dunn has, for all above $400 due him by the Risners, received that much of their money without consideration or right, and ought to have been adjudged to pay it over to the Risners. But he was not. All the other timber cut or destroyed by Dunn, whatever its dimensions or kind, was the taking of that much of the Risners' property, and he ought to have been required to pay them, for it, its value at the time he cut it. But the court did not so adjudge.

The case ought to have been referred to the master commissioner to ascertain: First. The amount received by Dunn from Pischel above $400. Such excess, and its interest from the date he received the money, should be adjudged against him in behalf of the appellants. Second. To ascertain the kind, quantity, and value of trees cut and destroyed by Dunn, other than that sold and delivered to Pischel. The value of that timber, and interest on the amount, should have been adjudged to appellants against Dunn. The judgment should also cancel the deed from the Risners to Dunn, executed June 29, 1900.

Reversed, and remanded for proceedings consistent herewith.

LOWERY et al. v. SAME.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 17, 1906.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 46*)—TRESPASS TO LAND.

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 2361 (Russell's St. § 17), providing that the owner of land may maintain the appropriate action to recover damages for any trespass or injury committed thereon or to prevent or restrain any trespasses or other injury thereon, notwithstanding such owner may not have actual possession of the land at the time of the commission of the trespass, a landowner may sue in equity to restrain trespasses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 98, 99; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 118*)—TRESPASS TO LAND.

A petition, alleging that plaintiffs were the legal owners and in actual possession of certain tracts of land described, that defendants were openly claiming to own the land, that they had been and were cutting timber therefrom, and were threatening to continue to cut and remove the timber, and unless restrained would continue to do so, thus causing irreparable injury to plaintiffs, stated a cause of action for an injunction to restrain a trespass as authorized by Ky. St. 1909, § 2361 (Russell's St. § 17).

Suits by George Dixon and another against Limbert Driskill and others and by Walter Lowery and others against Limbert Driskill and others. Decrees for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

C. C. Grasham and Wilson & Landrum, for appellants. William Marble, for appellees.

CLAY, C. These two cases involve the same questions, and will be considered together. In the case of George Dixon and Syd E. Sexton, partners trading and doing business under the firm name and style of "Dixon & Sexton," against Limbert Driskill and others, the petition stated: That the plaintiffs were the owners by legal title and were in the actual possession of certain tracts of land described therein; that the defendants were openly claiming to be the owners of the lands in controversy; that they had been and were cutting the timber therefrom, and were threatening to continue to cut and remove the timber; that, unless restrained by the court, they would continue to cut and remove the timber—thus producing great and irreparable injury to the plaintiffs. In the case of Walter Lowrey, etc., against Limbert Driskill and others, the petition contains the same allegations with reference to other lands. It appears from the record that the plaintiffs below in each of the actions claim title under a 1,000-acre survey and patent issued to James Quarles. The defendants claim under a 3,000-acre survey and patent issued to McClurg. Both these actions were brought in equity. The chancellor, taking the view that the question involved was simply the location of a boundary line between two patents, and that whatever possession there was of the land in dispute was common to both, held that the action was not cognizable in equity. He further held that, the plaintiffs having elected to pursue their actions to quiet title, the cases presented no common-law question, and that the chancellor was without authority to settle the question of disputed boundary. In accordance with these views, he entered judgment dismissing the petition in each case. From the judgments below the plaintiffs appeal.

We deem it unnecessary to determine the question whether or not the chancellor erred in holding that plaintiffs did not show themselves entitled to relief under section 11 of the Kentucky Statutes, for the reason that the actions brought are authorized by section 2361, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 17), which is as follows: "The owner of land may maintain the appropriate action to recover damages for any trespass or injury committed thereon, or to prevent or restrain any trespasses or other injury thereto or thereon, notwithstanding such owner may not have the actual possession of the land at the time of the commission of the trespass." Under this section it has been held that an action will lie in equity to restrain trespass. Daniel v. Trunnell, 113 S. W. 51; Bowling v. Breathitt Coal, Iron & Lumber Co., 120 S. W. 317. The allegations of each petition are sufficient to bring the cases within this statute. We therefore conclude that the chancellor erred in dismissing the petitions.

We express no opinion upon the merits of either case. We deem it best to have an adjudication below of the questions involved before undertaking to decide them here.

For the reasons given, the judgment in each case is reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

TROSPER v. EAST JELlico COAL CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 18, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—SAFE PLACE TO WORK.

A servant cannot recover for injuries if he knows of a danger and does not exercise ordinary care for his own safety; and, where a servant engaged in hauling rails on a car in a mine knew that certain cross-beams were not high enough to permit him to pass without stooping while riding on the car, and neglected to do so when passing under one of them, which he could have seen if he had looked, he could not recover for injuries resulting from such neglect.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—PERMANENT STRUCTURES NEAR TRACK—APPLICATION OF RULE.

The rule applicable to permanent structures by the side of railroad tracks or overhead bridges does not apply to employees in a mine who either walked or rode slowly behind a mule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 733; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Knox County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by John Trosper against the East Jellico Coal Company. There was a directed verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward W. Hines, B. B. Golden, and McChord, Hines & Norman, for appellant. Pitzer D. Black, James D. Black, and William R. Black, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellant, John Trosper, instituted this action against appellee, East Jellico Coal Company, to recover damages for personal injuries. Upon the conclusion of the evidence the court gave a peremptory instruction to find for appellee. To review the propriety of this ruling this appeal is prosecuted.

At the time appellant was injured he was employed in removing some steel rails and air pipe from appellant's mine, and was struck by an overhead timber. He had been in appellee's employment for seven or eight years, but during the greater part of that time he worked outside of the mine. While so employed he ran the locomotive engine for a while, and also a small dinky engine. He also ran the drum which pulls the coal up and down the hill, and the compressor which forces the air into the mine. A few days prior to the accident Trosper and an employé by the name of Franck Burch exchanged jobs. Burch was employed on the inside of the mine in some capacity necessitating the use of a car and mule in hauling water, slate, and other things. The exchange was made at the request of Trosper and Burch, and was approved by the mine foreman. The accident occurred in what is known as the "7th left entry" of the mine. The coal had been practically exhausted when the work of "robbing the mine" (i. e., pulling the stumps, removing the rails, etc.) had commenced at the head of the entry. In order to save the piping and steel rails in said entry, it became the duty of appellant, his brother, Milton Trosper, and another employé of the name of James Curtis, to remove the piping and rails to the outside of the mine. It was in the performance of this duty that appellant was injured. The place at which he was injured was about midway between the two ends of the entry, which was several hundred feet in length. There were arranged in the mine certain cross-beams which were located $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 feet from the top of the mine. These cross-beams were set in hatches cut into the slate and supported the pipes which conveyed air from the compressor on the outside. At first appellant and his fellow workmen dragged the rails out on the ground. He then claims he was instructed by the mine foreman to use a car for that purpose. The steel rails were placed on the back of the car and fastened there with a chain; four rails being hauled at a time. It became necessary, according to the evidence for appellant, for him and his two fellow workmen to stand on the bumper in front of the car in order to hold it on the track. The bumper was about 10 inches above the rails of the track. While standing on the bumper, appellant claims that he turned his head to see whether or not the rails were going to catch in the ties behind the curve, and, as he did so, Curtis hallooed for him to look out. Appellant started to throw his head under the timber, but the timber struck his head and pressed him over the car, thus causing the injury complained of.

According to the evidence for appellant, the cross-beams were located about five feet and a half or a little over above the track. According to the testimony for appellee, the cross-beams were more than six feet distant from the track. Appellant is six feet three inches tall. While he had worked on the outside of the mine his evidence shows that he had frequently been in the mine. The evidence shows that Curtis and appellant's brother always stooped when walking under the cross-beams. On the evening of the accident appellant and his companions had made at least two trips into the seventh left entry, and had passed the cross-beams not less than four times. The mine was sufficiently lighted to enable appellant to see a distance of from 30 to 35 feet. Appellant was engaged as driver, and it was his duty to look after the mule. He was in charge of the work that was then being done. In answer to the question, "You knew as a matter of fact that there were cross-beams along different places in the seventh left entry?" Appellant answered, "Yes." The further question was asked: "Then, if you had looked up there, you could have seen that cross-beam with which you came in contact? A. Yes." It is manifest from this evidence that appellant knew the cross-beams were there. They were right before his eyes and could be readily seen. All he had to do was to bend his head and avoid coming in contact with them. While it is the duty of the master to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place in which to work, yet the servant cannot recover if he knows of a danger, and does not exercise ordinary care for his own safety. Knowing of the location of the cross-beams, appellant could have escaped injury by the exercise of the slightest degree of care.

Appellant insists, however, that the rule applicable to permanent structures by the side of railroad tracks or overhead bridges should be applied in this case. There is, however, a wide distinction between the two cases. A train moves along at a high rate of speed. A trainman while engaged in the performance of his duty on the top or side of a car may be caught unawares. While his attention is fixed upon the performance of his duties, he may be suddenly carried under a bridge and thrown from the train. Here the employés either walked or rode slowly behind a mule. The cross-beams were a part of the general plan of the mine. Entries in mines are necessarily low, as there must be economy of space. This is not the case with reference to overhead or side structures along a railroad. There is plenty of room for them. There was no danger of being caught unawares by being carried rapidly beneath one of the cross-beams. Being there as a permanent part of the mine, it was necessary for appellant in the exercise of ordinary care to recognize their presence and avoid coming in contact with them. If it was necessary to stoop while walking in order to avoid the timber, as appellant's companions testified, it was all the more necessary to stoop when standing on the bumper, which was 10 inches above the track. As the proof shows the mine was well lighted, the cross-beams were right before his eyes. He could not close his eyes to their presence, and then recover for an injury which was entirely due to his failure to observe them.

The fact that the pipe had been removed from the cross-beams at the time of the accident has no bearing upon the case. Appellant knew this fact, because he was engaged at that very time in taking the air pipes out of the mine; and he knew from whence the air pipes had come. Having stated that he knew the cross-beams were there, it is immaterial that the air pipes were not resting on the cross-beams. Even though the place where appellant was working may not have been reasonably safe for a person who did not know of the presence of the cross-beams, it cannot be said that the place was not reasonably safe for one who actually knew the cross-beams were there. We therefore conclude that the trial court properly instructed the jury to find for appellee.

Judgment affirmed.

BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR PIKE COUNTY v. A. H. ANDREWS CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Oct. 29, 1909.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 41*)—ALTERATION OF DISTRICTS—RETROACTIVE OPERATION.

The act of March 24, 1908 (Laws 1908, p. 133, c. 56), for the government and regulation of the common schools, having been enacted long after judgment was rendered against a school district, could not affect the rights of the judgment creditor or the district's previous liabilities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 41*)—ALTERATION OF DISTRICTS—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

The act is constitutional, though it does not provide for paying debts of school districts owing at the time of its adoption.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 41*)—ALTERATION OF DISTRICTS—DEBT FOR SCHOOL FURNITURE—LIABILITY OF DISTRICT OR COUNTY.

A school district having prior to the act created a debt for furniture, and used and enjoyed the same, the patrons and property of the district, as it stood prior to the act, and not the property of the entire county, should pay such debt.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pike County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the A. H. Andrews Company against School District No. 67 of Pike County. From a judgment requiring the county board of education to levy a tax to satisfy plaintiff's debt, interest, and costs, after it recovered judgment against the district, the board appeals. Affirmed.

A. F. Childress, for appellant. James M. Roberson, for appellee.

LASSING, J. The A. H. Andrews Company obtained a judgment in the Pike circuit court against the trustees of School District No. 67 for $152.24 for school desks and supplies furnished to said district. The trustees were directed to levy a tax for the purpose of liquidating this debt. For some reason they failed to comply with the order, and, before steps were taken to compel them to do so, the school law passed March 24, 1908, went into effect. Laws 1908, p. 133, c. 56. Plaintiff thereupon filed an amended or supplemental petition attacking the constitutionality of the act of March 24, 1908, in so far as it affected its right to collect its debt. The constitutionality of said act was assailed on the ground that it made no provision for the payment of debts owing by the various school districts at the time of its adoption. The board of education for Pike county filed a demurrer to this supplemental pleading, which was overruled, and thereupon the board declined to plead further, and the court entered a judgment declaring the act of 1908 unconstitutional and void in so far as the rights of plaintiff were affected by said act or by sections 9 or 11 thereof. The court further adjudged that the board of education had superseded the district trustees, and he directed said board to proceed to levy the tax under the provisions of the law as it existed prior to the adoption of the act of 1908 for the purpose of satisfying plaintiff's debt, interest, and costs. From said judgment the board of education prosecutes this appeal.

The judgment entered by the chancellor was in effect merely a direction to the county board of education, which under the act of 1908 superseded or took the place of the board of trustees for said district No. 67, to carry out the judgment that had theretofore been entered in this case. The act of 1908, having been passed and become operative long after the rendition of the judgment which fixed plaintiff's rights and determined the district's liability, could in no wise affect either. Its provisions were not intended in any wise to be retroactive, but they look to and deal with the present and for the future good of the various schools throughout the country. The act of 1908 is constitutional and has been so held by this court, but it does not apply to this case. District No. 67 had created this debt, used and enjoyed the furniture for which it was created, and it is but natural and right that the patrons and property of District No. 67, as it stood prior to the act of 1908, and not the property of the entire county, should pay this debt; and, the circuit judge having so adjudged and directed, the judgment is affirmed.

a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Galvin & Galvin and R. H. Gray, for appellant. B. F. Graziana, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In January, 1907, the appellant company had stored in its warehouse several hundred bales of tightly compressed cotton goods. These bales, which weighed some 500 or 600 pounds each, were piled in the warehouse on top of each other in tiers. The appellee, Williams, was injured by one of these bales falling on his foot from the top of a tier in which it was placed. To recover for the injuries sustained he brought this action, and a jury assessed his damages at $1,000.

A motion in behalf of the appellant for a peremptory instruction was made at the conclusion of the evidence for the appellee, and renewed when all the evidence was in. We have reached the conclusion that this request should have been granted. The appellee was entirely familiar with the arrangement and location of the bales in the warehouse, as he had been working in and about it some three months, and his duties as porter and laborer required him to handle and move the bales. He was the only witness in his behalf who testified as to the falling of the bale, its location immediately before it fell, and the position in which he was standing when it fell. He said repeatedly in the course of his examination that he did not know what caused the bale to fall, and further that several persons—one of them being Sidney Fox—were engaged as co-laborers with him at the time it fell, helping to remove the bales from the warehouse. Fox, being introduced by the appellant, testified that he toppled the bale over so that it might fall on the floor to be carried out, but that before doing so he notified Williams and others, who were present, to get out of the way, and supposed they had done so.

The uncontradicted evidence upon three vital points in the case is (1) that appellee did not know what caused the bale to fall; (2) that Fox intentionally threw it off the tier so that it might be carried out; and (3) that Fox was a fellow servant of Williams. With these three propositions undisputed, appellee had no case to submit to a jury.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

MAY et al. v. FERGUSON et al.

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 40*)—LOCAL OPTION ELECTIONS—STATUTES.

Under the Cammack act (Act March 14, 1906 [Acts 1906, p. 86, c. 21]), providing for local option elections for entire counties, except that cities of the first, second, third, or fourth class may hold an election on the same day, the county is the absolute unit except in counties in which a city of the first, second, third, or fourth class is situated, and in such counties all of the territory outside of the city limits is an absolute unit, and the city is a separate unit, and, where a vote is ordered for an entire county in which there is situated a city of the first, second, third, or fourth class, unless a separate vote is asked for and had within the limits of the city, it is bound by the result of the election in the entire county, and it is only where the citizens of the city seek and are granted a separate vote on the same day that its right to be treated as a separate unit is recognized.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 40*)—LOCAL OPTION ELECTIONS—STATUTES.

Where prohibitory laws are not in force in a county, any magisterial district, voting precinct, or town of any class may vote to establish prohibition within the limits of such district, precinct, or town, but, where prohibition has been established in the entire county pursuant to the Cammack act (Act March 14, 1906 [Acts 1906, p. 86, c. 21]), a unit has been established, and the vote cannot again be taken in any subdivision of the county other than in a city of the first, second, third, or fourth class situated in the county, unless it is taken in the entire county, and, so long as a city of one of the designated classes in a county preserves its identity by taking a vote on the same day that the vote is taken in the entire county, its status is not changed by the will of the majority of the voting population of the county or of a magisterial district therein.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Muhlenberg County.

"To be officially reported."

Election contest by John T. May and others against J. B. Ferguson and others. From a judgment of the circuit court adverse to the contestants, they appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Willis & Meredith, Belcher & Sparks, and J. K. Freeman, Jr., for appellants. Walker Wilkins and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellees.

LASSING, J. In August, 1903, a local option election was held under the law then in force for the entire county of Muhlenberg. At that election a separate vote was had within Central City. The county voted dry and the city wet. No election has been held in the entire county since that time. On October 6, 1906, another election was held in Central City, and the city again voted wet. In July, 1908, petitions were filed with the county judge, signed by the requisite number of voters residing in magisterial district No. 1, which is composed of six voting precincts, including Central City, asking for a local option election in said magisterial district. Petitions were thereafter filed, signed by the requisite number of citizens of Central City, asking for a separate vote at the same time. The election was on August 31st ordered to be held on December 7th, and it was so held; the officers who officiated at the regular November election, 1907, acting as the officers of this election, except in cases where they had removed from the precinct or otherwise disqualified themselves. In this election on December 7th the district went dry by something like 400 and the city by 23. The residents of the city were with few exceptions denied the right to participate in the election for the district; separate ballots being furnished to the voters for the district election from those for the city election. The wets contested the validity of the election before the county board, and, its decision being adverse to their contention, they prosecuted an appeal to the circuit court, where they were again unsuccessful, and the case is brought before us for review.

Many reasons are assigned why the election should be set aside, the principal of which is that there was no authority in law to warrant the county judge in ordering a local option election in magisterial district No. 1, and from the conclusion which we have reached this is the only question which we will consider. Under the Oammack act, which became a law March 14, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 86, c. 21), the county is the absolute unit in all counties save those in which there is situated a city of the first, second, third, or fourth class, and in such counties all of the territory outside of such city limits is an absolute unit, and the city is made a separate unit. This was a complete reversal of the order of things that had theretofore existed, for under the law in force prior to the adoption of this act the precincts and incorporated towns of whatever class were recognized as separate units, and might take a separate vote upon the question as to whether or not local option should be enforced within a given boundary or territory. The old law was not satisfactory to the temperance or local option adherents, and, in order that the citizens in one part of a county might have a voice in determining whether or not prohibition should be enforced in another part of the county, the law was amended as above indicated so as to make the county the unit, and the only exception which the act recognizes is that cities of the first, second, third, and fourth class are made separate units, but in order for them to avail themselves of the right to be recognized as separate units, it is necessary that they should vote upon the same day upon which the vote is taken in the entire county when the question is submitted as to whether or not prohibition shall prevail in the county. So that, where a vote is ordered upon this question for the entire county in which there is situated a city of the first, second, third, or fourth class, unless a separate vote is asked for and had within the territorial limits of such city, it is bound by the result of the election in the entire county, and it is only where its citizens seek and are granted a separate vote on the same day that its right to be treated as a separate unit is recognized. Yates, County Judge, v. Nunnally, 125 Ky. 644, 102 S. W. 292, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 984.

Central City is a city of the fourth class. It had on the 6th of October, 1906, voted wet. The entire county outside of said city was at that time dry. No vote had been taken in the entire county since 1903, at which time it voted dry. It is most earnestly insisted for appellant that, inasmuch as the law expressly provides that no election can be held upon this question oftener than once in three years, the county judge had no right to order an election upon this question at all unless he had ordered it for the entire county; that there is no authority in law whatever for ordering a vote in a subdivision of a county other than a city of the first, second, third, or fourth class where such county has theretofore voted dry. The whole object of temperance legislation has been to bring about prohibition and create dry territory, and courts in dealing with this class of legislation have borne in mind this primary object of the Legislature, and have construed such acts as far as possible so as to carry out this legislative intent. Hence it has been held that where territory is wet where prohibition has not theretofore been enforced, any subdivision of a county may vote upon the question of establishing prohibition therein, but no subdivision of a county other than cities of the first, second, third, or fourth class may take a vote upon the question at all when prohibition is already enforced within such territorial limit. In other words, where no prohibitory laws are in force in the county, any magisterial district, voting precinct, or town of any class may vote to establish prohibition within the limits of such magisterial district, voting precinct, or town; but, where prohibition has been established in the entire county, a different rule obtains. A unit has been established, and the vote can never again be taken in any subdivision of that county other than in some one of the cities belonging to the excepted class, unless it is taken in the entire county. So that, where a precinct or magisterial district has once been made dry by a vote of the county, it must forever remain dry, unless the bond is lifted by the people of the entire county. Eggen, etc., v. Offutt, etc., 128 Ky. 314, 108 S. W. 383, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 1350. It is true, in the case to which we have just referred, this identical question was not before the court, but just the converse of the conditions with which we are dealing were under consideration. There the county was wet, and the precinct had taken a vote upon the question as to whether or not prohibition should be enforced within its limits and had voted dry, and the court held that it might do so, but in the same opinion distinctly stated that, if the county in which this precinct was situated had theretofore voted dry, the election would have been invalid, for prohibition having been established in the county, the unit, the will of the people therein could not be overthrown by the voters of any part of that unit.

Applying the rule announced in that case to the case at bar, we find that there are in Muhlenberg county two units of equal dignity, one including all of the county outside of the limits of Central City, the other including the territory within the limits of Central City, and, so long as the city preserves its identity by taking a vote upon the same day that the vote is taken in the entire county, its status cannot be changed by the will of the majority of the voting population of Muhlenberg county, much less of a magisterial district therein, and, the precinct or magisterial district in dry territory no longer being recognized as a unit, there was no authority under which the county judge could legally order the election in magisterial district No. 1, and, as a vote had been taken in Central City within less than three years from December 7, 1908, the county judge was without authority to order an election in said city on said date, and for these reasons both of said elections were illegal and absolutely void. This being true, it is unnecessary to consider the other questions raised upon this appeal.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the lower court to enter a judgment in conformity with this opinion, declaring each of said elections null and void.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. CO. et al. v. HAYNES.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 19, 1909.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 55*)—COMPUTATION—ACCRUAL OF ACTION.

A railroad in double-tracking its road in 1900 dug borrow pits, and several years after a stream overflowed its banks and ran into the pits, thereby changing the channel of the stream, which in 1906 and 1907 injured plaintiff's land and crops. Held, that the rule that, where an injury to real estate results from the construction of a permanent structure, the cause of action accrues on the completion of the structure, was not applicable, and an action for damages brought in 1908 was in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 305; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EXCLUDING ISSUES—DAMAGES.

In an action for injuries to plaintiff's land, the tiling in a ditch thereon, and crops by the change in the course of a stream, because of a railroad borrow pit, in which action there was evidence that the water washed wide, deep gullies through the land, and that the soil was carried away, an instruction on the measure of damages, which fails to charge on permanent injury to the land, is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 178*)—FLOWAGE—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In such case the measure of damages would be the sum sufficient to restore the tiling to the condition it was in prior to the overflow, the market value of the crops destroyed, and, if the injury was temporary, that diminution in the value of the use of the land during continuance of the injury, or, if permanent, the difference between the market value of the land before it was injured and after it was injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 251-255; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 179*)—FLOWAGE—DAMAGES—INSTRUCTION.

Where, in such action, there was evidence that prior overflows had caused injuries to plaintiff's land and crops, defendant was entitled to an instruction that there could be no recovery unless the change in the course of the stream caused the damage to plaintiff's land to a greater extent than it did prior to the acts complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 257; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carlisle County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by E. W. Haynes against the Illinois Central Railroad Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Trabue, Doolan & Cox, Robbins & Thomas, John E. Kane, Blewett Lee, and R. G. Robbins, for appellants. Shelbourne & Smith, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellee, E. W. Haynes, instituted this action against the Illinois Central Railroad Company et al. to recover damages for injury to his crops and land, alleged to have been caused by appellants. The jury returned a verdict in appellee's favor for $680. From the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellee, E. W. Haynes, is the owner of about 150 acres of land situated just south of Arlington, Ky., and along the line of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. The railroad was double-tracked about the year 1900, over and through the lands of appellee. In double-tracking their railroad, appellants dug some borrow pits. A few years later, Cane creek began to flow over the embankment next to the town of Arlington and into the borrow pits. This resulted in changing the channel of the stream. The water then continued in a straight course until it passed under a trestle at an abrupt angle. Drift logs and brush were allowed to lodge under the trestle and obstruct the water from flowing out. Owing to this fact, and the further fact that the water turned at an abrupt angle, it was caused to overflow the banks of the creek and to spread out over appellee's land. Appellee based his cause of action on the damage done in the years 1906 and 1907. He showed that his crops had been damaged, that the tiling which he had used in a ditch had been washed up, and that large gullies had been washed through his land.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is first contended by appellant that the court erred in failing to give an instruction under the statute of limitations. In this connection it is argued that, if the channel of the creek was changed, it was done in the year 1900, when the railroad was double-tracked. A careful reading of the evidence, however, shows that appellee's land suffered no material damages from the alleged overflows until the years 1906 and 1907. The assistant civil engineer of the railroad testified that, while the road was double-tracked in 1900, it was several years thereafter before the creek overflowed the embankment and made a new channel through the borrow pits. That being the case, it is manifest that the facts of this case do not bring it within the rule laid down in that line of opinions holding that, where an injury to real estate results from the construction of a permanent structure, the cause of action accrues upon the completion of the structure. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ky. 109, 15 S. W. 8, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 756; Hay v. City of Lexington, 114 Ky. 665, 71 S. W. 867, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1495; Johnson v. Owensboro & Nashville R. R. Co., 36 S. W. 8, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 276; Oliver v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 74 S. W. 1078, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 235. In these cases the injury was apparent to a reasonably prudent man at the time of the completion of the structure. In the case at bar the double-tracking of the railroad and the digging of the borrow pits did not cause immediate injury to appellee's land. His land was not damaged until a few years thereafter, when the creek overflowed the embankment and carried the new channel through the borrow pits. A party is not required to sue for damages to his land until it is reasonably apparent that he has suffered damages. If appellee's cause of action had accrued in the year 1900, then he might have lost his right of action long before he, as a matter of fact, suffered any damages. The only material damage, if any, to his land, took place in 1906 and 1907. The action was brought in 1908. It is manifest, therefore, that there was no evidence to justify the giving of an instruction based upon the statute of limitations.

It is next insisted that the court erred in defining the measure of damages. The instruction upon the measure of damages is as follows: "And in estimating the damages (if they believe he has sustained any damages) they will take into consideration the value of plaintiff's land before the water so deflected and thrown upon his land (if they believe the water was thrown upon the land of plaintiff), the injury to his said land by washing, carrying up the soil, cutting it in gullies, and any injury to the crops raised on the land in 1906 and 1907, not to exceed, however, the amount claimed in the petition." It is manifest from the foregoing instruction that the court gave the jury no guide by which to estimate the damages, if any, which appellee suffered. There was some evidence tending to show that the water washed wide, deep gullies through appellee's land, and that the soil was carried away. If this was true, then such injury would be permanent. In the case of Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Whitsell, 125 Ky. 433, 101 S. W. 334, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 76, the right of the jury to determine whether or not the injury is temporary or permanent is recognized, and it was there laid down that it was proper to submit to the jury that question. In the case at bar the jury should have been told that the measure of damages was: (1) A sum sufficient to restore the tilling to the condition it was in prior to the overflow complained of; (2) the market value of the crops destroyed, if any; (3) if the jury believed that the damage to the land was temporary, the diminution in the value of the use of the land during the continuance of the injury, or, if they believed that the injury to the land was of a permanent character, the difference between the market value of the land before it was injured and after it was injured. In other words, appellee, if he makes out his case, is entitled to recover a sum sufficient to restore the tilling to the condition it was in prior to the injury, also the market value of the crops destroyed, and such further sum as will compensate him either for the diminution in the value of the use of the land during the continuance of the injury, or for the difference in the market value before and after the injury; the last element depending upon whether or not the jury believes the injury to be permanent or temporary. And the jury should say in their verdict whether the injury to the land is temporary or permanent.

The witnesses, in testifying as to the amount of damages to appellee's property, did not comply with the rules laid down by this court. In this connection we call attention to the case of Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Smith, 110 Ky. 208, 61 S. W. 2, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1655, where the proper method of interrogating witnesses upon issues similar to those involved in this action is pointed out by this court.

There was some evidence tending to show that, prior to changing the channel of the creek and the obstruction of the water under the trestle, the waters of the creek overflowed appellee's land. That being the case, appellee cannot recover unless the change in the channel of the creek and the obstruction of the water caused the creek to overflow and damage appellee's land to a greater extent than it did prior to the acts complained of, and the jury should be so instructed.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

JOHN DIEBOLD & SONS v. WOLLBORN.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 18, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 959*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—AMENDMENT OF PETITION—REVIEW.

The petition, in an action by a stone mason for injuries received by falling from a platform while attempting to set in the wall of a building a stone hoisted and swung over the platform by a derrick, averred that the engine was not operated in a careful and proper manner and as a result he was violently struck and thrown from the platform. Several months afterwards he offered an amendment, which some time afterwards, and on the day of trial, he was allowed to file. The amended petition alleged that the superior servant under whom plaintiff was working failed to keep in communication with plaintiff, as he should have done, and thereby placed him in a position of danger unknown to plaintiff, who, while attempting to land the stone, was thrown and carried off the platform, and that this was due to the negligence of his superior in operating the engine. Held, that the court's discretion in permitting the amendment would not be interfered with; it not clearly appearing that its action prejudiced the adverse party's substantial rights.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 197*)—WHO ARE "FELLOW SERVANTS."

An engineer in charge of a derrick engine hoisting stone to be set in the walls of a building and a stone mason receiving and placing them in position were "fellow servants."

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 190*)—FELLOW SERVANTS—FOREMAN ENGAGING IN WORK.

A foreman, directing the work of constructing a building, was not, while temporarily running the engine by which the derrick was operated in the absence of the regular engineer, the fellow servant of a stone mason receiving stone from the derrick.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 452; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 190*)—VICE PRINCIPALS—FOREMAN TAKING PLACE OF ABSENT MAN.

When a foreman for the time being takes a place made vacant by the absence of a laborer who was under him, he does not surrender the duties and obligations of a superior; but the master will be responsible for his negligence if it results in injury to an employé also subordinate to the foreman.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Fred Wollborn against John Diebold & Sons. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bennett H. Young and Marlon W. Ripy, for appellants. Camden R. McAtee and J. B. McCormick, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee was employed as a stone mason for the appellants, who had the contract for the stonework on the City Hall Annex in Louisville. He was injured by falling from a platform upon which he was standing in an attempt to place and adjust a large stone that had been lifted from the ground to a point over the platform. The platform was on the inside of an unfinished wall and several feet below the top of it. The derrick and engine by which it was operated were located on the outside of the building, and the stone desired to be hoisted, which was also on the outside of the building, would be placed in a swing attached to a boom pole that was a part of the derrick, and lifted by the engine by means of the boom pole and ropes to a point above the top of the wall, and then the boom pole and stone attached thereto would be swung around so as to bring the stone on the inside of the wall and over the platform. When the stone was swung above the platform, Wollborn, standing on the platform, would take hold of the stone with his hands and put it immediately over the place on the wall where it was intended to be set, and then it would be lowered by the operation of the engine to its position on the wall. At the time Wollborn fell from the platform, two men besides himself were engaged in the work. Robinson was operating the engine, and Huddy, who had placed the swing around the stone on the ground, was on his way up to the platform to help Wollborn place the stone in position on the wall; but before he reached it Wollborn fell. Robinson was foreman, and one of his duties was to stand on the wall and direct the movement of the boom pole by signals to the engineer, as the engineer could not be seen by the person standing on the platform; but, on this occasion, the engineer was absent, and Robinson, the foreman, was acting in his place and running the engine.

It appears in the evidence that it was the duty of the engineer, when the stone was lifted over the wall and swung above the platform, to stop the engine and not start it until notified to do so. When the regular engineer was on duty, notice to him when to start and when to stop would be given by Robinson, who testifies that after the stone had been swung above the platform the engineer should not start the engine until notified. The negligence complained of was the failure of Robinson, who was operating the engine, to stop it when the stone had been lifted over the wall. The evidence of Wollborn—and there is no contradiction of it—shows that, when the stone was swung over the wall and above the platform, he caught hold of it, expecting that the engine would be stopped as had theretofore been done, but that Robinson failed to stop the engine, and the stone in some way carried him off the small platform, causing him to fall some 35 feet. The jury that tried the case assessed the damages in favor of Wollborn at $1,000.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The amount of the verdict is not complained of; but a reversal is asked (1) because the court erred in permitting an amended petition to be filed changing the grounds of negligence complained of in the original petition and in failing to grant a continuance, and (2) the refusal to direct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, now appellants.

The evidence is amply sufficient to support the theory of Wollborn that it was the duty of the engineer, when the stone was suspended over the platform, not to lower it by starting the engine until signaled so to do; and, although the evidence is not so satisfactory that the failure to stop the engine and the consequent lowering of the stone caused Wollborn to fall from the platform, there was yet enough evidence upon this point to authorize the jury in finding that the lowering of the stone without a signal caused Wollborn, who had hold of it, to lose his balance and fall.

In the petition it is averred that "the engine was not operated in a careful and proper manner, and as a result thereof the plaintiff was violently struck and thrown with great force from the point where he was working." Several months afterwards, and on the 3d day of February, 1909, the plaintiff offered to file an amended petition, in which the allegation was made that the superior servant under whom Wollborn was working failed to keep in communication with him, as he should have done, and thereby placed Wollborn in a position of danger unknown to Wollborn, who, while attempting to land the stone, was thrown or carried off the platform; and this was due to the negligence of the superior, Robinson, in operating the engine. Objection to the filing was made, and the matter taken under advisement by the court until February 10th, when the objection was overruled, the pleading allowed to be filed, and an order made controverting it of record. On the same day the trial was entered into. It does not appear that the appellant was at all prejudiced by the ruling of the court in permitting this amended pleading to be filed. In matters of this sort the trial court has a large discretion that will not be interfered with in the absence of a clear showing that the action of the court operated to prejudice the substantial rights of the adverse party.

The argument that a peremptory instruction should have been given is rested upon the ground that the engineer, whose negligence caused the accident and resulting injury, was a fellow servant of Wollborn. Under the authority of Dana v. Blackburn, reported in 121 Ky. 706, 80 S. W. 287 (but cited by counsel as being in 28 Ky. Law Rep. 695), and Cooper v. Oscar Daniels Co., 96 S. W. 1100, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 1172, if the regular engineer and not the foreman had been operating the engine, the contention of counsel would be well taken, as the engineer and Wollborn would be fellow servants; but the rule laid down in those cases does not apply when the foreman or superior servant at the time the negligent act is committed is present and performing the services of a fellow servant. When a foreman for the time being takes a place made vacant by the absence of a laborer who was under him, he does not surrender the duties and obligations of a superior; but the master will be responsible for his negligence if it results in injury to an employé who was also subordinate to the foreman. When Robinson, the foreman, undertook to perform the duties of the absent engineer, he was as much the representative of the master and the superior of Wollborn as when the regular engineer was present, and he was the superior of both. If the regular engineer had been present and had been directed by Robinson not to stop the engine after the stone was swung over the wall, and this instruction had resulted in injury to Wollborn, there could be no doubt that it would have been actionable negligence, in view of the testimony of Robinson that the engine should not be started until a signal to do so was given. This being so, the fact that Robinson in temporary charge of the engine was guilty of a like act of negligence rendered the master liable. It is aptly said in Illinois Central Railroad Company v. Coleman, 59 S. W. 13, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 878, where this precise point was under consideration, that: "The rule is well settled in this state that the master is responsible for the negligence of his superior servant to one under his control for an injury thereby caused him, and we are unable to see that it can make any difference whether the negligent act was done by his own hand or by another under his orders. The reason of the rule is that the superior servant represents the master, and it seems to us to apply with as much force in one case as the other." To the same effect is Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 82 S. W. 374, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 669, and Board v. Chesapeake & Ohio R. R. Co., 70 S. W. 625, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1079.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

LANDRUM & ADAMS v. WELLS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 315*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—QUANTITY OF LAND—DEFICIENCY—EVIDENCE—FINDINGS.

In an action to recover the balance of the price of certain land, evidence held to sustain a verdict finding: That plaintiffs at the time of the sale represented the land to contain 157 acres; that defendant believed and relied on the representation and was induced by it to purchase the land; that it was sold at a specified price per acre, and not in gross; and that he sustained a specified damage by reason of a deficiency.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 931; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 176*)—DEFICIENCY IN QUANTITY—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Where there was a deficiency of 33⅓ per cent. in the acreage of land sold over the vendor's representation, equity would grant the vendee relief, whether the sale was in gross or by the acre, or whether the loss occurred through fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 333-340; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 11*)—TRANSFER OF CAUSES—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES TO JURY.

Where a suit to enforce a vendor's lien was necessarily brought in equity, but the question whether plaintiffs were entitled to an enforcement of the lien depended on whether there was anything due them on the notes secured thereby, the court properly transferred the case to the law docket for a jury trial as to the amount due in accordance with defendant's demand under Civ. Code Prac. § 12, authorizing a transfer of equity causes for a jury trial of legal issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 30; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hickman County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by Landrum & Adams against C. W. Wells. Judgment for plaintiffs for less than the relief demanded, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Shelbourne & Smith, for appellants. Robins & Thomas and Joe W. Bennett, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. The appellants, Landrum & Adams, by deed of date May 25, 1907, sold and conveyed the appellee, C. W. Wells, a tract of land in Hickman county at the price of $6,500. Appellee at the time of receiving the deed paid appellants $3,500 of the purchase price, and for the remaining $3,000 executed to them his promissory notes of $1,500 each, payable 6 and 12 months from date, respectively. After maturity of the notes suit was brought upon them by appellants in the court below in which personal judgment was sought against appellee for the amount due on each of them, and, in addition, judgment asked for the enforcement of the vendor's lien retained on the land by the deed and for the sale of the land to pay them. Appellee by answer and counterclaim contended for certain credits upon the notes alleging that he had made various payments thereon in work, timber, and money, aggregating $880; the date and amount of each payment being given. The answer and counterclaim contained, in substance, the further averments: That, when appellants sold and conveyed appellee the land in question, they represented it to contain 157 acres and referred him to the deed made them by their vendors, Lane & Roberts, conveying them the land, for proof of the fact, which was then of record and purported to convey 157 acres; that believing and relying upon this representation, and having no personal knowledge himself of the true quantity, appellee was induced to purchase the land, and did purchase it, at the price of $41.40 per acre, or $6,500 for the whole; but that, after his purchase thereof and his payment of $3,500 and acceptance of the deed made him by appellants, he received information and later discovered that the land contained by correct survey only 104 acres, thereby making a shortage of 53 acres, and causing appellee a loss and damage of $2,194.20, for which, and the several payments alleged to have been made by him to appellants, he asked credit upon the notes sued on. Appellants by reply traversed the affirmative matter of appellee's answer and counterclaim, and after thus completing the pleadings, the circuit court, on appellee's motion, transferred the case to the ordinary docket for a trial before a jury of the issues of fact made by the pleadings, to which ruling of the court the appellants at the time excepted. On the trial the jury allowed appellee all the credits and damages asked in his answer and counterclaim, and returned a verdict in appellants' favor for $20.08. The case was then remanded to the equity docket, following which judgment was entered in conformity to the verdict. Thereafter appellants filed a motion and grounds for a new trial; but the motion was overruled, and they have appealed.

Without discussing in detail the evidence, we deem it only necessary to say that much of it conduced to prove that appellants did, as claimed by appellee, represent that the tract of land sold and conveyed him contained 157 acres. Proof of this fact was not confined to the testimony of appellee alone, but was also testified by others, among them Lane, one of the persons of whom appellants purchased the land they sold appellee. Lane testified that appellants told him, the same day they conveyed the land to appellee, that, as to the number of acres in the tract, they referred appellee "to the records at Clinton for information," meaning the deed from Lane & Roberts to them, recorded in the county clerk's office, which described the land they sold appellee as containing 157 acres. Indeed, the appellant Landrum in effect admitted that he referred appellee to the Lane and Roberts deed for information as to the number of acres in the tract of land purchased by appellee. Appellee, however, claimed in testifying that Landrum positively represented to him that the tract contained 157 acres, and in addition referred him to the Lane & Roberts deed for confirmation of the statement. It is likewise true that Landrum testified that he told appellee some one had claimed there were only 115 acres in the tract, but that he did not know. He admitted, however, that this statement was made to appellee after the latter had made the cash payment on the land and accepted the deed therefor.

We do not mean to say that appellants did not furnish evidence in support of their claim that they did not represent the land to contain 157 acres. They, in part, so testified themselves, and were supported in some measure by other witnesses introduced in their behalf; but on the whole evidence we cannot say that the weight of it tended to sustain their version of the contract. At any rate, there was evidence from which the jury might conclude: First, that appellants at the time of the sale and conveyance of the land to appellee represented it to contain 157 acres; second, that appellee believed and relied upon the representation and was induced by it to purchase the land; third, that it was sold to him at $41.40 per acre, and not in gross; fourth, that he sustained a loss of $2,194.20 by reason of the 53-acre deficit in the land. As the foregoing conclusions of fact were evidently arrived at by the jury, and it was admitted that the land sold appellee contains only 104 acres, their reasons for the verdict returned can readily be understood. There seems to be little conflict in the evidence as to the payments made by appellee upon the notes held by appellants, and for them he was properly given credit by the jury. The shortage of 53 acres shown in this case constitutes a deficit of more than 33½ per cent. Such a loss is excessive, and shows that it could not have been intended or contemplated by the parties that it would or could occur. So, whether the sale of the land was in gross or by the acre, or the loss occurred through the fraud or mistake of the vendors, certainly no court of equity should refuse relief upon such facts as are here presented. In numerous cases relief has been granted by the courts where the deficiency was as low as 15 or even 10 per cent. Shelby v. Smith's Heirs, 2 A. K. Marsh. 513; Smith v. Smith, 4 Bibb, 81; Hazlip v. Austill, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 982. As said in Young v. Craig, 2 Bibb, 270, and quoted with approval in several later decisions of this court: "The equity of such case must depend upon its own peculiar circumstances. The relative extent of the surplus or deficit cannot per se furnish an infallible criterion; but the conduct of the parties, the date of the contract, the value, extent and locality of the land, the price, and other nameless circumstances, are always important and generally decisive." Harrison v. Talbot, 2 Dana, 258; Hall v. Ely, 76 S. W. 848, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 954; Collins v. Stodghill, 79 S. W. 185, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 2015. In view of what we have said of the effect of the evidence, we perceive no reason for sustaining appellants' contention that the verdict is not supported by the evidence.

Appellants insist that the trial court erred in transferring the action from the equity to the law docket, and submitting to a jury the trial of the issues of fact. This was not error. Section 12, Civ. Code Prac., provides: "In an equitable action, properly commenced as such, either party may by motion have the case transferred to the ordinary docket for the trial of any issue concerning which he is entitled to a jury trial; but either party may require every equitable issue to be disposed of before such transfer." Necessarily appellants had to bring their action in equity, as they sought an enforcement of a vendor's lien upon the land they had sold and conveyed appellee. The question of whether they were entitled to an enforcement of the lien depended upon whether there was anything due them upon the notes to secure which the lien was given. So there was no equitable issue for the court to determine until the questions of fact were determined, for the trial of which the case was transferred to the ordinary docket. In other words, as appellants' equitable right depended upon the decision of issues of fact concerning which appellee demanded a jury trial, it was not error for the court to grant the jury trial. Carder & Vallandingham v. Weisenburgh, 95 Ky. 135, 23 S. W. 964, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 497; Meek v. McCall, 80 Ky. 375; Hill v. Phillips et al., 87 Ky. 169, 7 S. W. 917, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 31.

We have been unable to find any ground for appellants' complaint that the court improperly admitted or excluded testimony. We think the record is free of error in that respect.

We are also of opinion that appellants' objection to the instructions given by the court are groundless. The instructions are too numerous to copy in the opinion, but, on the whole, fairly gave the jury all the law necessary to guide them in arriving at their verdict.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. MARCUM.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Oct. 20, 1909.)

1. SEARCHES AND SEIZURES (§ 7*)—MISDEMEANORS—ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT—STATUTES.

Ky. St. § 806 (Russell's St. § 5350), makes it an offense, punishable by a fine and imprisonment in the county jail, for any person while riding on a train in the hearing or presence of other passengers, and to their annoyance, to use obscene or profane language, or behave in a boisterous or riotous manner, and makes it the duty of the conductor either to put such person off the train, or to give notice of violation of the section to some peace officer at the first stopping place where such officer may be, who may arrest the offender without a warrant. Held, that such act was valid, and not objectionable in so far as it authorized such arrest, as violating Const. § 10, providing that the people shall be secure from unreasonable searches and seizures.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Searches and Seizures, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 351*)—PASSENGERS—EJECTION—DISORDERLY CONDUCT.

Ky. St. § 806 (Russell's St. § 5350), providing for the ejection of passengers on railroad trains guilty of disorderly conduct or obtaining or attempting to obtain money or property from any person by any game or device, etc., is reasonable and valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 105*)—ARREST—MISDEMEANORS—USE OF FORCE.

An officer having a right to arrest for a misdemeanor may use such force, if resisted, as is necessary or reasonably appears to the officer necessary in the exercise of a sound judgment to overcome the resistance and make the arrest, but he may not, while the resistance is not forcible, wantonly shoot or injure the person sought to be apprehended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 135; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 298*)—DEFENSES—RESISTANCE—FORCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that it was a public offense for a passenger to behave boisterously in the presence of other passengers, and that it was the conductor's duty either to eject the offending person or give notice to a peace officer at the first stopping place, and that it was the peace officer's duty to arrest the offender and carry him to the most convenient magistrate of the county, and in making the arrest the officer could use such force as was necessary, even to taking the life of the offender, but that he should not use unnecessary violence, nor shoot the offender unless the arrest could not otherwise be made—was objectionable, as eliminating the necessity that the resistance must be forcible, and the idea that the officer might act on appearances in the exercise of reasonable judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 612; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 298*)—EXECUTION OF DUTY—RESISTANCE TO ARREST—INSTRUCTION.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction as to the right of defendant, a city marshal, to shoot one whom a train conductor had requested to have arrested for disorderly conduct in case of resistance to the arrest, held proper.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lawrence County.

"To be officially reported."

Fred Marcum was indicted for murder, and, after a mistrial, the Commonwealth certified certain questions to the Court of Appeals.

Byrd & Davis, Calloway Howard, and Hopkins & Hopkins, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth. W. D. O'Neal, for appellee.

BARKER, J. The appellee, Fred Marcum, was jointly indicted with Frank Blevins and James Sizemore by the grand jury of Lawrence county, Ky., charged with the offense of willful murder, committed by shooting John Whittaker with a pistol and inflicting wounds upon him of which he then and there died. The defendants all pleaded not guilty to the indictment, and, when the case was called for trial, the appellee, Fred Marcum, demanded a severance from his codefendants, which was granted him. Thereupon the commonwealth elected to try him first, and a trial was then and there had, with the result that the jury were unable to agree upon a verdict, and were discharged by the court from further consideration of the case.

Afterwards the commonwealth's attorney, as by law authorized, certified the record to this court for the purpose of having adjudicated the propriety of giving instructions Nos. 5 and 6 to the jury, and of the court's refusal to give to the jury instruction No. 1 asked for the commonwealth. The court gave the usual instructions in murder cases, and in addition gave Nos. 5 and 6, which are as follows:

"(5) The court further instructs the jury that it is a public offense for any person while riding on a passenger train, to, in the hearing or presence of the passengers, and to their annoyance, use or utter obscene or profane language, or behave in a boisterous or riotous manner, and it is the duty of the conductor in charge of a train upon which any such offense is committed either to put the person so offending off the train, or to give notice of such offense to some peace officer at the first stopping place where any such peace officer may be, and it is the duty of such peace officer when so notified by such conductor to arrest such offender, and carry him to the most convenient magistrate of the county in which such arrest is made; and in making such arrest such peace officer has the right to use such force as is necessary therefor, even to the taking of the life of the offender, but not the right to use unnecessary violence, nor to shoot the offender, unless such offender resist such arrest, and such arrest cannot be otherwise made.

"(6) A city marshal is a peace officer of the county in which the city is located of which he is marshal, and if the jury should believe from the evidence that Frank Blevins was the conductor in charge of the train upon which the deceased Whittaker was riding at the time that he was killed, and further believe from the evidence that said Blevins as such conductor, in Lawrence county, Ky., while such conductor in charge of said train and on said run, and before said killing was done, complained to and notified the defendant, Marcum, as marshal of the city of Louisa, Lawrence county, Ky., that the deceased Whittaker had on his (Blevins') train, on said run, committed a public offense as defined in said instruction No. 5, and that as such marshal in the discharge of his official duties in good faith attempted to arrest the deceased, and while so engaged the deceased, with the intent to prevent and with force resisted such arrest and assaulted the defendant, and there appeared to defendant Marcum, exercising a reasonable judgment on the time and under the circumstances, no other safe way to save his life or to protect himself from great bodily harm or to make such arrest than to shoot and kill the deceased, then in such event the jury will acquit the defendant upon the grounds of self-defense or apparent necessity."

The commonwealth tendered to the court, and asked that it be given to the jury, instruction No. 1, which was refused. It is as follows: "It was the duty of the defendant in attempting to arrest the deceased to inform him of his intention to arrest him and of the offense charged against him, and if the jury believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant failed to perform said duties, or either of them, and they further believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the deceased did not know the defendant's purpose and the offense charged against him, then the deceased had the right under the law to use such force as was necessary or reasonably appeared to him to be necessary to protect him from danger or death, or great bodily harm then about to be inflicted on him by the defendant."

The facts out of which grew the killing for which the appellant was indicted are as follows: The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company on Sunday, January 11, 1909, ran an excursion train through Lawrence county, Ky., to Catlettsburg. The deceased, John Whittaker, and his two brothers, Caleb and Frank, with several friends and acquaintances, went on this excursion. When the party reached Catlettsburg, John Whittaker and his friends proceeded to have a good time by getting drunk and visiting houses of prostitution. At one of these, John Whittaker got into an altercation with one of the women in the house, and drew his pistol, flourishing it about in a reckless manner. One of his companions, Sam Robinson, in order to keep him out of trouble, took the pistol from the drunken man, and placed it in his own pocket. The train returned at night, and John Whittaker and his party had with them a suit case containing six quarts of whisky and gin, of which they partook freely, and were in a hilarious and boisterous mood. The conductor, Frank Blevins, warned John Whittaker several times to keep quiet, and not to make a disturbance, and finally said to him: "You have got to cut that out (meaning his boisterous behaviour), for I have got a man on this train who will take you off." He referred to the appellee, Fred Marcum, who was marshal of Louisa. When the train reached Lawrence county, Marcum, at the instance and request of the conductor, Blevins, went into the car where Whittaker and his party were for the purpose of arresting those who were boisterous and unruly. They first arrested Sam Robinson, who, as before stated, had taken John Whittaker's pistol from him in Catlettsburg. In making this arrest they mistook Robinson for Whittaker; they both wearing white hats, and looking something alike. Robinson submitted quietly to the arrest, and went with the officer and conductor to another car, where he explained to them that they were mistaken in the man, and told them that he had taken a pistol from Whittaker to keep him out of trouble. Thereupon the officer released Robinson, and with the conductor went back into the car for the purpose of finding and arresting John Whittaker. Whittaker and his brothers, who had seen the arrest of Sam Robinson, undertook to avoid the arrest of John Whittaker by the following ruse: John left the seat he was occupying, went in the forward part of the car, and on the opposite side of the aisle from where he had been sitting or standing, and took a seat by a little boy; and, in order to conceal him, one of his brothers sat on the arm of the seat, and leaned over John so as to screen him from ordinary observation. This necessitated somewhat of a search by the officer and the conductor, with the result that the conductor, Blevins, finally discovered John, and said to the officer, "Here he is. This is your man," or words to that effect. Thereupon the marshal, Marcum, put his hand upon the shoulder or neck of Whittaker, and said to him: "You must go with me. You are under arrest." Thereupon Whittaker replied: "I haven't done anything, and I will not go." The marshal then said, "Oh, yes; you will," and then gave him a pull or jerk with his hand. Thereupon John Whittaker immediately assaulted the officer, knocking him down, or very nearly knocking him down, and his brothers, and perhaps others, at once assaulted the marshal and conductor, Blevins, and a general and free fight resulted, creating the greatest confusion and consternation among the passengers, many of whom left or tried to leave the car. The marshal, was badly beaten about the face, the blood running freely from a wound on his head down in his eyes. In the midst of the mêlée he drew his pistol and shot John Whittaker in the left breast, and he sank into his seat, and there died within a few minutes.

We have not recited all of the mass of testimony that was adduced upon the trial. The evidence for the commonwealth and that for the defendant differs as to the degree of noise or boisterous conduct of Whittaker and his friends, but the evidence for the commonwealth sufficiently shows the facts to be substantially as stated in this opinion. We feel that it is sufficient for the purposes of this case merely to give a general outline of the evidence so that the principles of law certified to us may be properly understood. The arrest of John Whittaker by the constable was under the authority of section 806, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 5350), which is as follows: "If any person whilst riding on a passenger or other train, shall, in the hearing or presence of other passengers, and to their annoyance, use or utter obscene or profane language, or behave in a boisterous or riotous manner, or obtain, or attempt to obtain, money or property from any passenger by any game or device, he shall be fined for each offense not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not less than ten nor more than fifty days, or both so fined and imprisoned; and it shall be the duty of the conductor in charge of any train upon which there is a person who has violated the provisions of this section either to put such person off the train, or to give notice of such violation to some peace officer at the first stopping place where any such officer may be." The commonwealth challenges the constitutionality of the foregoing statute as being inimical to section 10 of the Constitution, which provides: "The people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions, from unreasonable search and seizure. * * * " And in support of this view cite the case of Jainson v. Gaernett, etc., 10 Bush, 221. In that case it was insisted that the charter of the city of Louisville authorized policemen to arrest, with or without a warrant, persons guilty of offenses against the laws or ordinances of the city. The court in denying that the charter authorized policemen to make arrests contrary to the general law of the state said, after quoting the charter: "We do not regard this enactment as necessarily conflicting with the general law which defines and limits the power of the arresting officer; but, if we did so construe it, we should hesitate to decide that it was not an infringement of the constitutional guaranty of security to the people 'in their persons, houses, papers, and possessions against unreasonable seizure and searches.'" And then the opinion goes on to hold that policemen of the city of Louisville must make arrests in accordance with the general law bearing upon the subject. The opinion in this case is not conclusive of the question of the constitutionality of the statute we have under consideration. It may well be doubted whether policemen could constitutionally be authorized to make arrests for violations of municipal ordinances not committed in their presence without a warrant; and there would be ample room for the argument that the granting of such power would be unreasonable within the meaning of section 10 of the Constitution. But that is not the case we have here. The statute we are construing was enacted for the protection of the traveling public—men, women, and children—from unlawful conduct on the part of fellow passengers. If a conductor could not be empowered to forcibly eject a passenger violating the foregoing statute, or to have the offender arrested as soon as a peace officer could be obtained, then we are not able to see how a railroad corporation could protect its passengers from the unlawful deeds of boisterous or disorderly or drunken persons on the train. Railroad corporations are engaged in the business of carrying passengers for long distances. Their trains ordinarily run through many counties as well as through different states. The passengers are necessarily more or less crowded together in close proximity, and their safety is in a measure at the mercy of each other. If the law-abiding cannot be protected from insult or violence by the lawless, it necessarily follows that traveling by railroad will become essentially a hazardous undertaking, independently of the ordinary dangers of accident or misfortune. The law is a growing science, and the Legislature is constantly engaged in advancing its protecting sanctions so as to safeguard the lives and the liberty of the citizen against outrage and violence. Whenever there is a special need for a new statute to protect the citizen in his rights, then it is the duty of the Legislature to enact such a statute. It was in obedience to this duty that the statute under consideration was enacted for the protection of the traveling public in their right to be transported in railroad cars free from the danger of insult, outrage, or violence by lawless men.

So much of the statute under consideration as authorized the conductor under the circumstances described in the statute to eject a passenger from his train was recognized and upheld as lawful by this court in the case of Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. v. Crank, 128 Ky. 329, 108 S. W. 276, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 1202, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197. But the statute not only authorizes the conductor to eject a passenger who offends against its provisions, but authorizes him to obtain the assistance of a peace officer as soon as he can get into the presence of such an officer, and empowers the peace officer upon the demand of the conductor to arrest the offender without a warrant. This must necessarily be so if the statute is to have any efficient force or effect. The train could not be held at a station until the conductor could go and swear out the warrant for the arrest of the offender. To require this would nullify the statute. Laws are not made for the benefit of criminals, but for the protection of the innocent, and, if the statute was so framed as to require the issuance of the warrant as a prerequisite to the arrest of the violator of the statute, it would enable the guilty always to escape, and thus take from the innocent all hope of protection. The statute is not only constitutional, but it is an exceedingly wise and beneficent law. It puts into the hands of the railroad corporation the power to protect its innocent passengers by authorizing the conductor to eject offenders from his train or to cause them to be arrested by the first peace officer whose services he can secure.

The question as to whether a search or seizure of the person of the citizen is reasonable under the Constitution is a relative one. It might not be reasonable to seize or search the person of a citizen for a misdemeanor where he was at large in the city or country, and where the circumstances would generally be such that a warrant could be secured in advance of the arrest. But it would not be reasonable to require the officers to wait for a warrant if the offense was a felony, because here the gravity of the offense and the importance to the public of the prompt seizure of the criminal overrides the unreasonableness of the search or seizure without a warrant. And so, in the case at bar, the circumstances which require the arrest of an offender against the statute are such as to make it reasonable that a peace officer should be authorized upon the request of the conductor of a train to arrest a violator without a warrant, and without the offense for which the arrest was to be made being done in the presence of the officer. The law, being a practical science, regards the necessities of the case, the danger to the public, and the opportunity for the escape of the offender, and arranges the remedy so as to protect the innocent, trespassing upon the liberty of the citizen as little as possible in order to secure the protection of the public. No law, therefore, can be considered unreasonable which is necessary to protect the public from violence or outrage at the hands of the lawless. And, if such a law seems to give an undue amount of absolute authority into the hands of the officers having in charge its administration, it must be remembered that this is the price that the people pay for protection; for, after all, government is but the sum total of the natural liberty of the citizen surrendered up in return for law and order and peace and safety.

We will now consider instructions 5 and 6, given by the court, and which are objected to by the commonwealth. In the case of Stevens v. Commonwealth, 124 Ky. 32, 98 S. W. 284, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 290, we had occasion to examine the question as to the force which a peace officer is authorized to use in making an arrest where the party is charged with a misdemeanor, and in the opinion in that case the decisions by our court are reviewed, as well as the text-books bearing upon the subject, and from the principles there enunciated we have never departed. In the opinion it is clearly stated that an officer having a right to arrest for a misdemeanor, if he be forcibly resisted, may use such force as is necessary, or reasonably appears to the officer necessary in the exercise of a sound judgment, to overcome such force and to make the arrest. But he has not the right, where the resistance is not forcible, to wantonly shoot or injure the person charged with a crime. In the case cited an instruction was formulated which, with slight changes to meet the necessities of the varying facts, would have well served for the instruction in this case. Instruction No. 5, given by the court, is objectionable, in that it does not present the idea that the resistance of the offender to the proposed arrest must be a forcible resistance. Nor does it present the idea that the officer may act upon what appears to him to be necessary in the exercise of a reasonable judgment. Therefore No. 5 should be modified so as to make it read, commencing with the last semicolon, as follows: " * * * And in making such arrest, such peace officer has the right to use such force as is reasonably necessary therefor, if the arrest be forcibly resisted, even to the taking of the life of the offender, but he has not the right to use unnecessary force or violence, nor to shoot or otherwise injure the offender, unless such offender forcibly resists the arrest and the arrest can not be otherwise made, or it appears to the officer, in the exercise of a reasonable judgment, that it can not be otherwise made." Instruction No. 6 is not subject to criticism, and upon another trial may be given as on the first.

The commonwealth was entitled to have the jury instructed, in accordance with the provisions of section 39 of the Criminal Code of Practice, that it was the duty of the officer, before making the arrest, to inform the offender that he was about to be arrested and the offense for which he was to be arrested, unless the decedent knew these facts, in which latter case it was not necessary to inform him of that which he already knew. The court should, in addition, have told the jury plainly that it was the duty of the peace officer to arrest the offender upon the verbal request or demand of the conductor, and that in making the arrest the peace officer was not required to examine into the guilt or innocence of the offender whom the conductor asked to have arrested, and it was the duty of the decedent to submit to a lawful arrest at the hands of the peace officer, whether or not he had done anything which justified the arrest. In order to make the statute effective, it was necessary to authorize the officer to make the arrest upon the verbal request of the conductor. It does not contemplate that the offense should have been committed in the presence of the officer, and therefore the officer was authorized to act under the direction of the conductor. It may be that this construction will occasionally work a hardship upon the citizen, but, as said before, this hardship is necessary in the individual instance in order to effectuate a statute which is intended to subserve a great and general good. And the citizen who is oppressed unlawfully by its operation has his remedy against the railroad corporation for malicious prosecution.

It is therefore now ordered that this opinion be certified to the trial court, as by law required.

CRAWFORD v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 18, 1909.)
CARRIERS (§ 297*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—NEGLIGENCE.

A carrier operating its train at the ordinary rate of speed is not liable to a passenger thrown from the back platform, on which he was riding, while the train was on a curve, on the ground that the train was operated at a dangerous rate of speed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1204; Dec. Dig. § 297.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Clark County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by W. Anderson Crawford against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. M. Beckner, for appellant. Fred P. Caldwell, Benjamin D. Warfield, Pendleton, Bush & Bush, and John T. Shelby, for appellee.

BARKER, J. The appellant, W. Anderson Crawford, boarded the train of the appellee railroad company at Winchester, Ky., for the purpose of being transported to his home at Elkins, Ky. The car was somewhat crowded, and he took a seat upon the back platform of the rear car, intending to prevent himself from falling by holding on to the iron handrails. The conductor came around, found him on the back platform, and collected his fare without saying anything to him. When the train reached Elkins, which was the station of appellant, he did not observe that it was the place to get off the car, and claims that he did not hear any announcement made of the station. As a result, he was carried beyond Elkins, and he then made up his mind to leave the train at Ford and go home from there. Just before he reached Ford, the train encountered a curve which was in a cut. When the car upon which appellant was sitting struck this curve he was thrown from the platform, striking his head against the side of the cut, receiving severe injuries, to recover damages for which he instituted this action. The basis of appellant's claim for recovery, as set forth in his petition, is that the train was operated at a high and dangerous rate of speed, which caused it to lurch so severely when it struck the curve above mentioned that he was thrown off the platform and injured. The defendant answered controverting all the material allegations of the petition, and pleading, in addition thereto, the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. When the issues were made up a trial was had before a jury, and at the close of plaintiff's testimony the circuit judge sustained a motion made by defendant corporation for a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for it. Of this instruction the plaintiff (appellant) complains.

The court ruled correctly in sustaining the motion for a peremptory instruction. There is not the slightest evidence in the case that the train was being operated at a high or dangerous rate of speed, or that it was being operated in any other way than on schedule time. Appellant's own evidence on this subject is to the effect that he did not know whether the train was running faster than usual or not. His testimony on this subject was as follows: "The train seemed to be running fast, and mighty fast when I was thrown off, as I have told. It was down-grade, and seemed to be running very fast; but I do not know whether it was unusually fast or not. I do not know that it was running faster than usual. I was holding tight to the rail when I was thrown off." No witness said the train was running faster than the ordinary schedule time. The allegation of the pleading that the train was operated at a high and dangerous rate of speed was not sustained by the evidence; and, this being the only negligence alleged or attempted to be shown, it seems to us that there was nothing for the court to do but award a peremptory instruction at the close of plaintiff's testimony. He knew when he took a seat on the platform that there is always danger attending such a position. All railroads have curves, and, as a rule, the trains are operated quite fast. To operate the trains so as to travel rapidly is one of the great utilities of the railroad system, and plaintiff was bound to know, if he sat outside of the car on the platform, that when the fast-moving car struck a curve he was liable to be thrown off. We do not see wherein the company was negligent.

Judgment affirmed.

BOGGS v. BUSH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 19, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 176*)—DEFICIENCY IN QUANTITY OF LAND SOLD—SUIT TO ABATE PRICE—DEFENSES.

In the negotiations the vendor represented that the land contained 90 acres, and a survey showed that quantity. A deed was given conveying 90 acres "more or less," and thereafter it was discovered that through an error in calls the tract contained 78 acres, and the purchaser sued in equity for relief against the deficiency on the ground of mistake or fraud. Held, that a contention that the purchaser got all he bargained for, and that there was no loss of any part of the property, was not pertinent, though it might be in an action for breach of warranty, since the gist of the present action was mistake or fraud.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 176*)—DEFICIENCY IN QUANTITY OF LAND—ABATEMENT OF PRICE—SALE BY ACRE OR IN GROSS.

In such case, the unit of measure of land in fixing the price being the acre, it is immaterial whether the sale was by the acre or in gross, since if by the acre the vendor was entitled to the quantity represented, and if in gross the buyer was entitled to relief against a deficit so great as was probably not within the contemplation of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 333-336, 358; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 113*)—QUANTITY OF LAND CONVEYED—"MORE OR LESS."

The words "more or less" in a deed relieve only from the necessity for exactness, and not from gross deficiency.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 176*)—QUANTITY OF LAND—PERCENTAGE OF DEFICIT.

Since it is a rule that relief will be denied for a deficit which is less than 10 per cent. and granted where 10 or more, the purchaser was entitled to relief for the deficit of 12 acres out of 90.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Madison County.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by W. B. Boggs against R. F. Bush to recover for a deficit in land sold. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. A. Sullivan and S. M. Wallace, for appellant. J. C. & D. M. Chenault, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. Appellee, Bush, sold and conveyed to appellant, Boggs, two tracts of land in Estill county, for the consideration of $1,400. The description of the land contained in the deed is as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the branch, Prather corner on the Kentucky river, thence up said branch as it meanders N. 6½° W., 20 poles, N., 26 poles; thence N. 6° W., 24 poles, to a hickory on said branch; thence N. 59½° E., 6.2 poles, to a bunch of walnut bushes; thence with a Nest line between Floyd and the said Bush, N. 78¼° W., 14 poles, to a stone; thence N. 46¼° W., 15 poles, to a fence post; thence N., to a stone in Bogle's line, corner to Ware and said Bush; thence a straight line S. W. to a locust tree near an old icehouse containing a straight line to a stone corner to Ware and Hendrix; thence with Hendrix's line S. 10° E., 136 poles, to a stake on the N. bank of the Kentucky river; thence up said river N. 68° E., 107 poles, to the beginning, containing 90 acres more or less. Also a tract of woodland containing 10 acres more or less and lying on the north side of Browning creek and Liberty road, joining lands of Jas. Hall, Lewis Richardson, and others." In this suit by appellant against his grantor, Bush, it is claimed that the tract described as containing "90 acres more or less" was actually only 78 acres. The plaintiff's damage is laid at $250. He sues upon the ground that the sale to him was by the acre; or, if not, that the deficit was so large as to fall within the rule that it was not within the contemplation of the parties, and was therefore a mistake, a misrepresentation, from which a court of equity will grant relief. It was denied in the answer that the sale was by the acre. It was averred, on the contrary, that it was a sale in gross, and that as a matter of fact the grantee got by the conveyance all the land that was sold or intended to be sold to him, and all that he thought he was buying. The circuit court denied plaintiff the relief for which he prayed, basing the judgment upon the ground that the sale was in gross, and that the discrepancy in quantity was not enough to warrant a restitution of a proportionate part of the consideration. The circuit court also held that it was inadmissible to show by extraneous evidence the negotiation leading up to the sale and execution of the deed; that the trial must be confined to the examination of the deed alone.

The proof was: That the parties went upon the land pending the negotiation, when the lines of the first-described tract were pointed out to appellee by appellant; that appellee believed that boundary contained 90 acres, and so represented to appellant; that upon appellant's request that it be surveyed appellee, no doubt acting in good faith, responded that it had been surveyed, at least the boundary had been calculated a short while before, and that it contained 90 acres. He refused to have it surveyed again. Appellant did not know that the boundary contained less than 90 acres. The discrepancy arose from an error in one of the calls, contained in the description appearing in the deed to appellee—where the call was for a course "N. 6½° W.," it should have been "N. 62½° W." If it were run N. 6½°, the line would extend over onto another man's land, and would make the boundary embrace probably 90 acres; but, if the area is calculated with reference to the true course of that line N. 62½° W., it embraces only 78 acres. Some few years later, when appellant sold the land, his purchaser demanding a survey of the tract, it was discovered that the true area was only 78 acres. Appellee contends that appellant got all the land he bargained for, and, whether it was 78 acres or 90 acres, there was not a loss of any part of the property; but we do not regard this contention as pertinent. It would be upon an action for breach of warranty of title; but that is not this action. Always in actions such as this the claim is not for a failure of title, but is for the deceit practiced by the successful party in inducing the buyer to believe he was getting that which he did not get by the conveyance, or upon the mutual mistake of the parties so great as to be inconsistent with the presumption that it was within their contemplation as one of the natural and usual results likely to arise from casual errors of measurement, calculation, or observation.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

We do not regard the question as a material one in this case whether the sale was by the acre or in gross. If it was by the acre, then it does not matter whether the deficiency is great or small; the number of acres represented must be within the boundary. If in gross, if the deficiency is so great as was probably not within the contemplation of the parties, the buyer is entitled to relief upon the same basis of computation as if the sale had been by the acre. The quantity or area of land embraced by a sale, described by metes and bounds, is, or at least may be, an essential inducement to the bargain. Farm lands are frequently, perhaps most frequently, sold by the acre, or are sold at a valuation into which the number of acres enters as a material feature of the trade. While the recitation of the number of acres is a part of the description of the land, or may be, it is, not unusually, more than that. The purchaser buys not only the particular body of land, but the quantity it is represented to contain; the latter feature of the bargain affecting the amount of consideration to be paid. The unit of measure of land in this country is the acre, as of wheat it is the bushel, and of certain other articles the pound. True, the bargain in a particular instance might be without respect to such unit. In that case the principle we are discussing would not apply; but where the unit of measure is considered and treated as an element of the trade, upon which the consideration is in some part rested, it is not perceived how it can be disregarded subsequently in measuring the rights of the parties, as an immaterial matter. The addition of the qualifying clause "more or less" relieves only the necessity for exactness. It indicates that the parties contemplated making some allowance for those inaccuracies that are usual in such measurements, and that they each took the chance of the fact being, if ascertained with accuracy, that the quantity was somewhat more or somewhat less than was represented. The difficulty arises, in administering relief upon complaint, in determining the limit. While the courts have not set a rule applicable to all cases, in Kentucky no case to which our attention has been called has granted the relief where the deficit was less than 10 per cent., and none where it was refused where the deficit was as much or more than 10 per cent. In the early history of the state, when lands were cheap, and in consequence surveying was frequently attended with inaccuracies because, perhaps, it did not pay to take the time and go to the labor and expense necessary to secure greater exactness, more latitude for discrepancy was allowed. As values have enhanced, and surveying has been more carefully done, there is less reason for, and would be more injustice in, applying the rule of ancient times. The following cases are the basis for the principles advanced above: Harrison v. Talbot, 2 Dana, 266; Smith v. Smith, 4 Bibb, 81; Shelby v. Shelby's Heirs, 2 A. K. Marsh. 504; Hall v. Ely (Ky.) 76 S. W. 848; Anderson v. Dawson (Ky.) 118 S. W. 953; Anthony v. Hudson (Ky.) 114 S. W. 782; Landrum & Adams v. Wells (opinion delivered November 17, 1909) 122 S. W. 213.

In the early and leading case of Harrison v. Talbot, supra, indeed throughout the cases on the subject, it appears that the court may look to extraneous evidence to show the nature of the transaction, to enable it to determine whether the sale was in gross or by the acre, or whether, under the circumstances of the particular case, equity required the granting of the relief. The action is based upon deceit or mistake. Each presupposes that the written memorial is incomplete. If the rules of evidence precluded a resort to anything but the document to determine the fact, it would often happen that the ends of equity would be defeated by the rigidity of a rule of law. The writing may in truth show that the sale was in fact in gross, or was in fact by the acre. If it does, then other evidences of the fact need not be resorted to—not because of its irrelevancy, but because it is unnecessary. A deed may be impeached, it is conceded. A prerequisite is to attack its genuineness in a proper pleading. In this kind of a case, the very essence of which is one of the grounds for attacking a writing collaterally, it is not necessary to charge either fraud or mistake in its execution. The allegation that a conveyance of a tract of land, described as containing so many acres, erroneously mistakes the acreage to such an amount as the court will be able to see, in the light of the attending circumstances pleaded, was beyond the probable contemplation of the parties, is such an excessive variation as to indicate fraud or mistake. When the facts pleaded are such that from them the law imputes either fraud or mistake, it need not be pleaded in terms.

In this case the discrepancy was more than 13 per cent.

The judgment should have been for the plaintiff.

Reversed and remanded.

SHALLCROSS v. SHALLCROSS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 19, 1909.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 303*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—JUDGMENT—MODIFICATION—STATUTES.

Ky. St. 1909, § 2123 (Russell's St. § 73), provides that the court in divorce proceedings may make an order for the care, custody, and maintenance of minor children, and at any time afterward, on the petition of either parent, may revise the same, having, in all cases, the welfare of the children principally in view. Held, that such section did not deprive the court, after granting a divorce decree, from modifying the same after the term, on its own motion, in so far as it granted the father the right to visit a child, the custody of which was granted to the wife, nor to limit such action to a case instituted for that purpose by petition of either parent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 793-795; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 298*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN.

Where a child of divorced parents has reached years of discretion, its wishes as to its custody will be considered, but are not controlling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 781-787; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 298*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—RIGHTS OF PARENTS.

On the granting of a divorce, the custody of very young children will generally be awarded to the mother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 781-787; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 303*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—MODIFICATION OF DECREE.

While the circuit court should not modify a divorce decree in so far as it affected the custody of children, without notice to the parents, a divorced husband, having applied for a rule on his divorced wife to show cause why she did not comply with the decree in so far as it granted the husband a right to have visits from his child, could not object to a modification of the decree denying him the right to further visits because he was not served with a written notice of an application to modify the decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 793-795; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

5. DIVORCE (§ 303*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—VISITATION.

Where a father, by reason of inebriety and profligacy, was not a proper person to associate with his infant son, the court properly modified a prior divorce decree granting the father the right to visit his son, and have him with him under certain circumstances, by withdrawing such right of visitation; benefit to the child being the chief concern.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Sarah Shelby Shallcross against Harry M. Shallcross. From an order modifying a divorce decree in so far as it related to the company of children, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barrett Gibson and Gibson, Marshall & Gibson, for appellant. C. H. Shield and R. A. McDowell, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. On April 29, 1907, the appellee, Sarah Shelby Shallcross, was, by a judgment of the Jefferson circuit court, chancery branch, second division, divorced from her husband, the appellant, Harry M. Shallcross, and given the custody of their son and only child, Vernon Lewis Shallcross, an infant of tender years. The judgment in question is as follows: "This action having been heard and submitted upon the plaintiff's petition and the defendant's answer herein and upon the proof, and the court being advised, it is adjudged that the plaintiff, Sarah Shelby Shallcross, be and she is hereby divorced from the bonds of matrimony with Harry Mason Shallcross, and it is further adjudged that the said plaintiff is given the custody and control of her son, Vernon Lewis Shallcross, and it is further adjudged that the defendant, Harry Mason Shallcross, shall have the privilege of seeing his child at such reasonable times as will not interfere with the education of the child, and that he shall have the privilege of having the said child with him at least two days during each month during school season, and shall have the privilege of having the child with him during vacation for periods ranging from one to two weeks at a time, such periods of visit to his father to be, however, at such times as shall be mutually agreed on between the plaintiff and the said defendant, and will not in any wise interfere with the health or welfare of the said child. It is further adjudged that the final custody of said child, in case of the death of Sarah Shelby Shallcross during the minority of said child, shall not now be determined, but left open, and this action is reserved for such proceedings as may then be had. It is further adjudged that the defendant shall be charged with the reasonable and proper clothing and education of such child, and that the question of alimony to his wife be reserved for future determination, and this action is reserved for said purpose. It is further considered and adjudged by the court that each party shall restore to the other such property not disposed of at the commencement of this action as either may have obtained, directly or indirectly from or through the other, during marriage in consideration or by reason thereof."

It does not appear from the foregoing judgment, or any subsequent order found in the record before us, that the case was ever stricken from the court's docket. At any rate, on June 30, 1909, the same court, on motion of the appellant, Harry M. Shallcross, based on his affidavit then filed, granted and issued a rule against appellee, Sarah Shelby Shallcross, returnable July 5, 1909, requiring her to show cause, if any she had, why she should not comply with the judgment of April 29, 1907, by permitting him to see and be with their infant son as provided therein. In the affidavit for the rule appellant stated that the appellee had not, since November 26, 1908, permitted him to see his son, Vernon Lewis Shallcross, and had repeatedly refused him the right to do so, or to have the child with him at any time, and had announced that she did not intend, in the future, to permit appellant to see or have him in his custody. Appellee, on the day the rule was returnable, filed a response thereto, in which it was admitted that she had refused appellant the privilege of seeing or having their child, and had announced her purpose to persist in such refusal as charged in appellant's affidavit for the rule, but stated, in substance, that she was constrained to so act because of the drunken and debauched habits and life of appellant from the excessive use of whisky and cigarettes; many instances being given of intoxication and boisterous and other unseemly conduct on his part in hotels, saloons, and other public places in the city of Louisville, some of which occurred when appellant had his son with him. It was further, in substance, stated in the response that appellant constantly kept whisky in his apartments, which he regularly drank in excessive quantities in the presence of his son, when the latter would visit him; that by indulging the whims of the child, and otherwise improperly influencing him, appellant attempted to wean his affection from appellee and make him disobedient to her; that the intemperance, profligacy, and evil example of appellant, manifested as stated, were well calculated to corrupt the mind and morals and ruin the life of the child, and that to avert such a catastrophe appellee believed it her duty to prevent further association between the father and son, for which reason alone she had for some time, as complained by appellant, refused his requests to have the child visit him as he had been accustomed to do.

Appellant by a pleading entitled an answer controverted all the affirmative statements of the response. Thereupon the court heard all the evidence introduced by the parties and thereafter rendered the following judgment: "The court being sufficiently advised, it is considered and adjudged that said response of the plaintiff is sufficient, and the rule awarded against her is hereby discharged at defendant's costs. It is further considered and adjudged that by the original judgment the plaintiff is given the custody and control of the child, Vernon Shallcross, and the defendant is not entitled thereby to any custody or control over said child, and the plaintiff's motion is therefore unnecessary and overruled. The court on its own motion sets aside as much of the provision in said judgment as gives the defendant the privilege of seeing his child at his home, and it is hereby ordered that the plaintiff shall send the child to the home of Henry T. Shanks at No. 619 Floral Terrace, in the city of Louisville, at 2 o'clock, p. m. on the 1st and 3d Saturday afternoons of each month, to remain until 6 o'clock of said day, where the defendant may visit and see said child according to the opinion filed herein. Such visits, however, not to interfere with the welfare, health, and education of said child. Exceptions reserved to both parties, appeal to the Court of Appeals granted to the defendant, and a cross-appeal granted to the plaintiff." Being dissatisfied with the judgment appellant prosecutes this appeal.

His able counsel earnestly insist that the judgment complained of is but a modification of the first judgment, rendered in the action for divorce at a previous term, and that the court was without jurisdiction, and had not the power, upon a mere motion, to modify or vacate the former judgment after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered. Section 2123, Ky. St. (Carroll's Ed. 1909 [Russell's St. § 73]), provides: "Pending an application for divorce, or on final judgment, the court may make orders for the care, custody and maintenance of the minor children of the parties, or children of unsound mind, or any of them, and at any time afterward, upon the petition of either parent, revise and alter the same, having in all such cases of care and custody the interest and welfare of the children principally in view; but no such order for maintenance of children or allotment in favor of the wife shall divest either party of the fee-simple title of real estate."

It is not denied by counsel that the court rendering such a judgment as that referred to can modify or vacate it, after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered, but contended that, in order to enable it to do so, the power to that end must be reserved in the judgment itself, or its exercise invoked by the petition of a parent of the child to be affected. In all cases respecting the custody of a child the welfare of the child is the governing principle with the courts. The right of the father to have the custody of his child is, in its general sense, admitted, but this is not on account of any absolute right of the father, but for the benefit of the infant; the law presuming it to be for its interest to be under the care of its natural protector, both for maintenance and education. Neither the father nor mother, however, has any right that can be allowed to seriously militate against the welfare of the child. If the father be unfit to have the custody of his child, the courts will promptly declare his rights forfeited. The same is true of the mother, and neither parent is entitled to the custody, if it is manifestly against the child's welfare. In such a case the custody of the child will be awarded to a third person. If the child has reached years of discretion, its wishes will be considered, but will not always control. As between the parents, the tendency of the courts is to give very young children to the mother, especially in cases of divorce. Our meaning has been admirably expressed by Judge Robertson in the opinion in Adams v. Adams, 1 Duv. 167, as follows: "The welfare of infancy, involving that also of the commonwealth, defines the sphere of parental duties and rights, and these preferred rights and duties are correlative. The character and destiny of the citizen are molded by the domestic tutelage of the nursing. Therefore, whenever the parents are separated by divorce, although prima facie the abstract right and duty of the father are superior to those of the mother, yet the court dissolving the union should confide the care and custody of their infant child to the parent most trustworthy and capable, and if neither of them shall be worthy of such a delicate and eventful trust, the interest of the child and the public may authorize the transfer of the custody to a stranger."

In this state courts of equity are given practically exclusive jurisdiction over the persons and property of infants, and the jurisdiction attaches from the very fact of the institution of an action or proceeding affecting the person or property of an infant, and at once makes him a ward of the court. When such jurisdiction is invoked in the infant's behalf, there are few, if any, inflexible rules of procedure. Even section 2123, Ky. St., which gives to the parent of an infant the right to apply by petition to a court of equity for the vacation or modification of a judgment with respect to the custody of the infant, rendered at a previous term, should not be so interpreted as to exclude any other remedy or course of procedure allowed under the rules of chancery, or that might be invoked or followed in a court of equity for such relief, unless the language of the statute sufficiently indicates that such was the legislative intent. On the contrary, it should, if such a meaning can reasonably be given its language, be construed as intended to add to the jurisdiction and power already possessed by courts of equity, or as affording an additional remedy to either divorced parent. At any rate we are unwilling to hold that the statute, supra, ties, or was ever intended to tie, the chancellor's hands until a parent acts in the matter. Besides the language of the statute itself recognizes and emphasizes the paramount duty of the court, which is to look to the child's welfare regardless of both parents, or, to quote from the statute, "having in all such cases of care and custody the interest and welfare of the children in view." Exercise of the power possessed by a court of equity with respect to the custody of an infant in such a case is not therefore dependent upon action upon the part of either of the divorced parents, or upon a reservation in the judgment of authority to subsequently change or modify it. The court need not have waited for either parent to take the initiative, but possessed the power to modify, upon its own motion, the previous judgment as to the custody of the infant, upon the state of facts appearing in the response and established by the proof. We do not mean to say that the circuit court should at any time enter a judgment, or change one rendered at a previous term, as to the custody of a child without notice to the parents. In this case, however, both had notice. It does not lie in the mouth of appellant to complain that he was not served with a written notice of the proceedings resulting in the modification of the original judgment as to the custody of his son; for he instituted the proceeding by taking the rule against appellee, and thereby gave cause and opportunity for the filing of her response, the statements of which, together with the evidence introduced to support them, convinced the court of the necessity for modifying the first judgment to the extent that would prevent appellant from having the custody of his son at all. In this view of the matter we think appellant is estopped to complain of the want of previous formal notice of the action of the court in modifying the judgment, and likewise estopped to complain that the modification resulted without the filing of a petition therefor by appellee or himself.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss in detail the evidence upon which the circuit court acted in modifying the judgment as to the custody of the child, but we think it was sufficient to show that appellant is unfit to have the custody, even temporarily, of his son.

The circuit court did what it could and was authorized to do to protect the child. Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 431*)—SUIT TO COMPEL SETTLEMENT BY ADMINISTRATOR—NECESSITY FOR VERIFIED AFFIDAVITS OF CLAIMS.

Where a creditor sued in equity to compel the settlement of an estate by an administrator, under Civ. Code Prac. § 428, and the payment of debts, including plaintiff's claim, making the administrator, decedent's heirs, and such of the creditors as were known to plaintiff defendants, and the petition charged that the administrator was delaying settlement, stated the amount of the estate's indebtedness, the value of its property, that the personal property was not sufficient to pay the debts, alleged the necessity for a sale of realty for such purpose, asked a reference of the case to a master commissioner for taking proof as to creditors' claims, and reporting assets and liabilities of the estate, and closed with a prayer for personal judgment for plaintiff's debt, with interest, and for a settlement of the estate, etc., it was unnecessary that payment of plaintiff's claim should have been demanded of the administrator before the institution of the action, and it was error to dismiss the suit because of a failure of plaintiff to present such affidavit; the object of the statute requiring the claimant, before bringing an action on his claim, to make demand of payment, being to afford the personal representative an opportunity to pay it without cost of suit, which would not be necessary where there are no assets in the hands of the personal representative with which to pay decedent's debts, or such as he may have are insufficient for that purpose, and decedent left real estate liable for such debts.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by the Crane & Breed Manufacturing Company against Matilda Staggs' administrator. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

B. F. Roach, for appellant. Thomas H. Hardin, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the Mercer circuit court dismissing appellant's action upon the grounds that the account of $400.80 against the estate of Matilda Staggs, deceased, sued on, had not been verified, or its payment demanded of the administrator before suit, as required by sections 3870-3872, Ky. St. (sections 3901-3903, Russell's St.). Attached to the account filed with the petition were two affidavits; the first being that of appellant's treasurer, and the second that of another person, presumably an employé of appellant, who made oath as to the correctness of the account from a comparison of it with the original entries contained in appellant's books. The first affidavit was insufficient. In the first place, it did not purport to have been made by appellant's chief officer, or state that such chief officer was absent from the county in which appellant's chief office is situated at the time the affidavit was made, or that appellant's treasurer, in the absence of the chief officer from the county, was authorized to make the affidavit. Appellant is a corporation created and doing business as such under the laws of Ohio, and its chief office or place of business is in that state, as is the residence of its chief officer.

A pleading or affidavit to be used in Kentucky must, though executed in another state, be made and verified as required by the laws of Kentucky. Section 3870, Ky. St., provides: "All demands against the estate of a decedent shall be verified by the written affidavit of the claimant, or in his absence from the state, by his agent, or if dead, by his personal representative, stating that the demand is just, and has never to his knowledge or belief been paid, and that there is no off-set or discount against the same, or any usury therein; and if the demand be other than an obligation signed by the decedent, or a judgment, it shall also be verified by a person other than the claimant, who shall state in his affidavit that he believes the claim to be just and correct and give the reasons why he so believes." Civ. Code Prac. § 544, thus defines the word "affidavit": "An affidavit is a written declaration under oath, made without notice to the adverse party." Subsection 1, § 550, provides: "Any affidavit which, this Code requires or authorizes a party to make may, unless otherwise expressed, be made by his agent or attorney, if he be absent from the county." By yet another provision of the Civil Code of Practice, viz., section 117, a pleading or affidavit of a private corporation "must be verified by its chief officer or agent upon whom a summons in the action is lawfully served, or might be lawfully served if it were a defendant; or if it have no such officer or agent in the county in which the action is brought, or is pending, it may be verified by its attorney." It will be observed that neither the sections of the statutes nor those of the Code, supra, offer any obstruction to the right of appellant to make or execute the affidavits in verification of its claim in the state of Ohio. They merely provide how the verification shall be effected if made or to be used in this state. The Code (section 549, subsec. 2) does, however, provide: "That an affidavit may be made * * * out of this state, before any officer or person who may be authorized, pursuant to section 564 to take depositions." And section 564 authorizes the taking of depositions out of this state "before a commissioner appointed by the Governor thereof; or before any other person empowered by a commission directed to him by consent of the parties, or by order of the court; or before a judge of a court, a justice of the peace, mayor of a city, or notary public." Therefore the claimants' affidavit, in proof of appellant's demand against appellee, might have been made before a notary at its chief office or principal place of business in Ohio by its chief officer, or, in his absence from the county in which such chief office or principal place of business is situated in that state, by its treasurer, or other authorized agent. In the latter case, however, the affidavit should, by an appropriate statement, be made to show the official title of the chief officer, his absence from the county, and the authority of the treasurer or other agent to make the necessary affidavit. None of these essential facts appear in the affidavit made by the treasurer, and their omission, as we have already intimated, rendered it fatally defective.

We think the affidavit defective in another particular. It fails to state the decedent's full indebtedness to appellant according to the account as originally rendered, or to indicate the payments for which the account on its face shows she was given credit. In other words, the affidavit treats the $400.80, balance due on the account, not as a balance, but as representing the decedent's entire indebtedness to appellant from start to finish; whereas, according to the account itself, it embraced sales of merchandise from appellant to the decedent covering a period of four years, aggregating $1,463.71, upon which she made, during the same period, numerous payments, all credited on the account and amounting in the aggregate to $1,062.91, which, subtracted from the total indebtedness, left a balance due appellant of $400.80. In addition to what section 3870, Ky. St., directs to be stated in the affidavit of the claimant, section 3871 requires: "If any part of the demand has been paid, or there be any set-off or discount against the same, or any usury therein, the affidavit shall state the payment or usury, when the payment was made, and when the off-set or discount was due, to the best of the affiant's knowledge and belief. * * *"

The second affidavit accompanying the account, made doubtless by an employé of appellant, appears to be defective in one particular. It gives but a single indefinite reason for the affiant's belief as to the correctness of the demand sued on, viz., that he had examined appellant's books and found that the account against the decedent appeared on the books as on the copy of the account to which his affidavit was attached. Though without personal knowledge of the sales to the decedent of any of the merchandise set forth in the account, if, in addition to what is said in his affidavit, this employé had therein stated he was familiar with the merchandise described in the account as having been sold the decedent and its market value during the period covered by the account, that the various sums charged in the account therefor were reasonable and the customary prices for such goods, and that it appeared from the original entries that the merchandise therein described was sold the decedent as of the dates respectively therein specified—it would have made the affidavit sufficiently conform to section 3870 of the statute, supra, which requires that the person other than the claimant "shall state in his affidavit that he believes the claim to be just and correct, and give the reason why he so believes." Dewhurst v. Shepherd, 102 Ky. 239, 43 S. W. 253, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 1260. But, notwithstanding the conclusions we have expressed as to the insufficiency of the affidavits furnished by appellant in proof of its claim, we are nevertheless of opinion that the circuit court erred in dismissing the action on that ground, or because of the alleged failure of demand.

We find from the record that the action was one in equity brought under section 428, Civ. Code Prac., by appellant as a creditor of the decedent to compel a settlement by the administrator of her estate and the payment of the estate's indebtedness, including its claim of $400.80. The administrator, heirs at law of the decedent, and such of the creditors as were known to appellant were made defendants, and the petition, as amended, charges that the administrator is delaying the settlement of the decedent's estate in order to obtain profit in its business from the interest realized on the money belonging to the decedent's estate it has received; states with particularity the amount of the estate's indebtedness, the nature and value of the property, real and personal, left by the decedent; that the personal property is not sufficient to pay the debts; and alleges the necessity for a sale of the real estate or such part thereof as will realize an amount, which together with the proceeds of the personalty will be sufficient to pay the decedent's debts. The petition also fully described the real estate, asks a reference of the case to the master commissioner for taking proof as to the claims of creditors and reporting the assets and liabilities of the estate, and closes with the prayer for a personal judgment against the administrator for appellant's debt with interest, for a settlement of the estate, and all necessary general and equitable relief.

In view of the object of the action and the fact that appellant's claim, as well as those of all other creditors of the estate, must be properly proved as required by the statute before they are filed with and allowed by the commissioner, it was unnecessary that payment thereof should have been demanded of the administrator before the institution of the action by the presentation to him of the claim accompanied by the necessary statutory affidavits. Huffman v. Moore's Adm'r, 101 Ky. 288, 41 S. W. 292, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 461; Grey v. Lewis, 79 Ky. 453; Hamilton v. Wright, 87 S. W. 1093, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 1144. The object of the statute in respect to the verification of claims against decedents' estates is to protect them against unjust or fraudulent claims, and the reason for requiring the claimant, before bringing an action on his claim, to make demand of payment, is to afford the personal representative an opportunity to pay it without cost of suit, and at the same time have a legal voucher of such payment. If, however, there are no assets in the hands of the personal representative with which to pay the decedent's debts, or such as he may have be insufficient for that purpose, but the decedent left real estate liable for such debts, there can be no reason or necessity for a creditor's presenting his claim, accompanied by the statutory affidavit, to the personal representative, in order to entitle him (the creditor) to bring suit for the purpose of subjecting such real estate to the payment of the decedent's debts, including his own. As well said in Huffman v. Moore's Adm'r, supra: "Indeed, the right to bring an action such as this is expressly given to a creditor by section 428, Civ. Code Prac. And that right is not thereby made conditional upon compliance by the creditor with the terms prescribed by the statute in order to maintain an action ordinary to recover personal judgment against the administrator or executor. Of course, an action such as this involves a reference to the master commissioner of court to pass upon and report, subject to approval of court, in regard to every claim or demand that may be presented, each of which must be verified, and approved as required by statute before being allowed." When appellant's claim against the decedent's estate is presented to the commissioner, it can then be, and should be, verified and proved in the statutory manner.

On account of the error committed by the circuit court in dismissing the action, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

BROADWAY COAL MINING CO. v. DAVIS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 16, 1900.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—SUPERIOR SERVANTS.

In a miner's action for injuries by a coal car which broke loose and ran over plaintiff, the car having been chocked under the direction of another employe, evidence held to show that such employe was plaintiff's superior, and had authority to control his work.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 231*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—RELIANCE ON MASTER'S CARE.

Where plaintiff, a coal miner, notified his superior that a coal car was off the track, and such superior brought a gang and put it on the track, and, before it was chocked under the personal direction of the superior, plaintiff resumed his work with his back to the car, plaintiff could assume that the latter would have the car securely chocked so as to prevent injury from its getting away.

ther servant, who was superior in authority to plaintiff, "and" was engaged in a different line of work, by gross negligence caused the car to run over him was more favorable to defendant than to plaintiff, since by using the word quoted it required a finding that the negligent servant was not only superior to plaintiff, but was engaged in a different line of work.

A servant is entitled to recover from the master for injuries caused by the gross negligence of a superior servant.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 191*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF CO-SERVANT.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 294*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS—NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANTS.

In a coal miner's action for injuries caused by a car breaking away and running over him, an instruction to find for plaintiff if his foreman choked the car, or ordered another than plaintiff to do so, and plaintiff did not, and could not, know by exercise of ordinary care that it was improperly secured, was erroneous as authorizing a recovery if the accident was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant in choking the car under orders from the foreman; thus virtually abolishing the fellow-servant rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1162; Dec. Dig. § 294.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

In a miner's action for injuries by a coal car, which broke loose and ran over plaintiff, the evidence showed that the car was choked under the personal direction of another servant, who was plaintiff's foreman, and the issues were whether such other servant was plaintiff's superior, and, being present, directed others to choke the car, or whether plaintiff himself assisted in choking it. The court instructed that if plaintiff's foreman choked the car, or ordered another than plaintiff to do so, and plaintiff did not, and could not, know that it was improperly choked, the jury should find for him. Held that, while the instruction was erroneous, considered abstractly, as authorizing a recovery if the accident was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant in choking the car under the foreman's direction, irrespective of whether the latter was present, in view of the evidence and issues it could not have prejudiced defendant.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by J. T. Davis against the Broadway Coal Mining Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Belcher & Sparks and Barnes & Anderson, for appellant. Heavrin & Woodward, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee, Davis, while engaged in a mine as a laborer for the appellant company, was seriously injured by a car running upon him. In this action to recover damages for the injuries sustained, the jury returned a verdict in his behalf for $850. The judgment entered upon this verdict we are asked to reverse for reasons that will be pointed out in the course of the opinion.

The accident happened in this way: Davis, in connection with other employes, was directed by Jones, the mine boss, to load some cars in the mine with slate that it was desired to remove out of the mine. The track upon which the cars run descended at a heavy grade to the point at which they were placed to be loaded, and at this place there was considerable water running into the mine that made the rails very slippery. The track ended where Davis was engaged at work, and it was necessary to chock the cars to keep them from running off the end of the track. A short while before the accident in which Davis was injured the car he was loading, not being properly chocked, ran off the end of the rails, and Davis went to see H. C. Chumley, who was in charge of a gang of men some 200 feet away, to get him to bring his men down and put the car back on the track. In obedience to this request, Chumley and several of the laborers placed the car on the track, and went back to their work. After the car was placed on the track, Davis, who had been engaged in picking immediately at the end of the rails, resumed his work, with his back to the car, and had been so occupied for about 15 minutes when the car again got loose and run off the end of the rails and over and on Davis.

Two questions of fact are presented concerning which the evidence is conflicting—one is whether or not Chumley was a superior servant to Davis, and the other, whether Davis himself choked, or assisted in choking, the car that struck him. Davis testifies that, although Jones was the mine boss, and in general charge of all the laborers engaged in the mine, Chumley was the second superior officer to Jones, and, in the absence of Jones, had the control and direction of the work and the laborers engaged in the mine, and that when in obedience to his request Chumley and the gang of men employed immediately with him came to put the car on the track, Chumley remained in charge of the car until after it had been choked under his immediate direction, and that when the car was placed on the track, and before it was choked, he (Davis) went back to his work, leaving the choking of the car to Chumley and the laborers with him, supposing that Chumley would see to it that the car was properly choked, and that he relied upon the fact that Chumley would do this, and did not personally give any attention to the manner in which it was chocked. On the other hand, Chumley and other witnesses testify that Davis assisted in chocking the car, and was directed by Chumley to chock it so that it would not run off the track again. We think the evidence sufficiently shows that Chumley was the superior of Davis, and had the authority to direct and control his work, and that Davis, accepting his testimony as true, had the right to assume that Chumley, who was immediately in charge of the matter, would have the car chocked so that it would not run off the track. Upon the question whether or not Davis assisted in chocking the car, there is more difficulty. The weight of the evidence shows that he did assist in chocking it, and that Chumley told him in substance to chock it so that it would not run off the track. But, as we have often said in matters like this, we are reluctant to interfere with the finding of a jury upon a disputed question of fact.

In instruction No. 1 the jury were told that the law was for the plaintiff if they believed from the evidence that, while he was exercising ordinary care for his own safety, "one Chumley, who was superior in power and authority to Davis, and who was engaged in a different line of work, by gross negligence caused and occasioned the car to run down upon and over him." This instruction is criticised because of the use of the word "and" after the word "Davis." But the instruction is more prejudicial to Davis than the company, as in it the jury were required to believe that he was not only superior in authority, but also engaged in a different line of work, although Davis was entitled to recover if injured by the gross negligence of a superior or the negligence of a colaborer engaged in a different line of work. L. & N. R. Co. v. Brown, 127 Ky. 732, 106 S. W. 795, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 552, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

Instruction D, reading: "If the jury believe that the defendant, Chumley, chocked the car, or ordered another than the plaintiff to chock it, and plaintiff did not know, and could not have known by ordinary care on his part, that the car was improperly secured, and the injuries were inflicted as supposed in the first instruction, then the jury should find for the plaintiff"—is complained of. The objection to this instruction urged by counsel is that, if Chumley ordered a fellow servant of Davis, engaged with him in loading slate, to chock the car, and he did it in a negligent manner, the company would nevertheless be liable, and it is said this would virtually abolish the fellow-servant rule, as whenever two or more fellow servants were directed by their superior to do a certain thing, and any one of them was negligent in the performance of his labor, the master would be responsible for injury to the other laborers resulting from it? The instruction as an abstract statement of law, and disassociated from the evidence in this case, is open to the objection urged against it, and as counsel well say the master would be responsible, in almost every instance, for injuries inflicted upon one fellow servant by another if he merely directed all of them to do certain work. But, when the jury considered this instruction in connection with the evidence, they could not well have been misled by it. There is no conflict in the evidence about the fact that Chumley was present when the car was put back on the track, and when the laborers undertook to chock it. The dispute comes up concerning whether or not Davis was directed by Chumley to and did assist in chocking the car, or whether or not Chumley, being present, directed some of the other persons to do it. It is evident that the court gave the instruction upon the theory presented by the evidence that Chumley was present, and he himself chocked the car, or ordered one of the other employes than Davis to do it, and that if Davis did not know it had not been properly done, the company was liable. Taking this view of the matter, the instruction is not so objectionable as if Chumley, who the jury had a right to assume was the foreman, himself chocked the car, or directed any person other than Davis, who was not assisting, to chock it. He owed a duty to Davis to exercise ordinary care to properly chock it; and, if he failed to do so, the company was liable. If the court had inserted in the instruction the words "who was present" after the word "Chumley," there could be no criticism made of the instruction; but, as it is, we do not believe that it prejudiced the substantial rights of the appellant. The whole case of Davis was predicated upon the idea that Chumley, his superior, was present looking after the chocking of the car, and that he (Davis) had nothing to do with it. On the other hand, the theory of the company was that Chumley was not the superior of Davis, or, assuming that he was, that Davis, himself, chocked the car or assisted in doing so. Upon these two lines the case was contested in the lower court, and the jury could not well have been mistaken in the meaning of the instruction.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Henderson County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by George W. Smith and others against R. W. Agnew and the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New Jersey. The action having been dismissed on demurrer as against Agnew, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Vance & Heilbronner, for appellants. W. P. McClaim, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In 1884 the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Newark, N. J., issued to George W. Smith a policy of insurance for $3,000 in consideration of his agreement to pay an annual premium during his life. The beneficiaries named in the policy were his children, now the appellants. Smith died in 1908, and after his death the beneficiaries brought this suit against the insurance company and R. W. Agnew, alleging that in 1904 their father, the insured, entered into a written contract with Agnew by the terms of which Agnew agreed to pay all annual premiums that might thereafter fall due, keep the policy in force until the death of the insured, and, upon his death, collect the amount due on the policy, and, after deducting and retaining the premiums paid by him, the balance of the amount paid by the insurance company was to be divided equally between Agnew and the beneficiaries in the policy. They further averred that in pursuance of the agreement the policy was assigned and transferred to Agnew, and that, if the policy had lapsed or become of no effect, it was because Agnew had failed to perform his part of the contract and pay the annual premium. They sought judgment against Agnew for their part of the policy. Agnew was called on in the pleading to produce and file the policy of insurance, as well as the contract entered into between himself and Smith. Thereupon Agnew filed the policy, as well as the contract of assignment, which reads as follows: "For value received we do hereby assign, transfer and set over unto R. W. Agnew the above-named policy of insurance, and all sum or sums of money, interest, benefit and advantage whatsoever, now due or hereafter to arise, or to be had or made by virtue thereof; to have and to hold unto the said R. W. Agnew and to be paid to him at maturity the said assignee hereby agreeing that in any settlement of the said policy there shall first be deducted all then existing indebtedness to the company on said policy." A demurrer interposed by Agnew was sustained, and, declining to plead further, the petition as to him was dismissed.

The only question before us is the correctness of the ruling of the court in dismissing the petition as to Agnew. It is conceded in the brief of counsel that Agnew did not have any insurable interest in the life of Smith, not being his creditor, or related to him in any way. Under the pleading the rights of the parties are to be determined by the written contract, and it is manifest from it, taken in connection with the fact that Agnew did not have any insurable interest in the life of Smith, that the contract was void and unenforceable in its inception and at all times thereafter. It has been settled by repeated decisions of this court that a person who has not an insurable interest in the life of another cannot take an assignment of an insurance policy upon such life. The authorities are fully collected in the case of Hess v. Segenfeiter, 127 Ky. 348, 105 S. W. 476, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 225, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1172. As the contract was void—in fact, no contract—it is clear that a cause of action predicated upon it cannot be maintained, as the law will not enforce what it has forbidden and denounced. Bromley v. Washington Life Insurance Company, 122 Ky. 402, 92 S. W. 17, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 1300, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, 121 Am. St. Rep. 453. The case of Vaughan v. Reddick, 106 S. W. 292, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 531, relied on by counsel for appellants, does not support his contention. In that case Vaughan, the insured, made a contract with Reddick, a stranger, to pay the premiums upon the policy and assigned the policy to him as security. The only interest that the assignee, Reddick, had in the policy, was to hold it as indemnity for what he might pay in the way of premiums. The court held that this contract was valid; the only question in the case being whether or not a person who had for a sufficient consideration obligated himself to pay the premiums could be made liable in an action for a breach of his contract. It was not decided that a person who had no insurable interest in the life of another might by assignment or otherwise acquire an interest in the policy independent of or in excess of the amount paid as premiums. It has never been held that an insured might not make a valid contract with another who had no insurable interest in his life to pay the premiums, nor that he might not pledge to the person paying the premiums so much of the policy as was necessary to secure him in the amount of premiums paid. In this kind of a contract the question of insurable interest is not involved, as the person paying the premiums has no interest in the policy except as security for the premiums paid. If the policy had been assigned to Agnew under an agreement by which he was to hold it as security for any sums he paid as premiums, then under the authority of Beard v. Sharp, 100 Ky. 606, 38 S. W. 1057, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 1029, and other cases, Agnew could retain a sufficiency of the proceeds realized from the policy to reimburse him for the amount of premiums paid. And so, if Agnew for a sufficient consideration had agreed to pay the premiums, and failed to do so, thereby causing loss to Smith, Smith could, as held in Vaughan v. Reddick, supra, sue him for a breach of the contract and recover the damages he sustained. But in the case at bar the written contract upon which the action is based is an unconditional assignment of the entire policy to Agnew without expressing what he is to do or that he is to do anything. This being so, the contract was void, and consequently nonenforceable. But if we should assume that Agnew, independent of the writing, agreed to pay the premiums, and when the policy was paid retain the amount so paid and one-half or any other part of the surplus, the contract as a whole would likewise be void. The contract of assignment, whether looked at as it appears in the writing, or as it is stated in the petition, is nothing more nor less than a wagering speculative contract of insurance. If it should be upheld, the barriers that the court have set up to prevent wagering insurance would be of little effect. To avoid the prohibition it would only be necessary to stipulate that the assignee should in consideration of the payment of the premiums have such interest in the policy as might be agreed upon.

The petition does not charge that Agnew ever paid or agreed to pay any premiums, except in consideration of the fact that he was to become an equal owner in the policy with Smith, and receive in addition to the premiums he might pay one-half of the amount received on the policy, and the attempt is to recover from Agnew one-half the amount of the policy, or, to be more accurate, that part of the policy that Smith was to receive under the contract. In other words, the legal effect of the contract is precisely the same as if Agnew had taken an assignment of the policy and agreed to pay Smith $100 or any other specified amount for it.

The question presented is not like that considered by the court in Beard v. Sharp. There the contract made by the insured with Sharp as assignee of the policy was similar to the contract here made by Agnew, but in that case the money realized on the policy was paid to Sharp as assignee, who had fully performed his contract. And the question before the court was whether or not Sharp as against the beneficiary was entitled to hold that part of the insurance the contract gave him the right to retain, or only so much as would cover the premiums paid by him, and it was held that he could only retain the amount of the premiums. Here the attempt is made to specifically enforce an invalid executory contract. There is no claim that Agnew ever paid any premiums or did any other thing entitling him to an interest in the policy.

The judgment of the lower court dismissing the petition is affirmed.

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 100*)—EXTENT OF POSSESSION—NECESSITY OF HOSTILE CLAIM.

Where defendant thought that a tract which he fenced and on which he erected a barn was a part of land he had purchased, and did not then know it was a part of land now claimed by him by adverse possession, his possession would not extend beyond the fenced part, and

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 111*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Defendant could not claim by adverse possession in partition proceedings a two-acre tract which he had fenced, where in his pleadings he did not describe such tract and claim to have held it for more than 15 years; Civ. Code Prac. § 125, requiring the answer in an action to recover land to state whether defendant claims any part of the land, and, if so, to describe that part claimed so as to identify it.

8. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 41*)—LIMITATIONS—TIME.

An adverse claim to land made shortly before the beginning of the action in which it was set up was not available to give title by adverse possession.

10. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 195*)—BURDEN OF PROOF—RUNNING OF LIMITATIONS—REMOVAL OF DISABILITY.

The burden was upon one claiming land by adverse possession against a married woman under a deed from her husband to show that the period within which she could have asserted her rights to prevent the running of limitations after her husband's death had elapsed, in that her husband died more than three years before the beginning of the action in which the adverse possession was set up.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wayne County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Sally Bell and others against H. P. Kidd. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Tuttle and Harrison & Harrison, for appellant. Cress & Cress, for appellees.

LASSING, J. Appellees brought suit against appellant, H. P. Kidd, in the Wayne circuit court, wherein they sought to have sold five tracts of mountain land for the purpose of dividing the proceeds among themselves, alleging that they and the appellant, Kidd, were the joint owners thereof in unequal interests, and that the land could not be divided between them without materially impairing its value. It being made to appear that three of the plaintiffs owned an interest in but one of the tracts described in the pleadings, the plaintiffs were required to elect whether they would proceed to have the four remaining tracts sold or the tract in which the three plaintiffs owned an interest. They elected to have the four tracts sold, and the case was dismissed as to the three plaintiffs claiming an interest in only the fifth tract.

Appellants claim title to the lands in question as the only heirs at law of William Carson, who died in 1869, leaving six children Sally Bell, Laurana Steele, Cynthia Dolan, Linda Koger, Rebecca Jones, and Cyrenus Carson, each of whom as heir at law of their father acquired an undivided $\frac{1}{6}$ interest in the property in question. The two first named, to wit, Sally Bell and Laurana Steele, are still living. Cynthia Dolan died in 1906, leaving six children, who jointly claim their mother's interest, or $\frac{1}{6}$, and each is therefore entitled to $\frac{1}{36}$. Linda Koger died many years ago, and the appellant, Kidd, has procured by purchase from her children and heirs at law $\frac{7}{8}$ of her interest in the estate of her father, or $\frac{7}{48}$ of the entire tract in litigation. Rebecca Jones and Cyrenus Carson each sold and transferred their entire interest to the defendant, Kidd, making his undivided interest in the four tracts of land $\frac{23}{48}$. The petition admits that Kidd is the owner of $\frac{23}{48}$, and claims that the appellees are the owners of the remaining $\frac{25}{48}$. The defendant in his answer traverses the material allegations of the petition, denies that plaintiffs or any of them owned any interest whatever in the land in controversy, and alleges that he is the sole owner thereof by purchase from the various claimants. He further pleads and relies upon the statute of limitations as a bar to their right of recovery, alleging that he had been in the actual, peaceable, and continuous adverse possession of the property for more than 15 years. He further pleaded that he had made lasting and valuable improvements on the property which had greatly enhanced its value, and he asked that, if the plaintiffs be adjudged the owners of an interest therein, these improvements be taken into consideration, and that he be allowed therefor. The affirmative matter set up in the answer was traversed in the reply. Much proof was taken, and upon final submission the chancellor found that the plaintiffs owned an undivided $\frac{25}{48}$ interest, and that the defendant, Kidd, was the owner of an undivided $\frac{23}{48}$ interest in the land. He further found that it could be divided without materially impairing its value, and he directed this to be done and the portions upon which the defendant, Kidd, had erected the improvements be set apart to him without placing any value whatever upon the improvements. From that judgment the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Thus from the pleadings it is seen that appellant, Kidd, claims to be the owner of all of the land in question, first, by purchase; and, second, by adverse possession. He says he purchased the property in the following manner: That about 1880 William Bell and Sally Bell gave him a title bond for their undivided one-sixth interest, and that at that time William Bell held a title bond for the one-sixth interests of Cynthia Dolan and Cyrenus Carson in this land, and that he purchased from said Bell each of these title bonds. He thereafter procured a deed from Cyrenus Carson for his undivided interest, so his title to Cyrenus Carson's interest is not in question. He files a deed from H. S. Steele under which he claims to have purchased the interest of Laurana Steele in the estate of her father. In this deed she is not named as a party, and her name only appears for the purpose of relinquishing her right of dower; the recitation in the deed being as follows: "In testimony whereof the said H. S. Steele hath hereunto subscribed his name the day and date above written. The said Laurana H. Steele, wife of said H. S. Steele, relinquishes her right to dower in said land, in testimony whereof she hath hereunto subscribed her name as above." The certificate of the clerk relative to the signature of Mrs. Steele reads as follows: "And on the same day also voluntarily appeared before me the said Laurana H. Steele, wife of said H. S. Steele, to me well known, in the absence of her husband declared that she had of her own free will signed and sealed relinquishment of dower in the foregoing deed for the consideration, uses and purposes therein contained." The husband was the sole grantor, and the wife did not attempt to convey any interest which she might own in the land; and this intent on her part is evidenced not only by the fact that she is not made a party grantor in the deed, but the clerk who took the acknowledgment so understood, and so certified that she was merely relinquishing her right of dower in the land which her husband was conveying. This court in the cases of Hedger v. Ward and Hobbs v. Hedger, 54 Ky. 106, held that where the wife signed the deed purporting to convey on the part of her husband land which was the inheritance of the wife, and acknowledged the deed and relinquished dower in the land, such deed was ineffectual to pass the inheritance of the wife, as the deed contained no language indicating any intention to convey her right of inheritance. And, again, in the case of Hatcher and Wife v. G. W. and N.

P. Andrews, 68 Ky. 561, it was held that such a deed did not operate to divest the wife of any interest in the land which she had. Under the authority of these decisions, the deed from H. S. Steele to appellant, Kidd, did not operate to pass the interest of Laurana Steele in said land, and hence, if she is entitled to hold said land against her, it must be under his claim of adverse possession, and not by purchase.

There is a sharp conflict in the evidence as to whether or not the title bonds which appellant claims he procured for the interest of Sally Bell and Cynthia Dolan were in fact executed to him. Appellant swears positively that they were, while appellees testify just as pointedly that no such bonds were ever executed. Appellant says that the bonds were lost or misplaced, but it is a singular circumstance that, although he knew these bonds were lost during all the years that intervened between the date of the alleged purchase and the beginning of this litigation, he made no efforts to procure from appellees a deed for this land. The weight of the evidence is against the contention of appellant that these bonds were ever executed, but, even if this were not so, appellant's claim in this particular must fail for the further reason that at the date when these bonds were alleged to have been executed both Sally Bell and Cynthia Dolan were married women, and the statute then in force directed the way and manner in which a married woman could divest herself of title to real estate, and there is no pretense that the requirements of the statute were in any wise complied with, and, this being so, even if such a bond had been executed, as appellant claims there was, it would have been inoperative. Hence appellant's title to these interests must likewise rest upon his claim of adverse possession.

From his own testimony appellant shows that he resided upon one of these tracts of land for nine years and a tenant resided upon the same tract for two years prior to his occupancy, so that he has had actual possession for only 11 years, unless it is held that the possession of one William Spradlin, a tenant of appellant, who fenced something like two acres of ground supposed to be a part of this land, was such possession as would authorize a finding that it extended to the whole of said tract. It appears that upon this tract of land there was no building except a small stable or barn which stood upon the line, and appellant is not sure from his testimony whether any part of this building or the tract which was fenced by Spradlin is included within the Carson boundary, for he says there is a survey, known as the Hurt and Long survey, which is claimed to run in between the Carson land and the land owned by appellant, and he testifies that he does not know whether the stable in question did in fact stand upon the Carson land or not; that the

Hurt and Long survey has never been located, and he was not sure as to where the lines ran, and, while he claims that he has had the two-acre tract in possession and claimed same for about twenty-four years, he admits that when he directed his tenant, Spradlin, to take possession thereof, and authorized him to fence it, he claimed his tract "the same as any of it," and that he directed his tenant to take charge of that land as his. Evidently at that time, as he did not know where the Hurt and Long survey ran, he regarded this tract which was fenced and upon which the barn stood in part as a part of the land which he was purchasing from Spradlin, and, even though it was in fact a part of the Carson land, if he did not know it to be such, and was not claiming at that time the whole of the Carson land, his possession would not extend beyond his inclosure, to wit, the two acres, and, as he failed to set out and describe this two-acre tract and claim to have held it for more than fifteen years adversely, his claim to even that small portion of the entire tract must fail. Civ. Code Prac. § 125. Practically all of this land is wild mountain land, valuable only for its timber and minerals. The heirs of William Carson resided chiefly in the West, and there is no evidence that any of them knew that appellant was laying claim to any portion of the land except the interests which he had purchased, and as all the deeds under which he acquired these interests referred to the land as undivided sixth interests, etc., by each separate purchase he became a joint tenant or tenant in common with the remaining owners thereof; and, while it is possible for a joint tenant or tenant in common to hold adversely to his co-tenant, as said by this court in the case of Vermillion v. Nickell, 114 S. W. 270, to make the possession of a tenant in common adverse to the co-tenant, the possession must be open, notorious, and hostile to the other co-tenant and known by him to be so. Measured by this standard, appellant had at no time been in the adverse possession of any portion of this land prior to 1902 or 1903, when he made claim to a son of Sally Bell that he was claiming his mother's interest under a title bond. And this claim, of course, can be of no avail, for it was made but a short time before the institution of this suit.

Appellant's counsel in brief argues that the claim of appellees to tract 1 must fail for the reason that they failed to trace their title from the commonwealth to William Carson, their ancestor. The petition alleges that William Carson died seised and possessed of this land, and this allegation stands unchallenged. But, even if it were, inasmuch as appellant claims title through various deeds from brothers and sisters of appellees, he traces his title to a common source with them, and under the repeated decisions of this court, where parties claim title from a common source, it is unnecessary to trace title beyond that source. Barnett v. Mimick, 17 S. W. 334, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 503; Heard v. Cherry, 92 S. W. 551, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 106; Luen v. Wilson, 85 Ky. 503, 3 S. W. 911, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 83. The case of Heard v. Cherry, supra, is directly in point, for it was there held that one tenant in common is not permitted to question the validity of the title of his other joint tenants.

The contention of appellant's counsel is that, even though his claim to the whole of this tract under his plea of adverse possession must fail as to some of the heirs, it is nevertheless good as to the interest of Laurana Steele therein for the reason that he took possession under the deed that was executed to him by her husband and has been holding same ever since openly, adversely, and notoriously against her interest, and that, while at the time he took possession thereof she was under the disability of coverture, her husband died more than three years before the institution of this suit, and therefore the time within which she might have asserted her right and prevented the running of the statute has elapsed, and the plea is now operative and good as to her. In this contention, however, he must fail for the reason that the record does not show affirmatively this fact. It is not clear from the evidence that Laurana Steele had been a widow as much as 3 years prior to the institution of this suit; and, the burden being upon appellant to establish this fact, he loses even if it be conceded that he had been in the actual adverse possession of this land for the 24 years, as claimed.

On the whole case we are of opinion that appellant has failed to make out a claim of adverse possession to any of this property. When he claims to have taken possession 24 years before the institution of the suit, it is evident that he was directing the tenant, Spradlin, to take possession of and hold the land which he had bought of Spradlin. He was not then aiming to seize the Carson land. He did not know the true boundary thereof, and, in fact, he understood that there was another survey in between the Spradlin land which he had purchased and the Carson land, and if, in attempting to take possession of his own land, he had unintentionally taken possession of some of the Carson land, he would acquire no rights to any portion thereof which he did not actually inclose and hold for the statutory period.

From a careful examination of the record, which is not altogether clear upon many points, we are convinced that the conclusion reached by the Chancellor was correct; and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Howard County; James S. Steel, Judge.

Butler Ferguson was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. D. Conway and W. P. Feazel, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen. (J. S. Lake and Geo. M. Chapline, of counsel), for the State.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The defendant, Butler Ferguson, was indicted by the grand jury of Howard county charged with the crime of murder in the first degree by killing Pet Henderson on the 30th day of May, 1909. Upon his trial he was convicted by a petit jury of that county of the crime of murder in the first degree; and from the judgment rendered upon that verdict he prosecutes this appeal.

The evidence on the part of the state establishes the following facts: The deceased, Pet Henderson, was a young man about 24 years old. On the afternoon of Sunday, May 30th, in company with two young men of about the same age, young Henderson went to a creek a short distance south from the town of Center Point for the purpose of swimming. After going along the creek for some distance, they decided they would not go in swimming because the water was too muddy. They then proceeded across a field towards the public road, and young Henderson was somewhat in the lead, and got to the road in advance of his companions. In this road Henderson met two small negro boys, whom he began chasing, and the negro boys became frightened and ran down the road for a distance to a negro church house, before which a crowd of colored people were lingering. In the crowd were Grant Whitmore and Tap Clardy, and the defendant was just across the road and within hearing distance from the crowd. To this crowd the negro boys ran, and told them about being chased by the deceased. In a short time after this the defendant, Grant Whitmore and Tap Clardy went up this road from the negro church towards where the deceased had chased the negro boys. In the meanwhile young Henderson, after chasing the negro boys, had returned to his two companions, who by that time had come out of the field into the road; and the three young men sat down on the ground next the side of the road, and engaged in friendly conversation. When the defendant, in company with the two parties who had proceeded from the negro church with him, got to a point in the road about 50 or 60 yards from where young Henderson and his two companions were seated next the road, the defendant said: "There sits that God damn Pet Henderson, the God damn son of a bitch. If he does anything to me, I will fix him." Henderson arose from where he was seated, and walked in the direction of the defendant, and the defendant continued along the road towards the deceased. Henderson was unarmed, and his hands were extended down by his side. When he came within a few steps of defendant, Henderson spoke to defendant, and said: "Did you call me a God damn son of a bitch?" The defendant immediately drew his pistol, and began shooting at Henderson, and saying "I did." He shot three times in rapid succession, and, as Henderson was falling, he shot twice more; and then the defendant whirled around, and ran back towards the negro church. When Henderson walked towards the defendant and spoke to him, he had nothing in his hands, and at the time defendant shot him he was a few steps from the defendant, and was making no demonstration of any kind. There was testimony showing that the deceased and his two companions had drank some diluted alcohol a few hours before the killing, but the young men testified that it was not sufficient to affect them, and that they were not affected thereby. The defendant and his two friends testified that, when the deceased approached, he had a stick in his hand, and struck defendant with it, and that he was backing when he pulled his pistol and shot the deceased, firing five times. There was testimony showing that the defendant and his two friends did not state that the deceased had a stick or had struck him with a stick when they first narrated the circumstances of the killing; and there was other testimony contradicting the defendant and his two friends in their statements made upon the trial as to the manner and circumstances of the killing. But the two young companions of the deceased, who at the time of the killing were only a few steps distant, testified that the deceased did not have a stick, and that when he was shot his hands were empty and extended by his side, and that the deceased was making no demonstration when he was shot. Before the jury these witnesses appeared, and the jury were the judges of their credibility. The defendant and his two friends gave their testimony before the jury, and, in the light of their demeanor on the stand and in the light of all the evidence in the case, the jury were the judges to determine whether their statements were true, or only made to shield the defendant from a punishment for the perpetration of a great crime. It was peculiarly the province of the jury to determine the facts of this case; and it has been uniformly held by this court, that, if there is substantial evidence to sustain the findings of the jury as to questions of fact, its verdict will not be disturbed. Hubbard v. State, 10 Ark. 378; Chitwood v. State, 18 Ark. 453; Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43, 54 Am. Dec. 250; Doghead Glory v. State, 13 Ark. 236; Dixon v. State, 22 Ark. 213; Harris v. State, 31 Ark. 196; McCoy v. State, 46 Ark. 141; Holt v. State, 47 Ark. 196, 1 S. W. 61; Williams v. State, 50 Ark. 511, 9 S. W. 5. We have carefully examined the testimony in this case, and find that there is ample evidence to sustain the jury in finding the facts of the case to be as they were detailed by the state's witnesses; and it is upon these findings that the verdict of murder in the first degree must necessarily be based.

It is urged by learned counsel for the defendant that the evidence on the part of the state is not sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury convicting the defendant of murder in the first degree. The statutes of the state provide: Kirby's Dig. § 1766: "All murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, malicious and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration of or in the attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary or larceny shall be decreed murder in the first degree." Section 1767: "All other murder shall be deemed murder in the second degree." When the fact of death alone is proved, the presumption is that the crime is murder in the second degree, and, before it can be determined that the crime is murder in the first degree, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove further by evidence that the killing was done with premeditation and deliberation. The premeditation cannot be inferred from the fact of death, but there must be evidence of a prior intention to do the act of killing in question. But it has been universally held that it is not necessary that this intention be conceived for any particular period of time. As is said by Judge Battle in the case of Green v. State, 51 Ark. 180, 10 S. W. 280: "In order to constitute the killing of a human being murder in the first degree, there must be a specific intent to take life formed in the mind of the slayer before the act of killing was done. It is not necessary, however, that the intention be conceived for any particular length of time before the killing. It may be formed and deliberately executed in a brief space of time. If it was the conception of a moment, but the result of deliberation and premeditation, reason being on its throne, it would be sufficient. The law fixes no time in which it must be formed, but leaves its existence as a fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence." Bivens v. State, 11 Ark. 455; McAdams v. State, 25 Ark. 405; McKenzie v. State, 26 Ark. 339; Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 Ark. 256; Casat v. State, 40 Ark. 524; King v. State, 68 Ark. 572, 60 S. W. 951, 82 Am. St. Rep. 307; Wharton on Homicide (3d Ed.) § 152; Bishop on Criminal Law (7th Ed.) 728; People v. Cornetti, 92 N. Y. 85. The proof advanced in the case must be sufficient to satisfy the minds of the jury that the killing was willful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated. But it is not necessary to show a specific motive or even a deep-seated ill will. The will of man acts under a variety of motives and varies with the man. One may be actuated by a deep-seated passion, another by a general intent to violate the law, no matter on whom the consequences may fall. Another may labor under a sense of a wrong or some indignity, real or fancied. But, if he deliberately kills the person by whom he supposes himself to be aggrieved, or by whom he thinks some indignity has been done to another in whom he may take an interest, he is guilty of murder in the first degree, if the act was done with the premeditated design to kill. The motive may be inadequate or comparatively trivial, or the act may be done through a feeling of resentment. No matter how groundlessly it may be based, still if the killing, by whatever of these motives it may be actuated, is done with deliberation and after premeditation, it is murder in the first degree. 1 Wharton's Criminal Law (10th Ed.) § 121. Whether the defendant was incensed by having just heard that the deceased had chased the two negro boys in whom he may have felt an interest, or whether he had a resentment against deceased caused by reason of some fancied grievance, or whether he was bent on doing generally an unlawful act fall the consequences where they may, the evidence on the part of the state shows that he did the killing deliberately, and after premeditation and without provocation. Just before reaching the deceased, he spoke to him in a violent manner, applying to his name a vile epithet, and then spoke of "fixing him," and at the time he was armed with a deadly weapon. Here was evidence of malice and of premeditation, and, when in a few moments thereafter the deceased without making any demonstration accosted him, the defendant immediately fired at him, with an expression of words showing his design to kill was fixed; and, although the deceased was several steps away and wholly unarmed and made no demonstration, the defendant fired several shots and continued to fire after the deceased was falling. The jury was justified from this evidence in finding that the killing was willful, malicious, and deliberate. Where there is substantial evidence to support the verdict so that it cannot be said to be without evidence in any essential ingredient to the finding, the verdict should be permitted to stand. Bivens v. State, 11 Ark. 455; Stanton v. State, 13 Ark. 319; Richardson v. State, 47 Ark. 502, 2 S. W. 187; Dow v. State, 77 Ark. 404, 92 S. W. 28; Wharton on Homicide (3d Ed.) 156.

It is urged by counsel for defendant that error was committed by the trial court in permitting certain remarks to be made by the attorney on behalf of the prosecution in his argument to the jury. The state by way of rebuttal had introduced testimony showing that certain witnesses who had testified on behalf of the defendant had made statements different from those which they made on the witness stand. The state's attorney in his argument spoke of these contradictory statements made by these witnesses prior to the trial. Upon objection being made to the character of the argument, the court told the jury that such previous statements could only be considered for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of the witnesses, and that all remarks of the attorney relative to said statements, except that going to impeach the credibility of the witnesses, was excluded. The state's attorney thereupon said to the jury that the remarks in his argument were only made "for the purpose of considering the truthfulness or untruthfulness of the statement of the witness." From this the jury fully understood that the previous statements of the witnesses could not be considered by them as substantive evidence of any fact in the case, but only for the purpose of impeaching the witness. Such argument for that purpose was warranted by the law, and with the statement and admonition of the court made to the jury at the time we do not think an undue advantage was secured by the argument which has worked a prejudice to the defendant. In addition to this, the court specifically instructed the jury relative to the testimony of these impeaching witnesses as follows:

"(10) You are instructed that the testimony of Jeff Reese and ——— Woodruff as to the statements made to them by the witness Grant Whitmore as to how the killing occurred can only be considered by you for the purpose of impeaching or discrediting the testimony given by said witness on the stand. This testimony cannot be considered by you as tending to establish the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

"(11) You are instructed that the testimony of Lee Garner and ——— Stuart as to the statements made to them or either of them by the witness John Ferguson, as to what he saw or heard of the killing, can only be considered by you for the purpose of impeaching or discrediting the testimony given by said witness while on the stand. His statements to them cannot be considered by you as tending to establish the guilt or innocence of the accused."

We do not think, therefore, that the verdict of the jury should be set aside or the punishment reduced by reason of the remarks of the attorney on behalf of the state. Redd v. State, 65 Ark. 475, 47 S. W. 119; Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Murphy, 74 Ark. 256, 85 S. W. 428; Noble v. State, 75 Ark. 246, 87 S. W. 120.

There is no special instruction mentioned by counsel for appellant in their brief which they claim it was error to have given or to have refused. We have carefully examined all the instructions given by the court and all those that were refused, and in none of its rulings relative to these instructions do we find that any error was committed. The court fully and fairly instructed the jury on every phase of the case, and in those instructions presented every privilege and guarded every right that the defendant was entitled to.

The defendant has had the aid of able counsel. He has had a full and fair trial before a jury of the country. That jury has declared by its verdict that he is guilty of the crime of murder in the first degree; and we find that there is ample evidence to sustain that verdict.

The judgment of the Howard circuit court herein is affirmed.

KIRCHMAN v. TUFFLI BROS. PIG IRON & COKE CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1900.)

1. SALES (§ 153*)—BREACH OF BUYER—TENDER.

Where, prior to the time for performance of an executory contract of sale, the buyer announced that he would not accept performance, the contract was broken, and the seller was absolved from any further duty to tender or ship the goods.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 363; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

2. SALES (§ 370*)—CONTRACT—CANCELLATION BY BUYER.

A buyer has no right to cancel the contract while the seller is not in fault without the seller's consent; and, if he does so, the seller may treat the repudiation as a breach of contract and sue for the breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1085; Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

3. SALES (§ 383*)—CONTRACTS—BREACH BY BUYER—ACTION BY SELLER—EVIDENCE.

Where a buyer, prior to the time for delivery, notified the seller that he would not accept delivery, the seller was entitled to recover for damages for breach of contract, without proof that he actually had the goods on hand, or tendered them or had actually sold the goods for less than the contract price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1097; Dec. Dig. § 383.*]

4. SALES (§ 384*)—CONTRACTS—BUYER'S BREACH—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The measure of damages for a buyer's breach of a contract of sale is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the goods at the time and place of delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1098-1107; Dec. Dig. § 384.*]

5. SALES (§ 79*)—CONTRACT—PLACE OF DELIVERY.

Where an order for coke specified the quantity, grade, price per ton, and terms, "f. o. b. Van Buren, Ark.," it fixed the place of delivery at Van Buren.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 214-216; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

6. SALES (§ 384*)—CONTRACTS—BREACH—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—NEAREST MARKET.

Where, in an action for a buyer's breach of a contract of sale, there was no market for the goods at the place of delivery, the market value at that place was the value of the goods at the nearest market, plus the cost of transportation to the place of delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1098-1107; Dec. Dig. § 384.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 216*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

A party cannot complain that an instruction given is not sufficiently specific, unless he has requested one more specific.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 216;* Trial, Cent. Dig. § 623.]

8. SALES (§ 382*)—CONTRACT—BREACH—ACTION BY SELLER—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for buyer's breach of a contract to purchase 72-hour economy coke, he claimed that the coke shipped under the contract was not suitable for the purpose for which it was purchased, the seller was entitled to show the character and efficacy of such coke.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 382.*]

9. SALES (§ 377*)—CONTRACT—BREACH OF BUYER—PLEADING.

In an action for a buyer's breach of a contract to purchase coke, the buyer having repudiated the contract before expiration of the time for performance, the seller was not required to allege in his complaint the amount of coke it had prepared for shipment under the contract before it was terminated, especially in view of Kirby's Dig. § 6133, providing that in pleading performance of a condition in a contract, the facts showing performance need not be alleged, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1092; Dec. Dig. § 377.*]

10. SALES (§ 377*)—ITEMS OF DAMAGE—PLEADING.

In an action by a seller for breach of a contract of sale, repudiated by the buyer before the time of performance was past, it is not necessary for the complaint to allege the items of damage suffered, since the measure of damages is established by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1092; Dec. Dig. § 377.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Crawford County; Jephtha H. Evans, Judge.

Action by Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Company against William Kirchman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sam R. Chew, for appellant. E. L. Matlock, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. This is an action instituted by the appellee against the appellant to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract. The complaint, in substance, alleged that on July 29, 1907, the appellant entered into a contract with appellee for the purchase of "six cars of 72-hour economy foundry coke," to be shipped to appellant between that date and July 1, 1908, as called for, at $8.95 per ton of 2,000 pounds f. o. b. cars at Van Buren, Ark.; that at the request of appellant one car of said coke was shipped on October 2, 1907, and that thereafter the appellant countermanded the order, and refused to take and receive the remainder of the coke, and repudiated the contract, although the appellee fully complied with its part of the contract. It alleged that it was damaged by reason of the said breach of the contract by appellant in the sum of $250, for which it asked judgment. The appellant made a motion to require the appellee to make the complaint more definite and certain by stating at what time and how many cars the appellee prepared for shipment and the items of the damages. The court overruled this motion. Thereupon appellant filed his answer in which, in substance, he alleged that on receipt of the first car of coke he discovered that the coke would not answer the purpose for which he had purchased same, and he immediately countermanded the order, and directed the appellee not to ship any more coke on the contract.

It appears from the evidence in the case that the parties entered into the following written contract on July 29, 1907:

"To Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Company, Sales Agents, St. Louis, Mo.—Dear Sirs: Please enter our order as follows: Quantity, six car loads. Grade 72 hr. Economy Fdy. Coke. Price $8.95 per ton of 2,000 lbs. F. o. b. Van Buren, Arkansas. Terms cash 30 days. Shipment between now and July 1, 1908, as called for. Railroad weights at point of origin to govern settlements. All agreements are contingent upon strikes, accidents, car supply, railroad delays or other causes beyond our control. The above contract is not subject to any change or cancellation whatsoever without obtaining full consent of the sellers. Yours truly, The Engineering Works, Wm. Kirchman, Prop.

"Accepted. Tuffli Brothers Pig Iron & Coke Co., Sales Agents."

In October thereafter the appellee shipped to appellant at his request one car of coke, which was received and paid for. Not receiving request for further shipment, the appellee wrote to appellant, who, on May 2, 1908, replied as follows: "Gentlemen: We have your favor of the 30th ult. regarding coke shipments, and in view of the fact that business does not pick up as expected, and that we still have a large quantity of coke on hand, we consider it the best policy for all concerned to cancel the balance of this contract, as we are unable to tell at present when we will have capacity to store any more coke. Very truly yours, The Engineering Works, By William Kirchman, General Manager." Further correspondence passed between the parties when, on June 13, 1908, the appellant wrote to appellee as follows: "Van Buren, Ark. June 13, 1908. Tuffli Brothers Pig Iron & Coke Company. St. Louis, Missouri.—Gentlemen: Answering your favor of the 9th regarding coke still due on contract will say, we affirm our former letter canceling balance of order. We find that this coke does not come up to our expectations," etc. The evidence tends to prove that the remaining five cars of coke amounted to 125 tons, and that the market value of said coke declined $1.90 per ton from the said contract price by June 13, 1908. There was no market value of the coke at Van Buren, the place of delivery, but the above market value was at the oven, the nearest place to Van Buren having such market, and with transportation from such place to Van Buren the decline in the market value of the coke from the contract price would have amounted to $1.90 at Van Buren. The evidence tended further to prove that the coke named in the contract was of a quality and grade sufficient for the purpose for which it was purchased. The jury returned a verdict in favor of appellee for $237.50.

The questions that are presented by the appellant upon this appeal are determined by the nature of the above contract, its breach, and the character of this action. The parties had entered into an executory contract by which the appellant had agreed to purchase the commodity noted in the contract, which was to be shipped by the appellee upon request made therefor by appellant at any time from July 29, 1907, to July 1, 1908. The appellee was to perform the contract on its part by shipping the coke on request of appellant at any time up to July 1st. If during said time the appellant had made a request for the shipment of the coke, and the appellee had failed or refused to ship same, then appellant could have recovered from appellee such damages as he might have suffered by reason of such failure. But the appellant made no request for shipment, and before the time arrived for the performance of the contract on the part of the appellee, the appellant canceled the order, and by his letter of June 13th unqualifiedly announced that he would not receive the coke, and would not therefore accept performance of the contract on the part of appellant. The contract was then not rescinded, but broken by the appellant; and, by such repudiation of the contract, he absolved the appellant from any further duty to tender or ship the coke. 2 Mechem on Sales, § 1037. The appellee at this time of the repudiation of the contract by the appellant was not in any default, and it did not lie within the power of the appellant to end the contract without the consent of appellee. The appellee had then the right to treat this repudiation as a wrongful putting an end to the contract, and to at once bring his action as for a breach of it.

In the case of Roehm v. Horst, 91 Fed. 345, 33 C. C. A. 550, it was ruled that a positive and absolute refusal to carry out the contract prior to the date of actual default amounted to a breach of the contract, and that after the renunciation of the agreement by the one party the other party should be at liberty to consider himself absolved from any further performance of it, retaining his right to sue for any damage he has suffered from the breach of it. This case was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953, and we think correctly announces the rights of the parties under such circumstances. In the case at bar the appellant, by his letter of June 13th, absolutely and unqualifiedly canceled the contract and renounced its performance. The evidence tends to prove that prior to that time the appellee was ready and willing to perform the contract on its part. It was urging the appellant to send his request for the coke, so that appellee could ship it to him; but the appellant refused to comply with the provisions of the contract on his part, and repudiated it on the ground, as he then claimed, that the coke did not come up to the requisite quality. That issue was presented to the jury, and it was decided against appellant. The appellee was therefore not in any default, and the appellant then wrongfully breached the contract. The appellee thereupon had the right to treat the breach as complete, and to sue for the damage he suffered thereby. It was not necessary then for the appellee to prove that it actually had the coke on hand and tendered same, or that it actually sold the coke for a less price than the contract price. Tiedeman on Sales, § 333; 2 Mechem on Sales, § 1091.

Upon a breach of contract to purchase goods by the buyer the general rule is that the measure of damages is the difference between the price fixed by the contract and the market value of the goods at the time and place of the delivery, provided the contract price exceeds said market value. Glasscock v. Rosengrant, 55 Ark. 376, 18 S. W. 379; Morris v. Cohn, 55 Ark. 401, 17 S. W. 342, 18 S. W. 384; Nelson v. Hirschberg, 70 Ark. 39, 66 S. W. 347; 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 1114. In this case the court gave an instruction as to the measure of damages conforming with this rule. It is urged by the appellant that "there is no proof where, under the terms of the contract, the coke was to be delivered." But the contract itself says that the coke was sold "f. o. b. Van Buren," and this therefore named the place of delivery. If there was no market at the place of delivery, then the value of the goods at the nearest market, plus the cost of transportation to the place of delivery, would be the market value of the goods at such place of delivery. Tiedeman on Sales, § 333. And the evidence in this case sufficiently showed the market value. The instruction given by the court on the measure of damages we think is in general terms correct. If the appellant desired that it should have been more specific in any respect, he should have requested an instruction in that regard himself. Failing to do that, he cannot now complain because the instruction, although correct, is too general. Fordyce v. Jackson, 56 Ark. 595, 20 S. W. 528, 597; White v. McCracken, 60 Ark. 613, 31 S. W. 882. The above principles of law governing the facts of the case will also show that the instructions numbered 1 and 2, as requested by the appellant, were rightly refused. One of the instructions in substance stated that before the appellee could recover in this case, it must show that it actually had the coke on hand, and the other stated that it must actually have sold the coke for a price less than that of the contract, before it could recover more than nominal damages.

The appellant complains of the admission of certain testimony on the part of appellee relative to the character and efficacy of 72-hour economy coke. But we think no error was committed by its introduction, because the appellant was claiming that the coke was not suitable for the purposes for which he purchased, and the testimony thus admitted tended to prove that it was.

The appellant, before filing his answer herein, requested by motion that the complaint be made more definite, and says that error was committed by the trial court in overruling his motion. We have thought it best to consider this contention of appellant after the above statement of the principles governing this case, and which are involved in the cause of action as set out in the complaint. Inasmuch as, by reason of the repudiation of the contract by the appellant before the date of its performance, the appellee could treat it as breached, and at once sue for its damages without further performance on its part, the appellee did not have to allege in the complaint "how many cars of coke it prepared for shipment to defendant."

Furthermore the plaintiff in the complaint alleged, in substance, the performance by it of the conditions of the contract. Section 6133, Kirby's Dig., provides: "In pleading the performance of a condition in a contract it shall not be necessary to state the facts showing such performance, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part."

And it was not necessary for the complaint to allege the items of damage, as requested by appellant. The law fixes the element and measure of the damage in case of a breach of such a contract as is involved in this case, and therefore it was not necessary to be more definite in the allegation of damage.

We have examined the testimony and the instructions, and we find no reversible error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

PARKVIEW LAND CO. v. ROAD IMPROVEMENT DIST. NO. 1 OF JEFFERSON COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 25, 1909.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 19*)—IMPROVEMENT DISTRICTS—VALIDITY OF STATUTE.

As Const. art. 7, § 28, giving the county court exclusive original jurisdiction of matters relating to county roads, does not specify in what manner the jurisdiction shall be exercised, the Legislature has power to prescribe the method by appropriate legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution; and hence Act No. 247, p. 568, Acts 1907, authorizing the county court of Jefferson county to form the whole of that county, or any part thereof, upon a petition of property owners, into a road improvement district for the purpose of constructing, repairing and maintaining public roads within the district, was not violative of that section of the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 64*) — VALIDITY — EFFECT OF PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

If Act No. 247, p. 568, Acts 1907, authorizing the county court of Jefferson county to form the whole or any part of that county into a road improvement district, contravened the power of the Legislature in authorizing the formation of the county into one road improvement district for the purpose of constructing new roads, it would still be valid in so far as it authorized the formation of a part of the county into one district for the purpose of repairing and improving public roads already in existence; that object of the act being perfectly distinct, so that it could stand, though the other fail.

Appeal from Jefferson Chancery Court; J. M. Elliott, Chancellor.

Action by the Parkview Land Company against the Road Improvement District No. 1 of Jefferson County. Decree of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel Taylor, for appellant. Taylor & Jones and W. F. Coleman, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. The Parkview Land Company brought suit in the Jefferson chancery court against Road Improvement District No. 1 of Jefferson County, the directors thereof, and Citizens' Bank. It alleged in its complaint: That it is the owner of certain lands in Jefferson county, and that the same are situate within the boundaries of Road Improvement District No. 1, "which was formed under Act No. 247, p. 568, Acts 1907, and in conformity with the provisions thereof, for the purpose of constructing about eight miles of macadam and gravel road within the district, assessing the cost thereof against the real property benefited in the district.

"That A. Brewster, P. P. Byrd, and J. A. Clement are the duly appointed directors of said district, and that through them, as directors, the district has constructed about eight miles of road in Jefferson county, known as the 'Star City and Cornersville Road,' by grading, ditching, and macadamizing same with crushed rock and gravel at a cost of about $30,000, for which bonds have been issued and sold, and pursuant to a resolution of the said board of directors are declared a lien upon the lands embraced in the district.

"That against plaintiff's land there is assessed a total betterment of $16 upon which an annual tax of 6 per centum has been levied by the directors, which, by the terms of the act, is made a lien against all the lands of the district for which it is provided by said act plaintiff's land may be sold, if it be not paid.

"That Act No. 247, together with the bonds aforesaid, the assessment of betterments, and levy of annual taxes thereon purporting to be a lien against the lands, are invalid, because the act under which the district was formed is in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution of Arkansas vesting exclusive jurisdiction over roads in the county courts.

"That the bonds of the district, together with the assessment of betterments against the lands and the levy of an annual tax of 6 per centum on the betterments provided by the act, and claimed to be a lien against the lands, constitute a cloud upon the title of plaintiff to the lands.

"Unless restrained the district will annoy plaintiff with numerous suits for the collection of the annual taxes.

"That the Citizens' Bank is the purchaser and holder of the bonds.

"Plaintiff prayed that the bonds, together with the resolution, contract, and all acts of the board of directors in declaring the bonds to be a lien upon the lands of the plaintiff, be canceled and held for naught; that the assessment of betterments against the lands and levy of the annual tax before mentioned be canceled and held for naught, and that the district be enjoined from assessing any betterments against the lands of plaintiff, or levying any annual or other tax on such betterments for the purpose of paying the cost of said improvement or reducing the bonds or any thereof, and that plaintiff's title be quieted in it free of such lien."

The defendants answered, and denied "that the act conflicts with the provisions of the Constitution. They stated that the improvement contemplated and as actually made was for the purpose of improving a county road in Jefferson county, already in existence, by the construction of what is known as a macadam or gravel road over, upon, and along such county road as mentioned in the complaint for a distance of about eight miles between the terminal points on the county road as stated; that no part of the road is a new road, nor was it contemplated that any portion of such improvement should involve the laying out or establishing of any new public road or any portion thereof whatsoever.

"They denied that the bonds, assessment of betterments, and levy of taxes now claimed and purporting to be a lien on plaintiff's lands are invalid."

The court found that "the improvements contemplated by the formation of road improvement district No. 1, and as actually made thereunder, were solely for the purpose of improving a county road in Jefferson county, Ark., already in existence, and which county road is an old and established county road of the county, and has been for many years, and that the road so improved is in no part a new road, nor was it contemplated that any portion of such improvement should involve the laying out or establishing of any new public road, or any portion thereof whatsoever," and dismissed the complaint for want of equity. The evidence sustained the findings of the court. Plaintiff appealed.

Appellant contends that Act No. 247, of the Acts of General Assembly of 1907, under which Improvement District No. 1 was formed, is unconstitutional, because it is in conflict with section 28 of article 7 of the Constitution, which is as follows: "The county courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters relating to county taxes, roads, bridges, ferries, paupers, bastardy, vagrants, the apprenticeship of minors, the disbursement of money for county purposes and in every other case that may be necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns of the respective counties. * * *"

Act No. 247 is, in part, as follows:

"Section 1. Whenever a majority in value of the owners of real property in a county or any part of a county (such majority in value to be determined by the assessment for purposes of general taxation in force at the time) shall present a petition to the county court of any county in this state, praying for the formation of a road improvement district, the said county court shall, after having given public notice for twenty days by printed copies in ten places in said county or part thereof, one of which shall be posted on the principal door of the courthouse of said county, or by publication in some newspaper published in said county, determine the fact that such petition is so signed by such majority in value of said landowners. * * *

"After such hearing, or opportunity to be heard, the said county court shall determine, and so enter upon the records, the fact of existence or nonexistence of the assent of the said majority in value to the prayer of said petition. If the said county court shall make an order declaring that the said petition contains a minority in value of the landowners within the territory described in said petition and accompanying map, then the said finding shall be entered of record, and shall not thereafter be questioned except for fraud in the making thereof. Upon ascertaining, as aforesaid, that the necessary majority in value of the landowners have requested the formation of said district, the said county court shall make an order declaring the same to be and exist under the name and style of 'Road Improvement District No. — of the county of —.' That the said district shall be and become a body politic and corporate by said name and may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, and have perpetual succession for the purpose of building, constructing, repairing and maintaining, within the territory described in said petition and order, such public roads as may be mentioned in said petition. * * *

"Sec. 3. In the order declaring said road improvement district to exist, the court shall appoint three persons, owners of real property therein, who shall compose a board of directors for the district. * * *

"Sec. 9. The said board of directors shall have and they are hereby vested with, power and authority, and it is hereby made their duty to build, construct, maintain, and repair such road or roads within their respective districts as provided in the petition as may be deemed necessary to carry out the improvement contemplated, and in doing so shall expend sums of money authorized to be levied and collected under authority of this act. * * *

"Sec. 12. As soon as said board of directors shall have formed the plan of improvement, and shall have ascertained the cost thereof, it shall report the same to the county judge, who shall appoint three electors of the county, who shall constitute a board of assessment of the benefits to be received by the several and particular tracts of lands, or other subdivision of land within said district by reason of the proposed local improvement. * * *

"Sec. 23. Annually during the month of September all road improvement districts created under this act shall file with the clerk of the county in which such improvement district is formed, a settlement showing all collections and moneys received and paid out, with proper vouchers for all such payments, which settlement shall lie over for one month for examination and adjustment, during which time any taxpayer of such district may file exceptions to such settlement.

"Sec. 24. Whether any such exceptions are filed or not, the county court shall proceed to examine such settlement, and shall disallow all unjust charges and credits, if any there be, and shall readjust such settlement whenever an improper item may be included in it, which adjustment shall be finally subject to re-examination in a court of chancery for error or mistake, upon suit brought by such board or by any taxpayer of such district. * * *

"Sec. 28. All roads built, constructed, maintained and repaired under authority of this act shall be public roads, and after the roads shall have been built, constructed, maintained and repaired, the same shall be and constitute a part of the general highways of the county, to be thereafter cared for and maintained by the county court out of the general revenues and special road tax authorized by the Constitution and laws of the state of Arkansas. And in building, constructing, maintaining, or repairing said roads it shall be lawful for the county court, from time to time, to supplement by specific allowances out of the general revenues and special road tax aforesaid, the revenues raised under the authority of this act for the purposes thereof, to the end that the tax levied under the authority of said general laws shall be equitably and fairly apportioned to the several localities in the county, including therein the districts formed under authority of this act."

The act provides that it shall apply only to Jefferson county.

It (act) is not in conflict with the Constitution of this state. Section 28 of article 7 of the Constitution, which defines the jurisdiction of county courts, does not specify or indicate in what manner the jurisdiction shall be exercised. In the absence of such specifications, the Legislature has the power to prescribe by appropriate legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution how it shall be exercised. Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) 126, 236, 242. In the exercise of this power it has from time to time specifically and without question prescribed on what conditions and in what manner public roads and highways shall be laid out, opened, and repaired, the failure of the county court to comply with the mandatory provisions of which renders the orders and judgment of the court invalid (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2992-3016); and in the same manner has prescribed how and by what agencies or instrumentalities such roads and highways shall be repaired and maintained (Kirby's Dig. §§ 7223-7358); and without such legislation the court can do and has done nothing.

Act No. 247 does not usurp the jurisdiction of the county court. It was passed to aid the court in the accomplishment of its object. For that purpose it authorizes the county court to form road improvement districts, to appoint their boards of directors and assessment of benefits, and requires the directors to annually account to it for moneys received by them, and authorizes the court to aid them (improvement districts) by specific allowances out of the revenues at its disposal for the construction, repair, and maintenance of roads; and provides that, after "the roads shall have been built, constructed, maintained and repaired, the same shall be and constitute a part of the general highways of the county, to be thereafter cared for and maintained by the county court." Where the roads are in the condition the improvement districts were formed to place them, the districts cease to exist, and the roads become subject to the care and control of the county court as they were before the formation of the districts; they (districts) being temporary expedients adopted to assist the county court in doing the work imposed upon it, and are not usurpers, but friends and allies of the county court, created by it by authority of the act for the accomplishment of one of its duties—instrumentalities of the county court for that purpose.

If it be true, as contended, that the Legislature cannot authorize the formation of the county into one road improvement district for the purpose of constructing new roads, it can so form a part of the county for the purpose of repairing and improving public roads already in existence as held in Road Improvement Dist. No. 1 v. Glover, 117 S. W. 544, and to that extent Act No. 247 is valid. It comes within the rule to the effect that, "where a statute is divisible and a portion of it is repugnant to the Constitution, so much of the statute is to be upheld as does not conflict with the Constitution and the enactment sustained by rejecting the objectionable part."

As to when a statute is divisible, Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations says: "When, therefore, a part of a statute is unconstitutional, that fact does not authorize the courts to declare the remainder void also, unless all the provisions are connected in subject-matter, depending on each other, operating together with the same purpose, or otherwise so connected together in meaning that it cannot be presumed the Legislature would have passed the one without the other. The constitutional and unconstitutional provisions may be even contained in the same section, and yet be perfectly distinct and separable, so that the first may stand, though the last fall. The point is not whether they are contained in the same section, for the distribution into sections is purely artificial, but whether they are essentially and inseparably connected in substance. If, when the unconstitutional portion is stricken out, that which remains is complete in itself, and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, wholly independent of that which was rejected, it must be sustained. The difficulty is in determining whether the good and bad parts of the statute are capable of being separated within the meaning of this rule. If a statute attempts to accomplish two or more objects, and is void as to one, it may still be in every respect complete and valid as to the other. But, if its purpose is to accomplish a single object only, and some of its provisions are void, the whole must fall unless sufficient remains to effect the object without the aid of the invalid portion. And, if they are so mutually connected with and dependent on each other, as conditions, considerations, or compensations for each other, as to warrant the belief that the Legislature intended them as a whole, and, if all could not be carried into effect, the Legislature would not pass the residue independently, then, if some parts are unconstitutional, all the provisions which are thus dependent, conditional, or connected must fall with them." Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) 246-248. See Little Rock & Ft. Smith Ry. Co. v. Worthen, 46 Ark. 312, 328, 329; Ex parte Deeds, 75 Ark. 542, 87 S. W. 1030; Gray v. Matheny, 66 Ark. 36, 48 S. W. 678; State v. Marsh, 37 Ark. 357; State v. Deschamps, 53 Ark. 490, 14 S. W. 653; Cribbs v. Benedict, 64 Ark. 555, 44 S. W. 707.

The Act 247 authorizes the county court of Jefferson county to form the whole of that county, or any part of it, upon a petition of the majority in value of the owners of real property in the territory formed, into a road improvement district "for the purpose of building, constructing, repairing, and maintaining" public roads within such district.

It is obvious that the act is divisible according to the rule as stated by Judge Cooley, and that so much of the act as authorizes the formation of the whole county into one district and authorizes the building and constructing of new roads can be stricken out, and that so much as authorizes the formation of a part of the county into road improvement district for the repairing, maintaining, and improving roads in existence is complete within itself, and can be executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, without the aid of the part so stricken out and wholly independent of it, and is therefore sustained, and the remainder of the act is rejected and declared void. Road Improvement District No. 1 v. Glover.

Having decided the only questions submitted for our consideration, the decree of the chancery court is affirmed.

WAGNER v. CITIZENS' BANK & TRUST CO.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Nov. 13, 1909.)

1. BANKRUPTCY (§ 326*)—CLAIMS—SET-OFF.
Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68a, 30 Stat. 565 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450), providing that, in cases of mutual debts or credits between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated, and one debt shall be set off against the other, does not enlarge the doctrine of set-off, or enable a party to have a set-off, where the principles of legal or equitable set-off do not authorize it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. § 514; Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 136*)—GENERAL DEPOSITS—RELATION BETWEEN BANK AND DEPOSITOR.

The relation of a bank to its general depositor is that of debtor to the depositor, and the bank holds a lien on the general deposit to secure repayment of the depositor's indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 353; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

3. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 153*)—SPECIAL DEPOSITS—RELATION BETWEEN BANK AND SPECIAL DEPOSITOR.

A bank does not have a lien on special deposits, or on money deposited for a specific purpose, as for collateral security, or for the payment of a particular debt.

4. BANKS AND BANKING (§§ 134, 136*)—SPECIAL DEPOSITS—SET-OFF.

A bank, dealing with a depositor as trustee, and recognizing funds standing in his name as trust funds, and knowing them to be such, cannot appropriate the same to the payment of an individual debt to the bank, as there is no right of set-off against a trust deposit, nor any lien for the trustee's personal debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 353, 356; Dec. Dig. §§ 134, 136.*]

5. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 134*) — SPECIAL DEPOSITS—SET-OFF.

Where, pursuant to an agreement between the creditors of an insolvent business concern, funds of the concern were deposited in a bank, which was a creditor, for pro rata distribution among all the creditors, and the bank, through its president, consented thereto, and the funds were not to be checked out without the signature of the representative of the committee of the creditors, the funds were trust funds for a specific purpose, with the consent of the bank, and it had no right to set-off in such funds against the concern's indebtedness to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 356; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

6. BANKRUPTCY (§ 140*)—RECOVERY OF FUNDS BY TRUSTEE.

A trustee in bankruptcy may recover funds deposited in a bank by the bankrupt for the benefit of all the creditors, pursuant to an agreement between the creditors, including the bank.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Hamilton County; T. M. McConnell, Chancellor.

Suit by T. H. Wagner, trustee in bankruptcy of the Wilcox Furniture Company, against the Citizens' Bank & Trust Company. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Pritchard & Sizer, for appellant. White & Martin and Burkett, Miller & Moore, for appellee.

McALISTER, J. Complainant, as trustee in bankruptcy of the Wilcox Furniture Company, a bankrupt corporation, filed the present bill to recover the sum of $6,110.98 alleged to be due the bankrupt. The bill alleges that at the date of the adjudication of bankruptcy against said Wilcox Furniture Company, and also at the date of the appointment of the complainant as trustee in bankruptcy of said company, there was on deposit in the custody of the Citizens' Bank & Trust Company a fund, amounting to $6,110.98, belonging to said Wilcox Furniture Company, and which fund was a part of its assets. It is alleged that said fund was impressed with the character of a trust fund, and was accumulated under circumstances which fixed upon defendant Bank & Trust Company the character of trustee in relation to said fund. It is alleged in the bill that said money was accumulated as the result of an agreement among the creditors of the said bankrupt, including defendant bank, to the effect that the assets of the bankrupt should be collected, and the proceeds deposited in the defendant bank, and distributed pro rata among all the creditors. It is alleged that at the meeting of the creditors the defendant Citizens' Bank & Trust Company was represented by its president, G. N. Henson, and he concurred in the course then adopted, and agreed to act with the local creditors in pursuing whatever plan might be devised, and to share with them pro rata in the division of the proceeds which might be realized from the sale of the assets of the said Wilcox Furniture Company. It is then alleged that, after the appointment of a temporary receiver in the bankruptcy case, the defendant "set up a claim to said trust fund then on deposit in the bank, and claimed the right to set off, as against said fund, a large amount of indebtedness owing to it from the Wilcox Furniture Company."

It is then claimed that, under the facts set forth in the bill, the defendant is "estopped from appropriating said funds to its own use, to the exclusion of other creditors, or from setting up any adverse claim to the said fund, or from withholding the same from your complainant."

The defendant bank, in its answer, admitted that on the date of the adjudication in bankruptcy there was a balance of $6,110.98 due from it to the bankrupt on deposit in its bank; but it averred that the bankrupt was indebted to the defendant by notes in an amount exceeding said balance, and that said credit balance in favor of the bankrupt was applied pro tanto to the payment of said notes. The bank denied that it held any trust fund belonging to the Wilcox Furniture Company at the time of its adjudication in bankruptcy, or that it was a trustee of said bankrupt with relation to any fund. It admitted that it had refused to pay said credit balance to complainant, and denied the allegations of the bill asserting a right in complainant to recover the same.

Proof was taken, and on the hearing the chancellor decreed that the deposit account in the defendant bank was impressed with the character of a trust fund for the benefit of all the creditors of the Wilcox Furniture Company, and that defendant bank was estopped from appropriating the same to its own use, to the exclusion of the other creditors. He accordingly pronounced a decree in favor of the complainant and against the defendant bank for the sum of $5,810.98, but declined to allow any interest on the recovery, and adjudged the cost against the complainant.

The defendant bank appealed, and has assigned the following errors:

- (1) That the bank is clearly entitled to the right of set-off claimed in its answer; and
- (2) That the trustee in bankruptcy has no right to enforce the alleged trust in behalf of the creditors, even if one existed.

The material facts necessary to be noticed are that in the spring of 1907 the Wilcox Furniture Company was indebted to various creditors in the sum of about $40,000, and had also become delinquent in the payment of its current bills. The resident creditors, after securing inventories and examining into the condition of the company, extended to it further time on its past-due indebtedness, receiving from it notes therefor, and during the summer of 1907 the company succeeded in paying to each of the Chattanooga creditors about 25 per cent. of their respective claims. In the fall of 1907, on account of the financial panic that was then prevailing, the furniture company became still further embarrassed, and about October 1st the local creditors of the concern had another meeting in the city of Chattanooga, and, after conferring with the officers of the company, determined, with their consent, to convert the assets of the furniture company into cash, which should be deposited in the defendant bank, and only so much thereof used as might be necessary to defray current expenses and satisfy the claims of persistent creditors, and the surplus, after the accumulation of sufficient funds, should be divided pro rata among all the creditors, both local and foreign. A committee of three was appointed to represent the interests of all the creditors, and especially to see that the policy adopted by the meeting should be faithfully executed. It was also determined at the said meeting that the committee so selected should appoint a competent bookkeeper, by and with the consent of the Wilcox Furniture Company, who should be placed in the office of that company to represent the interests of the creditors, but who at the same time should be on the pay roll of the furniture company. It should be stated that the defendant bank, as a creditor of the furniture company, was represented at said meeting by its president. At a subsequent meeting a rule was adopted, with the consent of the defendant bank, whereby all the checks drawn by the president of the Wilcox Furniture Company against its bank deposit should be countersigned by the representative of the creditors' committee, and without such signature should not be honored by the bank.

The clear weight of the proof is that Mr. G. N. Henson, president of the Citizens' Bank & Trust Company, attended a number of meetings held by the creditors of the Wilcox Furniture Company and definitely agreed to the policy adopted by the committee of husbanding the resources of the furniture company, which should be deposited in the defendant bank, and after a sufficient accumulation the fund should be divided pro rata among all the creditors of the furniture company. We cannot, of course, undertake to detail the testimony establishing this proposition, and can only state our conclusion as to the weight of the testimony from an examination of the record. We think it undeniable on this record that the Wilcox Furniture Company was insolvent, at least from the date of the appointment of J. L. Morrison as the representative of the committee, and that this fact was known to the bank. The fact is the Wilcox Furniture Company was unable to meet its obligations as they matured in the usual course of business during the spring, summer, and fall of 1907. The proof shows that J. L. Morrison, the representative of the creditors' committee, prepared weekly financial reports of the condition of the furniture company, which he submitted to the creditors' committee. These reports commenced November 21, 1907, and continued down to the close of the week ending January 4, 1908. Mr. Morrison testifies that he kept Mr. Henson advised daily as to the condition of its affairs, and that Mr. Henson approved of the policy of the committee. The trustee in bankruptcy testified that claims amounting to $33,718.90 had been proven against the bankrupt mercantile corporation. He further testified that all the assets of the furniture company had been disposed of, and the entire amount that came into his hands was $9,941.02. It appears that the furniture company was indebted to the defendant bank, when the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced, in the sum of $7,363, and that after the present suit was commenced the defendant bank applied the sum of $6,110.98, standing to the credit of the furniture company on the books of the bank at the close of banking hours on January 17, 1908, to the indebtedness of the Wilcox Furniture Company, leaving the sum of $1,252.50 as the balance due the bank, which it filed as a claim against the bankrupt. It appears that on January 7, 1908, the cash balance standing to the credit of the Wilcox Furniture Company in the Citizens' Bank & Trust Company was only $217.17. It appears that the receipts from the total sales of the business conducted in the usual manner were not more than sufficient to defray the current expenses. The creditors of the company were becoming impatient, and some were threatening litigation. In this crisis the creditors' committee determined to throw the stock of goods on the market and dispose of them at auction sale. This mode of converting the stock of the company into cash was approved by the creditors, including the defendant bank. Accordingly auction sales were commenced on January 8th, and were continued from day to day until January 11th, when certain nonresident creditors of the Wilcox Furniture Company filed a petition of involuntary bankruptcy against it. At this date there was on deposit in the defendant bank the sum of $4,761.25, which had been accumulated as the result of the first three days of the auction sale. Application was made to the trustee in bankruptcy to allow the sales to continue, and under an arrangement with the trustee the sales were continued for two or three days after the petition in bankruptcy was filed. The sum of $2,301.72 was realized from the auction sales after the petition in bankruptcy was filed. We find from the proof that the fund which the bank is now seeking to set off against the indebtedness due it from the furniture company was accumulated as the result of the auction sales, and that it was understood by the defendant bank that this fund was being deposited with it as a special fund for pro rata distribution among all the creditors of the Wilcox Furniture Company.

The defendant bank bases its right to a set-off on section 68a of the bankruptcy act of 1898 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450]), as follows:

"In all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated and one debt shall be set off against the other, and the balance only shall be allowed or paid."

In the case of New York, etc., Bank v. Massey, 192 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 48 L. Ed. 380, the Supreme Court of the United States, in dealing with the clause just mentioned, says:

"Section 68a of the bankruptcy act of 1898 is almost a literal reproduction of section 20 of the act of 1867."

In Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 610, 21 L. Ed. 731, in construing section 20 of the act of 1867 (Act March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. 526, c. 176), the court said as follows:

"This section was not intended to enlarge the doctrine of set-off, or to enable a party to make a set-off in cases where the principles of legal or equitable set-off did not previously authorize it."

The general rule is that the relation of the bank to the depositor is that of debtor and creditor, and the bank is the debtor of the depositor. Harris v. Bank, 110 Tenn. 249, 75 S. W. 1053.

"The bank holds a lien on the deposits in its hands to secure the repayment of the depositor's indebtedness, and may enforce that lien as the debts mature by applying the debtor's deposits upon them, thus setting the two off against each other." 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 835.

It is also stated:

"The right of the bank to apply deposits to the extinguishment of the depositor's indebtedness as it matures grows out of the doctrine that relationship between the bank and the depositor is that of debtor and creditor." 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 835.

But it is well settled that a bank does not have "a lien upon special deposits or monies deposited for a specific purpose, as for collateral security, or for the payment of a particular debt." 3 Amer. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 837, and cases cited.

Again it is said:

"The proposition that there is no right of set-off against a trust deposit, nor any lien for the trustee's personal debts, is axiomatic." 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 837, and cases cited.

In State v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 128 Iowa, 597, 105 N. W. 159, it is said:

"Where a bank, which was a creditor of an insolvent estate, received a deposit of funds from the receiver, it could not apply such funds on its claims, nor plead such claims as an offset against the deposit."

In State Bank v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479, 98 N. W. 20, it is said:

"Where the bank deals with a depositor as trustee, and recognizes funds standing in his name as trust funds, knowing them to be such, it cannot appropriate them to the payment of the trustee's individual indebtedness to the bank."

This question arose in Re Davis (D. C.)

119 Fed. 950, wherein an insolvent partnership sold its stock of goods, and, by its direction, the purchaser deposited its price in the bank, taking a receipt therefor, showing that the money was to be prorated among the several creditors of the firm as their interests might appear. Subsequently, on petition of creditors, the partnership was adjudicated an involuntary bankrupt. After said adjudication, the bank undertook to apply the money so deposited on certain notes of the firm held by it and another creditor, without the consent of the depositor or the bankrupt, and to refuse the demands of the trustee therefor. Held, that the bank held the deposit in a fiduciary capacity as a trust fund, which precluded it from asserting an adverse claim thereto after the bankruptcy as against the trustee.

Among other things, the court said:

"Upon the merits of the controversy, would the bank be in position to successfully contest the right of the trustee to the money? Its ability to do so would depend upon its right to apply the fund to its own use. While a general deposit by a merchant of money in a bank creates the relation of debtor and creditor, and authorizes the bank to use the money as its own, such result does not obtain when the deposit is made for a special purpose, as, for example, to be paid to creditors, as was the case here."

In Wilson v. Dawson, 52 Ind. 515, it was said:

"It is a general rule that funds deposited in bank for a special purpose, known to the bank, cannot be withheld from that purpose, to the end that they may be set off by the bank against a debt due to it from the depositor."

In Lynam v. National Bank, 98 Me. 448, 57 Atl. 799, it appeared that:

"In June, 1902, the Standard Granite Company sent to each of its creditors, including the Belfast National Bank, a circular letter stating that it was unable to meet its obligations. A few days later in the same month it called a meeting of its creditors, at which meeting the Belfast National Bank was represented by one of its directors. At this meeting a committee of three creditors was appointed, with instructions to secure, if possible, the discharge of certain attachments which had been placed upon the property of the granite company. On September 4th, following, the directors of the granite company passed a resolution, admitting the inability of the company to pay its debts, and its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground. On the day following the granite company sent to the Belfast National Bank a deposit of $800. At that time the granite company had a balance of $1.04 standing to its credit on the books of the Belfast National Bank. The intention of the Standard Granite Company in making this deposit of $800 was that it should be held by the bank until a trustee in bankruptcy for the granite company should be appointed; but no notice of such intention was given to the bank, and the deposit was credited to the account of the granite company and added to the balance of $1.04 then standing on the books of the company.

"At the time this deposit was made the granite company was indebted to the bank to the amount of several thousand dollars. On the day following the making of this deposit of $800, a petition in bankruptcy was filed against the granite company, and it was duly adjudged a bankrupt, and one Lynam was appointed and qualified as its trustee in bankruptcy. Said trustee made a demand on the bank for the $800, which demand was refused; the bank claiming that it would offset the deposit on the past-due notes of the granite company.

"For some time past, all the efforts of the granite company * * * and that of its creditors had been to obtain a distribution of its assets equitably, and to that end the first attempt was to discharge the attachments. Honest dealing on the part of the granite company, which is to be presumed, required that all of its assets should be husbanded for the benefit of all of its creditors. Pending the effort to obtain an assignment or adjudication of bankruptcy, it had $800 in money, which it intended to retain, and ought to retain; as part of its general assets. As some time would elapse before it could be thus administered, it was deposited in the bank, really for safe-keeping. All these facts were well known to the bank when it received the deposit. It knew it was not intended as a payment, and did not treat it as such. The bank could not fail to understand that it was intended that this money should be added to the other assets for the general benefit as it equitably ought to be. It certainly understood that the granite company, under the then existing circumstances, would not voluntarily subject this portion of its assets to a set-off by the bank, to the injury of other creditors.

"Upon consideration of all the circumstances, and the situation of the parties, we think it a fair inference that the bank understood that the deposit was intended only for safe-keeping, to be ultimately appropriated for the benefit of all the creditors of the granite company, and that in fact it was a deposit in trust for that purpose. And it being charged with such trust, the plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy, is entitled to recover."

We are of opinion that these authorities are applicable in the present instance. It distinctly appears on this record that the funds accumulated in the defendant bank were deposited for a special purpose, with the knowledge and consent of the president of the bank; that the funds could not be checked out by the president of the furniture company without the signature of J. L. Morrison, representative of the creditors' committee. The fund thereby became a trust deposit for specific purposes, with the knowledge and consent of the bank, and the latter had no right of set-off in said fund against the bankrupt's indebtedness to the bank.

Counsel for the bank relies on several cases as announcing a contrary doctrine, namely, New York County Bank v. Massey, 192 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 48 L. Ed. 390; Clark v. Northampton Nat. Bank, 160 Mass. 26, 35 N. E. 108; Lowell v. International Trust Co., 158 Fed. 781, 86 C. C. A. 137.

In Bank v. Massey, supra, the court said: "It cannot be doubted that, except under special circumstances, or where there is a statute to the contrary, a deposit of money upon general account with a bank creates the relation of debtor and creditor. The money deposited becomes part of the general funds of the bank, to be dealt with by it as other moneys, to be loaned to customers and parted with at the will of the bank, and the right of the depositor is to have this debt repaid in whole or in part by honoring checks drawn against the deposits. It creates an ordinary debt, not a privilege or right of a fiduciary character."

But in that case the facts did not show a deposit for a special purpose, with the knowledge and consent of the bank, but only a deposit in the ordinary course of business. In such a case the authorities are uniform that the bank has the right to set off its notes against the deposits.

In Clark v. Northampton National Bank, supra, the case seems to have turned on a finding of fact by the lower court. The court said as follows:

"The amount of the notes is to be set off against the balance due on account of the deposits at the time of the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, unless the deposits made after March 8, 1892, are to be construed as made with a view to give a preference or to effect a fraudulent transfer of property, contrary to the statute relating to insolvency, or as made upon a trust for the creditors. Whether these deposits were made in violation of either section 96 or section 98 of chapter 157 of the Public Statutes was a question of fact, and the court, trying the case without a jury, has found that they were not so made. On the facts found by the court, the rulings on this part of the case were right.

"We are not certain that the exceptions set out all the evidence. Enough, however, is recited to show that the plaintiff had some ground to contend that after March 8th the bank knew that the business of the Florence Tack Company was being carried on with a view of converting its assets into cash for the benefit of its creditors, and that the company must either effect a compromise with its creditors or go into insolvency. The money received after March 8th ought perhaps to have been specially deposited; but this was not done, and the account of the tack company with the bank continued unchanged in form. There is evidence that the defendant's cashier understood that, after March 8th, checks were to be drawn only to 'pay the help' of the company; but there is also evidence that checks were in fact drawn for other purposes and were paid. There appears to be no doubt that the officers of the bank knew of the insolvency of the company on March 8th. Still it is a question of fact whether the transactions between the company and the bank after March 8th were had under an implied contract or understanding on the part of both parties different from that which existed before. The [lower] court has in effect found that after March 8th the money continued to be deposited and checks to be drawn on the same understanding as that which existed before that time; that is, upon the understanding that the relation of the parties continued to be the ordinary one of a depositor with a bank of discount and deposit. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that this finding was wrong. It was for the court below to draw the proper inferences of fact, and the exceptions disclose no errors of law."

In Lowell v. International Trust Co., supra, it was said:

"Portions of the propositions submitted to us by the trustee allege that the bankrupt had been insolvent for a considerable time, and that during that period it had been struggling along with its business, with some support from its creditors, and with an understanding between the International Trust Company and some other creditors, by virtue of which all of them, including the International Trust Company, should receive certain pro rata benefits out of whatever funds might come from the Thomas & Pike Coal Company. Therefore it is claimed that the funds now used for are held by the International Trust Company in a quasi trust, enforceable by the trustee."

The court held: "A trustee in bankruptcy has no interest, which he can enforce for the benefit of the general creditors, in an arrangement between the bankrupt and certain creditors, by which money deposited with one, which was a bank, was to be held in trust and distributed pro rata between them, and which was not prohibited by the bankruptcy statute."

The facts appearing in Lowell v. International Trust Co. are very different from the facts presented on the present record. There the trustee was seeking to enforce a contract between the bankrupt and certain creditors. In the present instance the fund was accumulated in defendant bank for the benefit of all the creditors, and the bank had become a party to the arrangement. In the present case the trustee clearly has a right to recover a fund which had been deposited by the bankrupt for the benefit of all the creditors.

We are therefore of opinion that the bank is estopped, by its conduct and by its agreement with the other creditors, from asserting any right to a set-off against the funds derived from the sales of the stock of the furniture company, and that the decree of the chancellor so holding was correct; and the same is affirmed.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 105*)—CONTRACT OF SALE—RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMAN—DISABILITY AS EXCUSE FOR LACHES.

The same rule should apply to a married woman as to an infant as to her right to sue for specific performance of a contract of sale, and her disability, like that of an infant, is not an excuse for unreasonable delay in making payment; and after a great lapse of time, and a large increase in the value of the property, a married woman, notwithstanding her disability, will not be awarded specific performance of a contract of sale evidenced by a title bond in favor of her father, on which the purchase money was long due when he died.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Campbell County; Hugh G. Kyle, Chancellor.

Bill by Mary A. Campbell and another against J. S. Bartlett and others. The bill was dismissed, and complainants appeal. Affirmed.

James M. Hill, Jno. P. Rogers, and Agee & Peters, for appellants. W. A. Owens and Jourolmon, Welcker & Smith, for appellees.

NEIL, J. The bill in the present case was filed to recover a one-eighth undivided interest in a tract of land described. This land was sold, or the greater part of it, in 1853, to James S. Murray, complainant's father, by a title bond executed by one J. M. Cooper. In 1861, 50 acres additional were added, and the old title bond taken up and a new one executed, putting both tracts into one. In December, 1864, Murray died, without having paid the purchase money for either tract. His children all married and moved away, except F. M. Murray. He remained upon the land with his mother until about the year 1871, when, becoming convinced that they could never pay the balance of purchase money due, which, with interest, was then more than the original sum, they surrendered the bond, and the possession of the land, to the vendor, Cooper. He placed a tenant in possession, one Reuben Marlow, who remained until about 1880. P. W. Rutherford then went upon the land, and remained until the summer of 1881. After this F. M. Murray was upon the land for a while, but it does not clearly appear how long he remained. Perhaps others of the heirs at law of James S. Murray were upon parts of the land for a year or two at a time, but none of them attempted a permanent residence. In 1886 several of the heirs of the vendor, Cooper, who had died in 1880, conveyed their interest in the land now in controversy, along with many hundred other acres besides, to F. M. Murray, and in 1886 others of these heirs conveyed to him, so that, when these deeds were made, he was the ostensible owner of seven-eighths interest in 600 or 700 acres of land, including the 300 acres now in controversy. On May 2, 1890, F. M. Murray conveyed his seven-eighths interest in the lands thus acquired to William Baird, S. C. Baird, and Jeremiah Smith. On March 25, 1902, these persons conveyed the same interest to Benjamin D. Bartlett. On April 3, 1902, William Baird acquired the remaining one-eighth interest from the heirs of the persons representing that outstanding interest in the Cooper estate, and on January 8, 1903, he conveyed it to Benjamin D. Bartlett. On April 1, 1905, Benjamin D. Bartlett conveyed all of the lands to J. S. Bartlett, and in the same year the latter conveyed an undivided one-third interest to H. M. La Follette, and a portion was also conveyed by him to the La Follette Coal, Iron & Railroad Company.

On July 7, 1906, the complainant, joined by her husband, Wyatt F. Campbell, filed the present bill against the said J. S. Bartlett, H. M. La Follette, and the La Follette Coal, Iron & Railroad Company, in which she asserted her right to a one-eighth undivided equitable interest as heir at law of James S. Murray, deceased, in the land covered by the title bond made to her father in 1861, on the ground that she had never consented to the surrender of that bond, expressing a willingness to pay out of her share any of the purchase money remaining unpaid. She learned about the year 1880, or shortly thereafter, that the title bond had been surrendered. She made no complaint until 1890, when she told her brother, F. M. Murray, that she still claimed her one-eighth interest. She also made the same statement, in substance, to William Baird, about the time he was negotiating his purchase of the land. In 1890 she employed an attorney to bring suit; but he was the son-in-law of F. M. Murray, and after a conference with the latter he declined the employment. After this she slept upon her rights until the present bill was filed, 16 years later, or 26 years after the surrender of the title bond, and 42 years after her father's death. She has, however, all the time been under coverture.

The present defendants had no actual knowledge of complainant's claim when they purchased and obtained deeds in fee to the lands; but there was, perhaps, sufficient reference to a title bond or bonds, in the deeds made by the Cooper heirs to F. M. Murray, which were in their chain of title, to start them upon an inquiry which would have led to a discovery of the existence of the title bond of 1861, and of the fact that complainant had no hand in surrendering that bond, and that she was still claiming an interest in the land; that is, if we can assume that the parties indicated, the Coopers and F. M. Murray, were willing to make true replies to inquiries, and would have done so. The title bond was not registered; but it seems to have been handed, with the unpaid notes, as papers no longer useful, to F. M. Murray, by the Coopers, when they made the deeds to him, and the bond was by him handed over to William Baird, along with the deed made to him and his co-purchasers. The Cooper deeds did not describe any special title bond, but stated in general terms that title bonds had been executed on the lands, and never paid for, and that they did not warrant against such incumbrances.

When the title bond was executed the land was worth only $1 an acre, because of little value for agricultural purposes and unavailable for mineral uses, being in a mountainous country, remote from railroads. Within recent years a railroad has been built into that country, and coal discovered upon the land, close to transportation facilities. As a consequence, the land is now worth $50 per acre, an increase in value of 50-fold.

In disposing of the case, we shall assume, without deciding, that the facts stated were sufficient to fix the defendants with constructive notice, under our registration laws (Teague v. Sowder, 121 Tenn. 132, 114 S. W. 484), though it is worthy of remark that after such a great length of time as had ensued when Bartlett bought he might perhaps assume that any outstanding title bonds, not already enforced, had been abandoned, and, in that event, his defense of innocent purchaser would be available. We shall not consider the general subject of estoppels against married women arising out of conduct on their part deceiving and misleading persons relying thereon, upon different phases of which we have cases. Galbraith v. Lunsford, 87 Tenn. 89, 9 S. W. 365, 1 L. R. A. 522; Pilcher v. Smith, 2 Head, 208; Cooley v. Steele, Id. 605; Fletcher v. Coleman, Id. 384; Stephenson v. Walker, 8 Baxt. 289; Howell v. Hale, 5 Lea, 405; Berrigan v.

Goodbar*, 104 Tenn. 638, 645, 58 S. W. 282. And see Duckwall v. Kisner, 136 Ind. 99, 101, 35 N. E. 697; Catherwood v. Watson, 65 Ind. 576; Minnich v. Shaffer, 135 Ind. 634, 34 N. E. 987.

We are of the opinion, however, that the controversy must be decided adversely to complainant, on the ground that the present bill is in effect one to enforce a specific performance of the contract of sale evidenced by the title bond. Such rights must be enforced with reasonable promptness, even where the writing does not in terms make time of the essence of the contract, especially when there has been a great increase in the value of the property. Smith's Heirs v. Christmas, 7 Yerg. 565. In that case eight months was held too long a delay, although the complainants were infants, who had succeeded to the rights of their father, who had died before the maturity of the contract. The uncle of the infants assumed to act in their behalf after the death of their father. He testified that on the 1st day of January, the time when the purchase money was due, under the contract, he did not consider it an advantageous contract. It seems to have been thought better then to lie by and speculate on the advantages of the contract. The property might rise, or it might fall, in value, or remain stationary. In either of the latter two events, the friends of the infants did not intend to execute the contract. The court said they could not, after waiting eight months and willfully neglecting to do anything, and by their backwardness authorizing the inference that they did not intend to do anything, and after the property had increased threefold, come into a court of equity and get the contract enforced. "It would be most inequitable if they could," continued the court, "and it is not believed that, in any case circumstanced as this is, has a court of equity ever decreed in favor of a complainant. It is true that the simple fact of a rise in the value of the property is not a ground for refusing a specific performance. 2 Ver. 42, 43, 280. Nor do we consider that, in a contract like this, where there is no condition that it shall be void on the nonperformance of one of the parties, time is of the essence of the contract; but time in such a case is material, and if there be no excuse for nonperformance, according to the stipulation of the bargain, and the party has willfully lain by, until the circumstances of the estate have changed, and a performance would be ruinous to the other party, a specific performance will not be decreed. In this case Christmas gave up an advantageous contract with Camp, which he had made on the faith of this. Lands in that section of the county had greatly increased in value before an offer was made in behalf of the complainants to perform this contract, during all which time their friends had willfully forborne to do anything in the business. They came now too late to obtain the assistance of this court."

In another opinion in the same case the English doctrine was stated to be: "When a court of equity holds that time is not of the essence of the contract, it proceeds upon the principle that, having regard to the nature of the subject, time is immaterial to the value, and is urged only by way of pretense and evasion. Dolorch v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & Stuart, 590. Where the contract upon its face is to be void in case of default, there the defendant may so consider it, though, if he waive the default, the circumstances remaining the same, he will be bound by the contract. Where there is any change in the circumstances, either of the estate or the parties, as the falling in of lives, or any great rise or fall in value, a specific performance will not be decreed. Where the delay has operated injuriously to the defendant, or where his object in making the contract has thereby been defeated, a performance will be refused. Crofton v. Ormsby, 2 Sch. & Lef. 604. Where the party has lain by and speculated, or has trifled and shown a backwardness in carrying the contract into effect, no decree will be made in his favor. 12 Ves. 228; Guest v. Humphrey, 5 Ves. 818. See, also, Sugden on Vend. 277, 278, 281; Jeremy, 461, 462." Speaking further to the same matter the court said: "If this be the state of the English law, what ought to be the rule in this country? In England land is of a permanent and fixed value. There is but very little fluctuation in price, so that what is a fair valuation in one time is generally so a year or two afterwards. This rule, then, that time is not of the essence of the contract, restricted as it is by the modern doctrines of the court, may have pretty extensive application in practice in that country, consistently with the substantial rights of the parties. But as often as the application of the rule would not subserve the ends of justice, the courts have departed from this rule and refused to enforce the contract. In this country, which is comparatively but newly settled, where the price of land depends upon the tide of emigration, the settling and improving of particular sections, the springing up of towns, and other causes operating to change the price in particular neighborhoods, as well as larger sections, the rule, restricted as it should be, would be found of much less practical utility. In this country, time should be regarded as a circumstance of decisive importance, fixing the necessity upon the negligent party of observing that the defendant has waived the default, or that no inconvenience or loss will arise to him, and that the property is substantially of the same value. This is the view taken of the subject by Chancellor Kent in Benedict v. Lynch, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 379, 7 Am. Dec. 484, with whose general course of reasoning in that case I entirely concur."

Upon the subject of the infancy of the complainants, the court said: "But it is said that laches cannot be imputable to these complainants, because they are infants. Upon this part of the case we cannot better express the views we entertain than in the language of the Chancellor. 'It is true,' he says, 'in many cases this answer to the objection of time elapsed would be good for some reasonable delay on the part of the infants. In all cases, depending on the question of abandonment simply, or backwardness and trifling conduct, they would be considered as standing on more favorable grounds than adults. But I cannot assent to the position that this is to be allowed as an excuse, when the fault or delay, from whatever cause it may have arisen, other than the acts of the defendant, has been the means of defeating the object of the defendant, or where the property has greatly risen or fallen in value in the meantime. If we adopt such a rule, while we relieve one party from an inconvenience, we do great injustice to the other. In cases of this kind a court of equity will leave the parties to their legal remedies, and will let the loss fall where Providence has placed it. This view of the question is supported and enforced by that able Chancellor, Lord Reddesdale, in the case of Griffin v. Griffin, 1 Sch. & Lef. 352. Infants, in such cases, must always act by their friends, and their rights will be saved or lost by the activity or negligence of those whom nature has placed around them for their protection. If this should not be the case, the infants would be protected until maturity, which might be for 20 years or more, and, in the meantime, both parties to the contract might be dead, and the situation of the parties interested, and the value and circumstances of the property, entirely changed.' If the infancy of the complainants be an excuse for a delay of 8 months, it may, for the same reason, excuse a delay of 20 years. The injustice such a rule would inflict upon the other party could not be endured. But in this case the friends of these infants were alive to their interests. They forbore to do anything so long only as they believed it would be for the benefit of the infants to forbear; but when they find, by the sudden rise of property, that it would be for their interest to act, we find them promptly doing all they could to secure the speculation. As the notes were at last executed and tendered by the administrators, they could have been as easily executed and tendered by them at any previous time, so that there is no pretense for an excuse for the delay growing out of the infancy of the complainants. Had Smith's death, just before the time the contract was to be completed, been attended with any embarrassment or difficulty, so that the friends of the children knew not how to act, or were unable to act in the business, and if, so soon as they reasonably could have done so, advice had been taken, and an offer made to perform the agreement on their part, this would have been a good excuse for delay; and, although the lands might have risen in value, still the contract would have been enforced. But this was not the case. The administrator, whose duty it was to act, was appointed at the October court. He was acquainted with the nature of the contract, and knew that it devolved on him to perform it on the part of Smith; but, not believing it an advantageous one on the part of Smith's children, he purposely declined doing anything until the great rise in the value of the land convinced him that it would be greatly to their advantage to have the bargain executed, and then he was willing to put himself to great personal inconvenience to secure it for them. If, after all this, the infancy of these complainants should be held sufficient to excuse this delay, under the circumstances of this case, the friends of other infants will have the strongest temptation to commit the most deliberate frauds upon persons with whom the ancestors of such infants may contract. They may purposely hold back for years, until some favorable change in the estate shall occur, and then come forward and offer to perform, and plead the infancy of the children as an excuse for the delay." See, also, on the general subject, Mann v. Dun, 2 Ohio St. 187; Brown v. Haines, 12 Ohio, 1; Henry v. Conn, Id. 193; Scott's Ex'rs v. Barber's Heirs, 14 Ohio, 547. See, also, Benedict v. Lynch, 1 Johns. Ch. 370, 7 Am. Dec. 484, 1 L. Ed. N. Y. Ch. Rep. 175, and note. In Henry v. Conn, the court held that, where the purchase money becomes due in the lifetime of the vendee, the infancy of his heir will not excuse delay in making payment, so as to induce the court to decree performance against the vendor, after a great lapse of time. This rule was approved and followed in the subsequent case of Scott's Ex'rs v. Barber's Heirs, supra.

In the case we have before us, the purchase money had long been due when the father of complainant died. In this class of cases, at least, we think the same rule should apply to a married woman as to an infant, to say nothing of the more stringent rule laid down in Smith's Heirs v. Christmas, supra. We are, however, further of opinion that after a great lapse of time, and a large increase in the value of the property, the rule of Smith's Heirs v. Christmas is a proper one to be applied, even to married women. Certainly the natural inhibition upon infants, arising out of their immaturity, is no less than the supposed restraint of coverture in cases of married women, preventing them from setting up claims to valuable property. The underlying reason in each instance is the public policy that supports the rule.

The present decision is confined to cases wherein specific performance is sought. We do not impair the authority of Dodd v. Benthall, 4 Heisk. 601, and Moore v. Walker, 3 Lea, 656, and similar cases wherein a married woman seeks to set aside deeds made by her, or to recover property the title to which has been vested in her.

On the grounds stated, we are of the opinion that the decree of the chancellor dismissing the bill should be affirmed.

The Chief Justice, while concurring, is of the opinion that the court should go further, and authoritatively determine that, after such a lapse of time, one examining the records in the register's office, and seeing such a statement concerning title bonds as appears in the deeds referred to, would have the right to presume conclusively that such title bonds had been abandoned, and were hence no longer in the way of his making a purchase. In brief, he is of the opinion that, after such a length of time, recitals of the character above referred to would not put the purchaser upon inquiry.

FT. WORTH DRIVING CLUB v. FT. WORTH FAIR ASS'N.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 44*)—STIPULATIONS RUNNING WITH LAND—VIOLATION BY SUBLESSEE.

A stipulation in a lease forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors on the premises, under penalty of a forfeiture of the lease, runs with the land, and a violation thereof by a sublessee furnishes as good ground for forfeiture as if committed by the original lessee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 110; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 62*)—COVENANTS IN LEASE—BREACH.

Where the violation by a sublessee of a stipulation in the lease against selling liquor on the premises will work a forfeiture of the lease and destroy valuable rights of the lessee, injunction will lie to restrain such violation, where the contract of subleasing, while it does not forbid, does not authorize such sale of liquors; both parties holding subject to the original lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-127; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 103*)—LEASE—WAIVER OF CONDITIONS.

A lessee could not waive, in favor of a sublessee, a stipulation in the original lease against the selling of intoxicating liquors on the premises, and providing for a forfeiture of the lease for violation of such stipulation.

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Second Supreme Judicial District.

Action by the Ft. Worth Driving Club against the Ft. Worth Fair Association. From a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals dissolving an interlocutory injunction (121 S. W. 213), plaintiff brings error. Reversed, and injunctions ordered reinstated.

Q. T. Moreland, for plaintiff in error. Mike E. Smith, Marshall Spoons, Smith, Turner, Bradley & Powell, and Bryan & Spoons, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. This writ of error is taken from the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals, dissolving an interlocutory injunction granted by the district judge at the suit of the Driving Club against the Fair Association, restraining the sale of intoxicating liquors on grounds held under lease.

The land formerly belonged to David Evans, who let it to the Driving Club for a term of 15 years; the contract providing that the sale of intoxicating liquors on the premises should not be permitted during the term, and giving the lessor the right of re-entry for failure of lessee to perform any of the covenants and agreements. The Driving Club improved the premises with barns, stalls, well, race track, etc., at a cost of some $6,000, and its rights under the lease were very valuable. The Driving Club let to the Fair Association, with Evans' consent, the right to use the premises two weeks each year for five years for the purposes of the association, the contract between them containing no provision concerning the sale of liquor, but the provision of the original lease being known to the sublessee. Evans thereafter conveyed the land, and assigned his rights under the original lease to Johnson. At the time the injunction was sued out the Fair Association was permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the premises, and Johnson refused to give his assent thereto, and notified the Driving Club that he would forfeit the lease if the selling continued. Thereupon the Driving Club sued out the injunction. The Court of Civil Appeals dissolved the injunction for the reason that the sublessee was not a party to, nor bound by, the covenant made between the lessor and lessee. It is true that there is no privity between a lessor and a sublessee, such as makes the covenants in the lease binding on the latter personally; but it is equally true that stipulations like that in question, forbidding the use of the premises for a specified purpose, run with the land, and are in the nature of conditions, and the forbidden use of them by a sublessee is as much a violation of such a provision, and furnishes as good ground for forfeiture and re-entry as if it were the act of the original lessee. 24 Cyc. 1064; 22 Cyc. 861.

The texts referred to are well sustained by the authorities cited, which establish, not only the substantive rule stated, but also that the injunction is the proper remedy where others are inadequate. In Wheeler v. Earle, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 31, 51 Am. Dec. 42, the substantive doctrine is thus stated: "This restriction upon the manner of using the premises runs with the land, and is binding upon the estate in the hands of subtenants. They take only the title of the lessee, and with the like limitations and restrictions. Such use by a subtenant holding under the original lessee, for an unlawful purpose, would equally forfeit the estate. This principle seems very clear, and hence, in the treatises upon the relation of landlord and tenant, it is said that when an estate is held subject to forfeiture, for breaches of numerous covenants or stipulations, some of which may be likely to be violated, it is expedient always to take from a sublessee good security against all such violations of the various stipulations in the original lease as may subject the original lessee to lose his whole estate." Since the alleged action of the sublessee, if not restrained, would have the effect of forfeiting the lease and destroying the valuable rights of the lessee, it seems plain that the case is one which calls especially for the exercise of the preventive power of a court of equity. The contract between the two does not forbid, but neither does it authorize, the sale of liquor in violation of the original lease, subject to which both hold. The latter contains the provision the violation of which by the sub-lessee will work to the original lessee the injury to prevent which the aid of equity is sought. We think that is enough.

We are of opinion, also, that the facts relied on to show that Evans, or the Driving Club, or both, had waived the provision against the sale of liquor are not sufficient to justify such a conclusion. Beyond several permits granted by Evans, consenting for the Fair Association to conduct such a business for two weeks at a time, restricted to that time, and providing that the provision in the lease should continue in force thereafter, nothing of a definite character is shown. Certainly nothing appears which would justify this court in holding that the trial court was bound to find that the provision was waived, and to deny the relief on that ground. It is shown that the Driving Club did not object to the forbidden use of the premises so long as the lessor did not object, but it could not waive the right of its lessor, and its claim to the aid of equity arises from the threat of the lessor rightfully to cancel the lease because of the wrongful act of the sub-lessee.

The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals will be reversed, and the injunction granted by the district judge will be reinstated.

Reversed.

DILLEY v. JASPER LUMBER CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

RECEIVERS (§ 139*) — SALE — VACATING — COLLUSION.

A receiver was appointed to sell property for not less than $35,000 at private sale, and afterward the order of sale was modified so as to permit a public sale for not less than $15,000, and thereafter all limitations as to price were removed, and the property was finally sold for about $2,150, making it necessary to appropriate the property upon which intervenor had a lien to payment of receivers' certificates, etc. Intervenor moved to vacate the sale, alleging that the modification of the order of sale was without notice to him, and that the sale was collusive between the receiver and the debtor, and was for a grossly inadequate price, and that he was prevented from contesting the confirmation of the sale by a misunderstanding between his attorney and the court as to the time the sale was to be affirmed. Held, that the facts required the sale to be set aside, so that it was error to refuse to hear evidence on the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. §§ 243, 244; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Fourth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by C. S. Basham against the Jasper Lumber Company, in which George E. Dilley intervened. Motion by intervenor to remove the receiver and set aside a sale was denied, and from affirmance thereof by the Court of Civil Appeals (114 S. W. 878) intervenor brings error. Reversed and remanded.

A. D. Lipscomb, for plaintiff in error. McDowell & Duffie, W. D. Wilkerson, E. A. Easterling, Hunt, Meyer & Townes, and A. R. Masterson, for defendants in error.

GAINES, C. J. C. S. Basham brought this suit against the Jasper Lumber Company upon a promissory note, alleging that the sawmill, the running of which was the lumber company's business, was shut down, and that work could not be resumed, for the want of ready money, and prayed that a receiver be appointed to operate the mill and to wind up the business. At the same time the lumber company filed an answer and joined in the prayer for the appointment of a receiver, which was accordingly done, and W. C. McClelland was appointed and gave bond and entered upon the duties of the position. On the — day of April, 1906 (five months after the institution of the suit and the appointment of a receiver), George E. Dilley filed a petition of intervention, in which he alleged that the lumber company was indebted to him to the amount of certain notes and attorney's fees and that it had executed to him a mortgage to secure the same. On the 5th day of March, 1906, the court ordered the receiver to sell the property at a sum not less than $35,000, at private sale, and, if not sold in 30 days, then to advertise and sell to the highest bidder for cash. On the 21st day of April, 1906, the order of sale was modified, the upset price being placed at $15,000. Finally all restrictions were removed from the order of sale, and the receiver was authorized to sell at any price he could get at a public sale. The property was sold as follows: 1 engine, heater, and pump for $475.15; the property subject to Dilley's mortgage for $800; 115,000 feet of lumber for $375; and all the residue of the property for the sum of $500—and A. P. Laughlin became the purchaser of the whole. The sale was confirmed by the court. Thereupon came George E. Dilley, the plaintiff in error in this proceeding, and on July 5, 1906, filed a motion to remove W. C. McClelland as receiver of the property in suit on the grounds: That the receivership was collusive as between him and the president of the defendant company; that the final modification of the order of sale had been made without notice to the intervenor; that the sale of the property was for a grossly inadequate price; that it was his intention to have contested a confirmation of the sale; that on account of some misunderstanding between his attorney and the judge of the court the question of confirmation of the report of sale was taken up at an unexpected hour, when his attorney was not present; and that by reason of the collusion between the receiver and the purchaser at the sale the property was sold at a grossly inadequate price. The court declined to hear evidence in support of the motion and sustained exceptions to the allegations therein contained.

The action of the court in declining to hear evidence in support of the motion is assigned as error, and we think the assignment is well taken. If the facts alleged in the motion are true, the sales ought to be set aside. The aggregate of the money received for the property was about one-tenth of the original price and about one-fifth of the second lowest price at which the receiver was authorized to make the sale. The result was that, notwithstanding Dilley had a lien upon property which brought $800, the price was appropriated to pay the receiver's certificates—and, it may be, other expenses of administration. For this error the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded.

There is no statement of facts in the record, and for this reason the Court of Civil Appeals held, as we think, correctly, that the other assignments of error could not be considered.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

BYRNE v. ROBISON, Land Com'r.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 152*)—NECESSARY DEFENDANTS.

Where the Commissioner of the General Land Office awarded school land to relator as purchaser, and afterwards canceled the award, and awarded them to W., W., while a proper party, is not a necessary defendant to mandamus to compel reinstatement of relator as purchaser, at least where it is indicated, from the fact that she cannot be found in the county, that she has either abandoned her purchase or sold her rights, though she, not being made a party, will not be affected by the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 293; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 173*)—SALE OF SCHOOL LANDS—AWARD TO HIGHEST BIDDER.

Under Act April 15, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 159, c. 103), providing a scheme for selling school lands to the highest bidder, requiring persons desiring to buy to send bids in envelopes to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to remain in the land office unopened till the day after that named for sale, and to be opened at 10 o'clock of that day, the award to be made to the highest bidder, an award so made cannot be set aside, and the land awarded to one who had sent a bid which did not reach the commissioner's office in time because the letter containing it remained in the post office, owing to absence of an employé of the land office whose duty it was to get the mail.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 544-551; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

Original mandamus proceedings by B. D. Byrne against J. T. Robison, Land Commissioner. Writ awarded.

E. Cortledge, for relator. R. V. Davidson, Atty. Gen., and William E. Hawkins, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GAINES, C. J. This is a petition for the writ of mandamus to compel J. T. Robison, as Commissioner of the General Land Office, to reinstate relator as purchaser of section 348 in block 2, certificate 1/406, Texas & Pacific Railway Company, for 640 acres, being a section of the public free school lands of the state.

It is alleged in the petition: That the section in controversy had been appraised at $1.50 per acre and had been advertised for sale on August 1, 1908. That on July 18, 1908, the relator made application to purchase said section as additional lands to his home tract. He wrote out his application, together with the obligation for the installment of 39/40 of the purchase money and inclosed them in an envelope indorsed as required by the statute, and before the 1st day of August, 1908, paid into the State Treasury 1/40 of the purchase money. His bid was $2.30 per acre. This being the only bid received by the commissioner at 10 a. m. August 3, 1908 (August 2d being Sunday), the land was awarded to relator, and he was notified of its acceptance. Mrs. Nannie May Williams, however, put in a bid for the land in July, 1908, and mailed it in accordance with law. The papers reached the post office in Austin in due time; but for absence of an employé of the land office, whose business it was to convey the mail from the post office to the land office, it did not reach the Commissioner of the General Land Office until August 4, 1908. Thereupon the commissioner reconsidered his action and, at a subsequent day, canceled the award to the relator and awarded the purchase to Mrs. Williams.

Mrs. Williams and her husband are made parties to the suit, but process sent to Presidio county has been returned by the officer with the statement that they could not be found in that county. The relator has submitted the case with the understanding that if they are not considered necessary parties the suit may be dismissed as to them. That they are proper parties there can be no doubt; but that they are necessary parties is not so clear. But from the fact that the return of the sheriff upon the citation to them shows that they were not found in the county at the time of its attempted service, and indicates that they had either abandoned their purchase or sold their rights, we with some reluctance conclude that they are not necessary parties, and therefore dismiss the suit as to them. They will not be affected by the judgment in this case.

The scheme of the act of April 15, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 159, c. 103), under which the transaction in controversy was had, was to sell the unsold school lands to the highest bidder. In order to accomplish this, bidders were required to make application in the terms of the act and to inclose the same in envelopes, addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with certain indorsements thereon, offering to buy the land, giving the amount of the bid and with certain other prerequisites prescribed by law. The envelopes were to remain in the land office unopened until the day next after that named as the day of sale, and at 10 o'clock of that day were to be opened, and the land was to be awarded to the highest bidder therefor. The language is peremptory and absolute. There is no provision for a delayed application, from whatever cause the delay may arise. The idea of the Legislature seems to have been to have the applications all in by a certain day, and that from those that were on file the commissioner should determine who was entitled to the land and make his award. Those that were not on file could not be considered, and no provision is made for reopening the matter and considering them thereafter. Was this wise? The state is desirous of selling the school lands. It owes no duty to any individual to sell it to him. It gives every one a fair chance to bid, and this is all that is required. Ample time is afforded to allow one not only to mail his application, but to see that it has been received in the land office. For example, in the present case, Mrs. Williams could have ascertained that her application had not been received in the land office by August 1, 1908, and could have informed the commissioner that it was mailed in time to have been there. Then on inquiry at the post office, either by a messenger from the land office, or by herself, or her agent, the necessary package would have been found and would have been delivered in time. Is it better not to consider an application not filed in time, or to consider it with the additional question whether the delay was caused by fault of the applicant or not? We think the Legislature was of the opinion that the applications on file at 10 o'clock on the day after the day of sale should only be considered, and that the highest bidder among them should be entitled to buy the land.

Our conclusion is that the land was properly awarded to the relator, and that, having been so awarded, the commissioner was without power to set it aside.

The mandamus prayed for is therefore awarded.

SCHAPER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 775*)—DEFENSES—ALIBI—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol at a dance, defendant's only defense was that he was in the dancing room at the time of a difficulty, when certain others exhibited pistols in the yard, and denied that he had any pistol on his person at any time, and requested to be searched when charged, the court's refusal to charge on alibi in accordance with defendant's specific request was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1833-1837; Dec. Dig. § 775.*]

Appeal from Guadalupe County Court; H. M. Wurzbach, Judge.

Willie Schaper was convicted of unlawfully carrying a pistol, and he appeals. Reversed.

P. E. Campbell, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted for unlawfully carrying a pistol. The evidence discloses there was a social function at a little village in Guadalupe county known as New Berlin. Quite a crowd assembled, among whom was appellant. He was a stranger, and went from the town of Lavernia, in Wilson county, to attend the social gathering. During the evening there occurred a personal difficulty in the room in which there was dancing. Appellant was not engaged in this difficulty. The owner of the premises and one of his sons ejected one of the parties to the difficulty from the house, chasing him out into the yard some distance. The state's testimony shows that, about the time the chasing party overtook the man they were pursuing, appellant and Harry Peck exhibited their pistols and forced them to cease their pursuit. There were two or three witnesses who testified to seeing appellant and Peck exhibit their pistols. When the party returned into the house, appellant was accused of being one of the men who exhibited the pistols. This he denied. This was in the dancing room, and he requested them to examine him, stating that he had no pistol. They declined to examine him. Appellant testified that there was a difficulty in the house, that the parties were strangers to him, and that he took no part in it. He further testified that he did not leave the dancing room during the difficulty, and was not in the yard or out of the house. He also testified that he did not have a pistol, and corroborates the state's witnesses to the effect that after the difficulty, and after their return to the dancing room, upon being accused of having exhibited a pistol, he denied it, and offered to be examined, and requested that they make an examination of his person, and satisfy themselves that he was not armed, and he corroborates the state's witnesses, further, in that they declined to make the examination.

The court charged the jury in regard to the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, and the further phase of the law that they were the exclusive judges of the facts proved and the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses. Upon the general issue he instructed the jury, if they should believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, Willie Schaper, on or about the 25th day of December, 1908, in Guadalupe county, Tex., did carry on or about his person a pistol, they should find him guilty, and assess an appropriate punishment. If they should find defendant not guilty, they should say so in their verdict. Appellant asked in writing an instruction submitting the law of alibi, which was refused. To this refusal exception was taken in the motion for new trial, as well as in a bill of exceptions. We are of opinion this charge should have been given. This was the only theory of appellant's defense, except the evidence, above detailed, that he was not armed, had no pistol, and his good faith in offering to be examined to demonstrate the fact that he was not armed. In the case of Jones v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 131, 110 S. W. 741, 126 Am. St. Rep. 776, the question of charging upon alibi was discussed at length, both in the original opinion and in the opinion on motion for rehearing. In the opinion on motion for rehearing quite a number of cases are overruled in regard to the necessity of charging upon alibi, and the further statement made as to what should be the rule, and it was said: "We reaffirm and redeclare the old rule, which so long existed in this state, that a case will not be reversed for the mere failure of the court to charge on the subject of alibi, unless a special charge submitting this issue is requested, or an exception reserved, at the time." Following this decision, appellant complied with what is the rule there laid down in regard to this phase of the law. The court did not charge with reference to the matter. It was appellant's real defense as against the state's evidence, combined with the further fact that he was not armed. Complying with this decision, appellant asked a special charge, and, upon its being refused, reserved his exception, both in the motion for new trial and in an approved bill of exceptions. We are of opinion that there was error in refusing to give this instruction, under the circumstances of the case, under the decision in the Jones Case, supra.

Appellant's motion for a first continuance makes a very strong equitable showing; the testimony being unquestionably of the most material character. The absent witnesses would have testified, as stated in appellant's application, which is supported in the motion for new trial by their affidavits, that appellant was not out of the house during the difficulty, and therefore could not have been one of the parties who exhibited a pistol on the outside. One of the witnesses would have testified that, before the difficulty between the parties in the house, he (the witness) wanted to borrow a pistol from appellant. Appellant stated to him that he did not have a pistol, and the absent witness, thinking that he did not want to lend it to him, examined him, and found that he did not have one on his person, but said to him that he had one in his buggy. This appellant denied, and the party went to the buggy and examined for, but failed to find, it. It may be further stated in this connection that the evidence shows that whoever exhibited the pistol did so in the dark. While the diligence was not sufficient, we are of opinion, under the circumstances of the case, and in view of the refusal of the court to charge alibi, appellant being the principal witness for himself in the case, that there is such error in this record as precludes the idea that appellant got that character of fair trial guaranteed by the law. Therefore the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

RAMSEY, J. I concur in the result. Under the circumstances, the ends of justice would doubtless have been best secured by granting appellant's application for continuance. I doubt if the court was called on, under the circumstances, to charge on alibi.

CARR v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

LARCENY (§ 55*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction for theft of hogs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 149-178; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Appeal from District Court, Houston County; B. H. Gardner, Judge.

Will Carr was convicted of theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Moore & Sallas, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of theft, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The only question raised in the record before us is the sufficiency of the evidence. The evidence contains marked discrepancies as to the marks upon the hogs alleged to have been taken, but there is a clear identification of the hogs by the prosecuting witness from flesh marks. Appellant sold the hogs at an unreasonable hour and fled the county, and various other circumstances that we do not deem necessary to collate authorized the jury in finding appellant guilty.

The judgment is affirmed.

GROVES v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS IN FAVOR OF VERDICT.

In absence of a statement of facts to enable the appellate court to consider the ground urged in the motion for new trial, which was made on the ground of newly discovered evidence, all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the judgment of conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3086; Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1097*)—APPEAL—STATEMENT OF FACTS—NECESSITY—EFFECT OF ABSENCE.

One of the defenses at trial was insanity, and the motion for new trial was on the ground of newly discovered evidence showing insanity; the witnesses by whom such evidence was to be proved being accused's father and sister, who, it was claimed, would testify that his aunt was confined in an insane asylum, and a deceased brother had epilepsy. The only affidavit filed was by accused's attorney, which stated that the testimony was unknown to his attorneys at trial and negatived want of diligence; but it was not shown whether accused was claimed to have been permanently or temporarily insane, or that he was so insane as to be unable to inform his attorneys of his family history. Held, that the newly discovered testimony may have been only cumulative, and, in absence of a statement of facts, the Court of Criminal Appeals could not review a denial of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2948-2948; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

Appeal from District Court, Travis County; George Calhoun, Judge.

J. A. Groves was convicted of assault with intent to commit murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. L. White, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of assault with intent to murder Ellen Groves; his punishment being assessed at ten years' confinement in the penitentiary.

There are no bills of exceptions in the record, nor was a statement of facts prepared for the inspection of this court in determining this appeal. The motion for new trial sets up newly discovered evidence in regard to the plea of insanity. One of the issues on the trial was insanity. This is gathered from the charge of the court, which submits the issue for the consideration of the jury. One of appellant's attorneys files an affidavit that the testimony was unknown to the attorneys for appellant at the time of and during the trial, and that it was discovered since, and that the failure to discover said testimony was not owing to any want of diligence on the part of said attorneys. The appellant does not make an affidavit. What testimony was introduced on the trial is not shown in this record, and we have no information in regard to it upon which we can act as a court. The witness by whom this newly discovered testimony was to be shown is the father of the defendant, who resides at Lipan, Tex., and by him they expected to show that appellant's aunt, a sister of his mother, was insane, and confined in the insane asylum at Terrell, and that a deceased brother of appellant during his lifetime, suffered from epilepsy; and by a sister of appellant, who, it is alleged, is believed to live at Cleburne, he expected to prove the same facts; that this testimony was unknown to appellant's attorneys. This testimony may have been only cumulative, and, in the absence of the statement of facts proved on the trial, all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the validity of a judgment and against the grounds of the motion for new trial. It is not shown that appellant was insane to the extent that he was unable to give his attorneys information about his family history, and on his plea of insanity the jury found against him. It may be further stated we are not informed in any way as to the species of insanity under which appellant was laboring, whether temporary or permanent. In the absence, therefore, of the evidence, and as the matter is presented by the motion, we are unable to review the question.

The judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

SOUTHERN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 8, 1909.)

HOMICIDE (§ 234*)—MURDER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held not to support a conviction of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 482-493; Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

Appeal from District Court, Ft. Bend County; Wells Thompson, Judge.

Ellis Southern was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a conviction had in the district court of Ft. Bend county on the 23d day of April, of this year, in which appellant was convicted of the offense of murder, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for life.

Only two questions are raised on the appeal, and these both raise the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. In the first place, it is urged that the testimony is not sufficient to show that the body found was that of the alleged deceased, Jerry Williams; and, second, that it was not shown that his death occurred by, through, or of the criminal agency or direction or act of, appellant. No synopsis of the testimony can fairly present these questions, so as to make a precedent of value to the profession. We therefore set out the testimony in full. It is as follows:

"J. C. Florea, county attorney of Ft. Bend county, Tex., testified: That on Sunday morning, January 31, 1909, he received word that a barn and some outbuildings were burned near Clodine, a small town in the northeast part of Ft. Bend county, and that the remains of a human being had been found in the ruins. That he and the deputy sheriff, Elmo Ransom, went to the scene of the fire. Upon their arrival at the scene of the fire they found that a large barn, and a lot of farming implements, and some small buildings were completely destroyed by fire Saturday night. The barn was a frame building, consisting of two large corncribs, with a driveway between them, and shed room on either side for stock. The witness did not know whether the barn had mow room over the cribs or not. In the ruins, about two feet from where the north door to one of the cribs had been, they found the charred remains of a human being lying across the tines of a pitchfork and some old wire, face up, and the stubs of the arms indicating that the hands had been folded across the breast. The legs and feet were burned off up to within a few inches of the knees. The bowels were oozing out of an opening in the belly. The flesh was burned off of the face, exposing a set of small, even teeth. The frontal bone was mashed in between the eyes, apparently by some blunt instrument, and from the back and top of the head the brains had oozed out through a bursted place in the skull. The witness stated that he was certain that the body found in the burned ruins was the body of a negro man; that he reached this conclusion after a thorough examination of the body; that nowhere about the body could he tell the color of the human being, but the skull was that of a negro; that the remains looked to be those of a person of medium height, with a full chest. The body was burned crisp all over, except two patches on the cheeks of the buttocks, which rested on the ground. These two patches of flesh were covered with burned clothing, and were parched brown. On the body, extending from the throat down the chest, there were four rows of buttons of different styles. One kind were small dish buttons; another, pearl buttons larger than the former; another row, of metal buttons, with the word 'Niagra' engraved thereon, and also a locomotive; another row, of large metal buttons, like the buttons used on slickers. The witness stated he and the deputy sheriff gathered these buttons up; also a number of brass eyelets, without hooks, like those worn on laced boots or shoes, hob nails and brass screw brads like those used in fastening on boot soles, a barlow pocket knife, and tin snuff box, and a metal piece off of the shank of a pipe. The iron frames of various kinds of farming implements were strewn over the ground near the body; also a heavy sledgehammer was found near by. The witness stated that a short distance from the ruins stood a vacant tenant house, and from which trailed a mark to the ruins, as though something heavy had been dragged on the ground. The witness stated he found no blood stains around the vacant building, or on the ground about there.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"The state introduced dish buttons, pearl buttons, metal buttons, with the word 'Niagra' printed on them and a locomotive engraved thereon, and a large flat metal button, like those used on slickers, a tin snuff box, a metal piece off of the shank of a pipe, and some hob nails and brass brads like those used in fastening on boot soles, and a barlow pocket knife, all of which the witness identified as being found on the dead body by him and Elmo Ransom.

"Elmo Ransom, deputy sheriff, testified to practically the same facts as Mr. Florea, except that he could not tell whether the remains were those of a white man or a negro.

"S. J. Winston, sheriff of Ft. Bend county, Tex., testified: That he went to the scene of the fire Monday morning, and began inquiring as to the probable offender, if any one at all, and he was informed that the defendant, Ellis Southern, had been seen leaving the Washington house Sunday morning, going in the direction of the Figure 4 ranch, carrying a suit case. That he and Jerry Williams were the only persons missing from the neighborhood. That he went to the Figure 4 ranch, and found the defendant and Phoebe Williams. That he found that suit case, with these clothes in it (pointing to a suit case and some clothing that had been introduced), in the defendant's room. That he arrested the defendant and Phoebe Williams, and brought them to Richmond, and placed them in jail. That the man who was then being tried was the same man.

"Bat O'Brien, testified: That the defendant, Ellis Southern, and Jerry Williams, Lee Asmore, Lee Collier, Edgar Lindsey, and Charles Washington worked for him the week the fire occurred. That he had known Jerry Williams about a year, and that he had worked for him since last harvest. That Jerry seemed to be temperate in his habits and did not run about much. That during harvest season Jerry gave him money to keep for him. That Jerry used snuff and smoked a pipe. That the Saturday the fire occurred Jerry accompanied the witness to the train, he having gone into Houston that day and did not return until some time Monday. That he had not seen or heard of Jerry Williams since that Saturday. The witness stated he lived about 1,200 feet from the Washington house, and the Washington house was that distance from Clodine. That Clodine was about 2½ or 3 miles from the Jones place, where the buildings were burned.

"W. J. Weller testified: That he lived in Clodine, Ft. Bend county, Tex., where he kept a general store. That about 9:30 Saturday evening, January 30th, his attention was attracted by a big fire in the direction of the Jones place, which is about 2½ or 3 miles from Clodine. That when he saw the fire it was well under headway. That he had known Jerry Williams about a year. That Jerry was of medium height and full-chested. That he had not seen or heard of Jerry Williams since the fire. The witness stated he kept barlow knives for sale exactly like the one exhibited and same brand, also jumper coats, with buttons on them of the style and make of those exhibited, and also had often sold goods to Jerry Williams.

"J. A. Madden testified: That he lived about 400 yards from the scene of the fire. That the buildings had been vacant since some time last December. That the buildings were burned some time Saturday night, January 30, 1909; just what time during the night he did not know, as he went to bed early Saturday night, and did not wake up until late the next morning. That the barn, which was completely destroyed by fire, was a large frame building, consisting of two large corncribs, with a driveway between them and a big haymow overhead, and shed rooms for stock round the sides of the cribs, in which had been stored a lot of farm implements, the iron frames of which were scattered about in the ruins. That he found the charred remains of a human being in the ashes a few feet from where the north door to one of the cribs had been. The body was lying on its back, across the tines of a pitchfork and some old wire. The feet and legs were burned off up to within a few inches of the knees. The bowels were oozing from an opening in the abdomen. The hands were burned off, and from the position of the arms it looked as though the hands had been folded across the breast. That the flesh was burned off of the face, leaving exposed a set of small, even teeth. The frontal bone was crushed in, apparently by some blunt instrument; and from the back and top of the head the brains had oozed out through a bursted place in the skull, which looked as though it had been caused by the fire. That, after examining the ruins, he sent one of his men to Clodine to telephone the sheriff about the fire. That quite a number of people visited the scene of the fire that morning. That he was present when the county attorney, J. O. Florea, and the deputy sheriff, Elmo Ransom, made an investigation. That they gathered up some metal buttons, with the design of a locomotive on them, being the style of button worn on the 'Niagra' jumper coat, a snuff box, a metal piece which looked like a fastening off of a pipe, a barlow pocket knife, and some brass eyelets from a pair of lace boots or shoes. That he knew Jerry Williams and Ellis Southern. That Ellis Southern lived on the O'Brien farm, at the Washington house, near Clodine. He knew Jerry Williams about a year. When Jerry first came to that section of the country, he worked for him. That Jerry was a negro man of medium height and heavy built, about 50 years of age. That he had not seen or heard of Jerry Williams since the fire. That he did not know whether the body found in the ruins was that of Jerry Williams or not. That quite a number of people visited the scene of the fire Sunday, but he did not remember seeing Lee Osburn there that day. The witness stated that Clodine was about 2½ miles from the Jones place, where the fire occurred, and about 1½ miles across the prairie.

"Lee Collier testified: That he, Ellis Southern, Lee Asmore, Edgar Lindsey, Charley Washington, and Jerry Williams worked at Bat O'Brien's the week the fire occurred. That he had been cooking at the O'Brien place for some time. That he had known Jerry Williams about a year. He did not know how old Jerry was, but his hair was gray. That Jerry had 'good sound teeth, medium in size, and they looked sorter narrow to me.' That Jerry was full-breasted, low, 'chunky, and was pretty heavy sot.' That the last time he saw Jerry was about 7:30 Saturday night at the O'Brien place, where he ate supper. He stayed in the kitchen awhile after supper, then left, telling me 'he believed he would go over to the store and get some tobacco.' That Jerry wore laced boots, a jumper, and carried a slicker on his arm. That it was about 7:30 when he left the house, going in the direction of Clodine. That he had not seen or heard of Jerry Williams since that time. The witness stated that he heard Jerry say on Friday at dinner that he was going to make a point (appointment) with some woman who had promised to meet him in a 'wast' house in the bottom Saturday night, and that Lee Asmore told him, 'The way you are going there is no wast house,' and that Jerry replied that there was one on the edge of the prairie. The witness said the Jones place was 'pretty much on the edge of the prairie.' That Ellis Southern left O'Brien's place Saturday after dinner, and did not return until about 6 o'clock that evening. That he did not eat supper at O'Brien's, but went to Clodine to mail a letter on the train going to Houston, which was due about 6:14. The witness identified the clothing exhibited as being Jerry Williams' clothing. That Jerry complained about losing a watch some time before the fire occurred. That he (Lee Collier) was arrested some time after the fire occurred. That the sheriff found the watch in his (Lee Collier's) room, between the mattresses of his bed. That he pleaded guilty to stealing the watch. The witness stated he was alone at the O'Brien place the night of the fire.

"Lee Asmore testified: That he, Jerry Williams, Ellis Southern, and Charles Washington worked for Bat O'Brien. That he and Jerry Williams slept in the same room at O'Brien's. The witness identified the clothing exhibited as being the same clothing Jerry Williams gave to the defendant, Ellis Southern, in his (witness') presence about two weeks before the fire occurred. That Ellis took the clothing home with him. That defendant lived on the O'Brien place, at the Washington house, with Phoebe Williams, Charles Washington's sister. That Friday, the 29th, while he, Ellis Southern, Jerry Williams, and Lee Collier were eating dinner, Jerry Williams made the statement that 'he was going down in the bottom to make a point (appointment) with some woman who had promised to meet him in a wast house,' and witness told him there was no empty house in the direction he was going, and Jerry replied that there were some empty houses on the edge of the prairie, and that he was going there and make a point (appointment) with a woman. That he did not hear Jerry tell Ellis that Friday morning—the witness and they and some other negroes were standing around a fire in the field warming—that he (Jerry) was going to Houston Sunday, and for Ellis to write to him at a certain address. The witness stated he left the fire before Jerry and Ellis left. That witness stated he did not know Jerry was married, and that he had told him he was not married. That Jerry wore a jumper with buttons on it like those exhibited. That Jerry wore a short, black slicker, with flat metal buttons on it, like those exhibited. That he wore laced boots, with brass eyelets like the ones exhibited. That Jerry had a barlow pocket knife, exactly like the one exhibited. That Jerry dipped snuff, which he carried in a tin box like the one exhibited, and also smoked a pipe with a metal piece on it like the one exhibited. That Jerry Williams did not run about much with the other negroes. He sometimes went over to the store of an evening.

"Charley Washington testified: That he lived on Mr. O'Brien's place, in the same house with his sister, Phoebe Williams, Sally Washington, and his mother, and that Ellis Southern had been living there with Phoebe Williams. That Phoebe Williams and Ellis had had a quarrel about two weeks before the night of the fire, and that Phoebe left her house and went to work for Mr. Aker on the Figure 4 ranch, about four miles from Clodine. The witness stated that Friday morning, while he and defendant, Lee Asmore, and Jerry Williams were standing around a fire they had built in the field to warm by, Ellis Southern told 'Uncle Jerry' that he was going to make a point (appointment) with a woman to meet him (Ellis) in a wast house Saturday night, and that he would make a point with a woman for Jerry. That Jerry said he would go if Ellis would make the arrangements. Witness left O'Brien's about 3 o'clock Saturday, and did not return until Sunday evening.

"Alice McDonald testified: That she went over to Charles Washington's house, on the O'Brien place, about 5 o'clock, Saturday evening, January 30, 1909, to sit up with Sadie Washington, who was very sick. That between 7 and 8 o'clock that evening, about 7:30 as near as she could tell, Ellis Southern came to the house and stayed a while, then left, saying he was going to the store, which is a short distance from the Washington house. He told Pathinia Washington that he would bring her back some oranges. That Ellis was gone a few minutes, probably 15 or 20 minutes, when he came back to the house, bringing some oranges with him. That he stayed in the house a few minutes, and went out again, and she asked him where he was going, and he said he was going to talk to Jerry Williams; that he had some business with him. That Ellis did not return until a short time before the train from From came, which is due at 9:57. As near as the witness could tell, he was gone about two hours. That while he was gone she saw a fire toward the Jones place, which she took to be a strawstack on fire. That when Ellis came back he asked her if she saw the fire, and on being told she did, and that she thought it was a strawstack on fire, he said it looked too big for a strawstack, and that it looked like the Jones buildings. That Ellis helped witness move the sick woman from a chair after he came back, then said he would go over to the depot and see the train come in, but just as he was starting out the train whistled. Witness stated that, when Ellis came in and helped her move the sick woman, he did not seem to be excited or breathless, like a person would be after running some distance. That he was calm and self-possessed.

"Phoebe Williams testified: That she knew Ellis Southern and Jerry Williams. That she and Ellis had been living together for about two years at her brother's house on the O'Brien place. That she did Jerry Williams' washing for him, and Jerry came to the house after his clothes. That she and Ellis had a quarrel about two weeks before the fire occurred, and she left the Washington house, and went to work for Mr. Aker on the Figure 4 ranch, about four miles from Clodine. That she had never seen the coat and vest and the two pair of pants at the Washington house when she was there. That she was afraid of Ellis, as he had threatened to kill her about some men, and was jealous of her. That she had not seen the clothes that were exhibited but two or three times, but she knew they were Jerry Williams' clothes. The witness said she had seen Jerry Williams wear the suit of clothes two or three times when he was going to town. That Sunday, January 31st, Ellis came to the Figure 4 ranch, where she was working, and brought the suit case and the clothes exhibited with him. That she asked him why he brought Uncle Jerry's clothes with him, and he said 'Jerry had gone to Houston, and had given him the clothes to keep, and if he did not come back he (Ellis) could have the clothes.' That Ellis told her that the two Martin boys told Jerry they saw an officer looking for him. That Ellis stayed with her that night, and that the next morning they were arrested and brought to Richmond and placed in jail.

"G. W. Brantmer testified: That about 9 o'clock Saturday night, January 30, 1909, he saw a large fire in the direction of the Jones farm, which is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 miles from Clodine. That he visited the scene of the fire the next day, and saw the charred remains of a human being in the ruins; but he could not tell whether it was the body of a white man or a negro. That he had known Jerry Williams about a year. That he was a middle-aged man, of medium height, and weighed about 150 pounds. That, judging from the size and appearance of the body and from the teeth, he 'thought' the body was that of Jerry Williams. That he knew the 'defendant, who lived with Phoebe Williams at the Washington house.

"Lee Osburn testified: That he knew Jerry Williams about a year. That he met him at the train when Jerry first came to Clodine, and that Jerry went home with him and stayed all night. That the next day Jerry went to work for Mr. Madden. That Jerry frequently after that came to his house and visited with him. The witness stated that Jerry had a small set of even teeth; that he was about 50 years old and of medium height and heavy set; that he went to the scene of the fire about 10 o'clock Sunday morning; that he saw the body in the ashes, and it was charred beyond recognition, the flesh being burned from the face, and the teeth showed plainly. The witness stated, when he saw the teeth, 'I says, "them shore's Uncle Jerry's teeth."' He stated that the top of the head was mashed flat, and the body burned to a crisp. That he did not remain at the ruins but a very short time. That he had not seen or heard of Jerry Williams since the fire. He did not know whether that was Jerry Williams' body he saw in the ruins, but he was 'shore them were Uncle Jerry's teeth.' That witness stated that he did not know Jerry Williams was married until after the fire. The witness stated his hearing was defective, being partially deaf.

"Julia Williams, wife of Jerry Williams, testified: That she lived in Houston, Tex. That she was the wife of Jerry Williams. That she met Jerry Williams some months before at a church in Houston. That they were married December 27, A. D. 1908, and that Jerry and she lived together until January 1, 1909, when Jerry went to Clodine to go to work. That was the last she saw of him. That she did not know where he was. That he had written her two letters after going to Clodine. That he had promised her that he would come to Houston January 30th or 31st, but he did not come. That Jerry had never failed to keep a promise with her before this time.

"Edgar Lindsey testified: That he was working in a blacksmith shop on the O'Brien place Saturday, January 30, 1909. That he knew Jerry Williams and Ellis Southern. That a while before supper Saturday evening Jerry Williams went to his room and went to sleep. About 6 o'clock Ellis came to the shop where he was at work, and asked him if he knew where Uncle Jerry was, and he told Ellis that Jerry was in his room asleep. And Ellis said he did not want to wake him, and for the witness to tell Jerry that he had made the arrangements they had talked about, and for him (Jerry) to meet him as he had agreed to. That he told Jerry at supper time what Ellis had told him to tell. That Ellis did not stay for supper, but said he was going to mail a letter on the train going to Houston, which was due about 6:14 p. m. That evening, after supper, was the last time he had seen Jerry Williams. The witness stated that he was at the examining trial, but did not say anything about what Ellis had told him to tell Jerry until a short while before the regular trial of the defendant."

There was no testimony offered by the defendant. It may be that the evidence is sufficient to authorize the jury to find that the burned and disfigured body found was that of Jerry Williams, with whose murder appellant stands charged. If, however, this fact could be conceded, the testimony falls far short of being of that degree of cogency and directness as to justify us in upholding a conviction consigning any man, black or white, to prison walls for his whole life. A reading of the testimony will demonstrate that there was no motive shown, and that the sum of the criminative evidence is the possession by appellant of some clothing said to have belonged to deceased, and the fact that they were together with other persons on the evening of the fire, which almost consumed the body of the dead man. While this might raise some suspicion, it falls so far short of that high degree of proof which the law requires that we cannot hesitate in believing it insufficient.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

ZACHARY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 603*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENCE OF WITNESS—FAILURE TO STATE TESTIMONY EXPECTED.

An application for a continuance for the want of certain witnesses, which did not set out what facts it was expected would be testified to by them, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1354; Dec. Dig. § 603.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 419, 420*)—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

In a rape case, testimony of prosecutrix's mother as to whether, before the alleged intercourse with accused, she did not hear that the school trustees were threatening to expel prosecutrix for immoral conduct, was properly excluded as hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 973; Dec. Dig. §§ 419, 420.*]

3. RAPE (§ 13*)—FEMALE UNDER AGE OF CONSENT—REPRESENTATIONS OF FEMALE AS TO AGE.

Carnal knowledge of a child under the age of consent being itself criminal, in a prosecution therefor, representations of the child to accused as to her age are immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — CONSTRUCTION — EXPLANATION OF COURT.

In a rape case, a bill of exceptions, complaining of the refusal to permit a witness to answer a question relating to the reputation of prosecutrix for chastity prior to her alleged connection with accused, stated that the witness would have answered that he knew her general reputation in that respect, and that it was bad. The court approved the bill to where it undertook to set out what would have been the witness' answer, and gave an explanation that it changed its ruling, and notified accused's attorneys during the trial, offering to permit evidence of prosecutrix's reputation, and calling special attention to the former witness, that that witness was afterwards on the stand, but was asked no further question on the subject. The bill as proved up by bystanders included the court's explanation, recited the question asked, that objection was made, the answer of the witness, purpose of the testimony, and that "we, the undersigned, * * * hereby attest that we are fully informed, and understand the contents of the foregoing bill of exceptions, * * * and that the said bill of exceptions, which the judge * * * refused to sign, is correct. * * *" Held that, as the bill as proved up did not in terms deny the statement of the court, it should be accepted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2828-2833; Dec. Dig. § 1091.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*)—APPEAL—REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

Any error in the exclusion of testimony as to the reputation of prosecutrix in a rape case was not prejudicial, where prosecutrix was unquestionably under the age of consent, and accused afterwards had the opportunity to introduce the same evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3145-3153; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 338*)—EVIDENCE—REASON FOR NOT INDICTING OTHER PARTY.

In a criminal prosecution, evidence as to why another person was not also indicted for the offense was irrelevant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1752; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONSTRUCTION—RIGHT TO USE STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Where there is an issue between the explanation of a bill of exceptions by the court and the matters recited and proved up by bystanders, which is in doubt, the recitals in the statement of facts may be looked to.

Appeal from District Court, Houston County; B. H. Gardner, Judge.

Adolphus Zachary was convicted of rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

Moore & Sallas, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was indicted in the district court of Houston county, charged with the offense of rape on one Sylvia Gadway, a female then and there under the age of 15 years. On his trial, had in said court on 5th day of March of this year, he was found guilty by the jury, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of 20 years.

The age of Sylvia Gadway was established by unquestioned testimony, and she was shown by all the evidence to have been under 15 years of age at the time of the alleged unlawful intercourse. The proof of the unlawful carnal intercourse was shown, not only by the testimony of the witness Sylvia Gadway, but by John A. Davis, who testified: That he was justice of the peace at Grapeland, in Houston county, and had been for 22 years, and had known appellant all his life. That in 1908 appellant came to him, and asked him how old a girl would have to be before a person would be permitted by law to have intercourse with her, and in this connection he testified further, as follows: "He [appellant] said he had been having intercourse with the Gadway girl. He said he did not think she was 15 years old." In addition to this, George Calhoun, who was introduced as a witness by appellant, testified that appellant told him that he was having a good time with the Gadway girl. "He said he had met her at a church, and asked me if I did not want to have a good time with her." The evidence shows that, when first brought before the grand jury, prosecutrix denied the intercourse, and never admitted same at all until after a physical examination of her person by a physician. Her testimony also developed several other contradictions of an important character, not necessary here to notice. We make this brief statement of the case, to the end that the opinion may be understood.

1. When the case was called for trial, appellant filed an application for continuance for the want of the testimony of Mrs. J. E. Price, F. H. Bayne, and Dr. W. B. Collins. This application did not set out at all what facts, or any facts, which it was expected to be testified to by the witness Collins. The bill of exceptions evidencing the action of the court touching this matter tendered by appellant was refused by the court, and in lieu of the bill tendered the court prepared and had a bill of exceptions filed. In this bill it appears that, when the application was presented by appellant's counsel, the district attorney called the court's attention to the failure to state what was expected to be proved by Dr. Collins. It is further stated by the court that there was not any further request for additional process, nor for postponement until Collins could be had, though it was a fact that he lived at Lovelady, on the International & Great Northern Railroad, within 13 miles of Crockett, and could be reached by telephone, and could easily reach Crockett by buggy in two hours, and the trains passed twice a day. The court further states that he would have granted all reasonable indulgence and process to have procured the attendance of said witness, and the case was on trial for two or three days. It is further stated by the court, and appears in the record, that Mrs. Price, as well as the witness Bayne, both appeared and testified. Appellant had prepared touching this matter a bill of exceptions and proved same up by bystanders. In this bill it is stated that the witness Collins, if present, would have testified that he was a physician, a graduate in medicine, with 20 years' experience in the practice of medicine and surgery, that while prosecutrix was before the grand jury he made an examination of her person, and that in his opinion she was a virgin, and had never been penetrated by the male organ of a man. This application, whether tested by the statements contained in the bill of exception prepared by the court or that tendered by appellant, shows no error, in that there was no kind of statement made in the application for continuance as to the testimony expected to be given by this witness. The application speaks for itself, and a careful reading of it discloses that it is wholly wanting in the essential, and, indeed, one of the most essential, particulars demanded by the law—that of stating the testimony expected to be given by the absent witness.

2. There are a number of bills of exception contained in the record proven up by bystanders, many of which are in contradiction and impeachment of the bills prepared and allowed by the court, thus evidencing a most unfortunate condition of affairs. We do not believe, however, that, tested by any of the bills, in the light of the entire record, there is any issue or question of such importance as would justify us in reversing the case. For instance, Mrs. Sarah Gadway, mother of prosecutrix, was asked if it was not a fact that, before the alleged intercourse with appellant, she did not hear that the school trustees of that community were threatening to expel her daughter from school on account of her immoral conduct. This, it was claimed, was admissible and material, as tending to show that prosecutrix was, prior to the alleged conduct of appellant, of a bad and immoral character, and would have affected her credibility as a witness. This was clearly hearsay, and under no circumstances admissible.

3. Again, it is claimed that the court erred in refusing to permit and compel prosecutrix to answer the question as to whether or not, at the marriage of one Miss Ada Ward, on the 8th day of January, 1908, she did not tell the defendant that she was then 14 years of age. In this connection it should be stated that the prosecutrix was not introduced by the state to prove her age, nor did she testify in respect to her age, nor was there, in the light of all the testimony, any question or substantial issue made in respect to this matter. Besides, this identical question was ruled adversely to appellant in the case of Edens v. State, 43 S. W. 89. In that case appellant complained of the action of the court in "refusing to permit him to prove by the alleged injured female, who was at the time of the trial his wife, that in the latter part of January, 1897, at their first meeting in the woods, the question of her age was discussed between them, and that she then informed appellant that she was over the age of 15 years, and on the other occasions of their assignations she always told defendant that she was over the age of 15 years." In discussing this question Judge Davidson, speaking for the court, says:

"On objection by the state, this evidence was ruled out. In this, we think, there was no error. The indictment alleged that at the time the sexual intercourse occurred between the parties the girl was under 15 years of age and not his wife. The uncontradicted proof in the case shows that these were facts. The first act of intercourse occurred in the latter part of January, 1897, and was repeated at intervals for several months, until finally, to escape a prosecution, he married the girl on the 18th of August, 1897, she having become 15 years of age on the 10th of July previous to said marriage. 'Where the offense is in having connection with a child under the age of consent, belief on the part of the defendant that she was over the age of consent, and that, therefore, consent on her part would prevent the act from being criminal, cannot be shown. Connection with a child under the age of consent being criminal, one who has connection with a female which would, in any event, be unlawful, must know at his peril whether her age is such as to make the act a rape.' See McClain, Cr. Law, § 451. And see, also, Lawrence v. Com., 30 Grat. (Va.) 845; State v. Newton, 44 Iowa, 45; State v. Houx, 100 Mo. 654, 19 S. W. 35, 32 Am. St. Rep. 686; State v. Baskett, 111 Mo. 271, 19 S. W. 1097; Holton v. State, 28 Fla. 303, 9 South. 716; Reg. v. Prince, L. R. 2 Crown Cas. 154; State v. Grossheim, 79 Iowa, 75, 44 N. W. 541; People v. McDonald, 9 Mich. 150; Hays v. People, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 351; 2 Bish. Cr. Law, 1091; Bish. St. Crimes, § 490. Mr. Bishop says: 'While, within principles explained in another connection, no one is ever punishable for any act in violation of law where to, without his fault or carelessness, he was impelled by an innocent mistake of facts, this rule does not free a man from the guilt of his offense by reason of his believing, on whatever evidence, that the girl is above the statutory age. His intent to violate the laws of morality and the good order of society, though with the consent of the girl, and though in a case where he supposes he shall escape punishment, satisfies the demands of the law, and he must take the consequences.' Bish. St. Crimes, § 490. See, also, 1 Bish. Cr. Law, §§ 301-310, and note to section 303a. And see, also, sections 327, 330-340. We have found no contrary opinion, and but one dissenting opinion. The latter is found in the case cited from Grattan's Reports. We deem it unnecessary to amplify this question, for the authorities above cited fully settle it."

4. The next bill relates to the action of the court in refusing to permit the witness John A. Davis to answer the following question: "Do you know the general reputation of the prosecutrix, Sylvia Gadway, prior to her alleged connection with the defendant, for chastity?" It is stated in the bill that this witness, if permitted, would have answered that he knew the general reputation of the prosecutrix, Sylvia Gadway, for chastity, prior to her alleged connection with defendant, and that it was bad. The bill further states that this evidence was offered for the purpose of affecting the credibility of prosecutrix, Sylvia Gadway. In approving this bill the court makes this statement: "Approved down to where it undertakes to set out what would have been the answer of said witness. As a matter of fact the court changed the ruling, and so notified defendant's attorneys during the trial, and offered to permit defense to go into the reputation of the prosecutrix, and called special attention to the witness Davis, and he was thereafter on the stand, but no further question as to reputation of said Sylvia was asked of said Davis." The bill as proved up by bystanders includes the explanation of the court, recites the question asked, and that objection was made, the answer of the witness, the purpose of the testimony, and proceeds as follows: "We, the undersigned, citizens of Houston county, Tex., hereby attest that we are fully informed, and understand the contents of the foregoing bill of exceptions; that we were bystanders in the court, and present when the matters related in said bill of exceptions occurred, and we are fully cognizant of said matters, and the said bill of exceptions, which the judge presiding at said trial has refused to sign, is correct, and truly presents the facts as they really transpired." It will be noticed that the bill as proved up does not in terms deny the explicit statement of the court. If, in any event, there was any merit in the bill, in the absence of the court's explanation we think, where the record contains such an explicit statement of material facts, not in terms denied and negated by the bill as proven up by bystanders, that we must and should accept the court's explanation. With this explanation, it is manifest that there was no error in the ruling, since appellant, in the light of the bill, had the opportunity to make proof of the evidence tendered. Besides, it is doubtful, under the authority of Steinke v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 65, 24 S. W. 909, 25

S. W. 287, in the light of the unquestioned age of the prosecutrix, whether in any event this testimony would be admissible.

5. On the trial it was proposed to be shown by the testimony of the witness Bayne the reason why no indictment had been returned against one Calhoun. The reason was, as stated in the bill, it was believed that the finding of such indictment would weaken the state's case against appellant. If it were permissible for the appellant to have shown the reasons why Calhoun was not indicted, and these reasons were, among others, that it would weaken the case against appellant, it would seem to have been equally competent, if Calhoun had been indicted, for the state to have shown that fact as an evidence of their belief in the guilt of both parties. This testimony, under any view of the case, was wholly irrelevant and inadmissible.

6. Touching the question as to the action of the court on the matter of proof of the general reputation of prosecutrix for virtue and chastity, we may say the following statement is made on page 8 of the statement of facts: "Prior to the time of the alleged transaction of the defendant with the prosecutrix, Sylvia Gadway, did you know her reputation in the community in which she lived for chastity? State objected. Court sustained objection. Defendant excepted. The court afterwards notified defendant's counsel in open court that he had changed his mind on that ruling, and would permit the witness to testify as to the reputation of said witness, and, though the witness Davis was on the stand, said attorneys declined or did not avail themselves of said ruling." To what extent we may look to the statement of facts in explanation of bills of exception has never been very clearly determined; but we think, in a case like this, where there is an issue between the explanation of the court and the matters recited and proven up by bystanders, and where, as in this case, it may be stated to be left in some doubt, that we should, in reason, be authorized, in testing the accuracy of conflicting statements, to look to recitals and statements made in the statement of facts.

7. Finally, it is urged that the testimony of the prosecutrix is so contradictory as not to form a just basis of conviction. If the testimony of the prosecutrix, in respect to intercourse, had stood alone, we should, indeed, hesitate in the matter of affirming the judgment; but in view of the explicit statements of appellant, directly affirming the intercourse, one of which was testified to by a witness introduced by himself, and in view of the unquestioned proof as to her age, it seems to us that, not only is the verdict sustained by the testimony, but, indeed, no other verdict could or should in fairness have been rendered.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is hereby in all things affirmed.

JAEHNIG v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—DEFECTS IN INFORMATION.

One convicted of simple assault cannot complain because the information, attempting to charge an aggravated assault, is defective because it fails to state the manner in which the instrument charged was used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3101-3106; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

One convicted of simple assault cannot complain because the court misdirected the jury as to the law on aggravated assault.

Appeal from Bee County Court; W. W. Dodd, Judge.

Herman Jaehnig was convicted of simple assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Chambliss & Baker, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of simple assault, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $10.

Appellant complains that the information is defective, in that it attempts to charge an aggravated assault, and therefore is insufficient, in that it nowhere states the manner in which the instrument charged was used, and that the court misdirected the jury as to the law of aggravated assault. Conceding this was true, appellant was only convicted of a simple assault and fined $10. Therefore appellant cannot complain of same. The court properly charged on simple assault, and the jury properly found appellant guilty under the evidence as disclosed in the record. See McCutcheon v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 607, 95 S. W. 525.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

STATE MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. BALLARD.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.)

EVIDENCE (§ 411*)—APPLICATION FOR INSURANCE—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where an application for insurance did not upon its face attempt to set out in full the character of the policy or contract entered into between the insurer's agent and the insured, but stated that there was a special contract, the terms of which did not appear, it was proper to admit evidence of the nature and character of the special contract.

Appeal from Haskell County Court; Joe Irby, Judge.

Action between T. E. Ballard and the State Mutual Life Insurance Company. From a judgment in favor of Ballard, the insurance company appeals. Affirmed.

S. W. Scott, for appellant. H. G. McConnell and Gordon B. McGuire, for appellee.

FISHER, C. J. We find no error in the action of the trial court in overruling the motion for continuance. He correctly concluded that the diligence shown was not sufficient.

The court properly admitted testimony of appellee as to the nature of the contract entered into between him and the agent of the appellant. The application for insurance did not upon its face attempt to set out in full the character of the policy or contract that the appellee was entitled to. It stated that there was a special contract, the terms of which do not appear on the face of the application. Therefore it was proper for the court to admit evidence showing the nature and character of the special contract there referred to.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

pellee, a special charge which will be hereafter set out. Appellee's cause of action grew out of the killing of certain animals by reason of being struck by the engine and cars of appellant. That they were so struck and killed was not controverted by appellant in the court below, nor in this court—appellant's contention in the main being, first, that the animals were killed at a place where public necessity and convenience, and a regard for the safety of its employes in operating its trains and switching its cars, required that its track should not be fenced; and, second, that the killing of the animals at such place was not the result of the negligence of its employes. Both theories were appropriately submitted by the court in the main charge to the jury. Before ordering the affirmance of the judgment, we concluded that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding that the animals were killed at a place where the track should have been fenced. But appellant contends that as the verdict was general, and it being therefore impossible to say upon which theory the jury found, the giving of an erroneous instruction upon one theory necessitates the reversal of the judgment. We recognize this contention as correct.

Appellant, by its fifth assignment, presented in its brief, called our attention to special instruction No. 2 requested by appellee, and which appellant claims was given by the court to the jury, and again calls our attention to it in the motion for rehearing. The charge complained of is as follows: "That it is the duty of those operating railroad trains to keep a lookout for persons or animals upon or near to and approaching its tracks, and, upon discovering animals on or near to and approaching its tracks, to blow the whistle and ring the bell, and, if necessary, stop its train, if it could do so, so as to avoid injury thereto, and, when the danger is discovered, it becomes its duty to use all means in its power to avoid such injury, and a failure to do so would constitute negligence on its part. Therefore, if you find and believe that the defendant and its agents and employes operating the train that struck and killed plaintiff's animals (if it did so kill them) did not keep a diligent lookout to discover said animals, if they were on or near defendant's railroad track, and that if by keeping such lookout they could have discovered said animals in time to have avoided said accident, and you further find that said acts of the defendant constituted negligence, which was the direct or proximate cause of the injury or death of plaintiff's animals (if any there was), then the defendant would be liable to plaintiff for whatever damages he sustained thereby. And in this connection you are told that by negligence is meant the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent person would use under the same or exactly similar circumstances." The charge is manifestly incorrect and misleading, and if it was in fact given the judgment should be reversed.

Upon consideration of the assignment, we found that the only statement made under the assignment was, "Plaintiff's special charge No. 2, complained of in this assignment, is there correctly copied," and refers us to the page of the record where the charge is set out. We concluded that this statement was incomplete and insufficient to require our consideration of the assignment, for the reason that it was not there shown that the charge was given. Since then we have examined the record, and find there is nothing therein to show whether the charge was given or refused. It seems to be well settled that, when the record fails to show that a special charge was given, appellate courts cannot take the alleged giving of it into consideration. Hodde v. Susan, 63 Tex. 310; Hill v. Crownover, 4 Tex. 8; James v. Fulcrod, 5 Tex. 512, 55 Am. Dec. 743; Moore v. Brown, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 208, 64 S. W. 947; Michael v. Yoakum (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 1076. It is said in Hodde v. Susan that "the statement of counsel in a motion for new trial to the effect that the charge was asked and refused cannot be accepted as evidence of that fact." In Michael v. Yoakum it is said: "It is the action of the judge in connection with the charges that is complained of as error; and there must be something in the record to show that the charges have been called to the attention of the judge, and that action has been taken by him in regard to them, before errors assigned in connection with them will be entertained by an appellate court. The file mark indicates nothing but a ministerial act on the part of the clerk."

The motion for rehearing is refused.

E. C. Gray and Capps, Canty, Hanger & Short, for appellant. Bond & Melton and Hoover & Taylor, for appellee.

KEY, J. The First National Bank of Chickasha brought this suit against Joe Perry, A. L. Nail, and S. B. C. Nail to enforce the payment of a promissory note for $1,500, signed by Joe Perry, and payable to A. L. and S. B. C. Nail, or order. The bank acquired the note from the Nails. Joe Perry and S. B. C. Nail were not served with citation, and suit was dismissed as to them. A. L. Nail answered by general demurrer, special exceptions, general denial, and plea of payment by Joe Perry; the plea alleging that Perry had paid the note sued on by executing and delivering to the bank two other notes in full payment and satisfaction of the one involved in this suit. There was a jury trial, and, after hearing all the testimony, the court instructed a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,809.50, which verdict was returned, and judgment entered thereon. From that judgment the defendant has appealed, and assigns as error the action of the trial court in peremptorily instructing a verdict for the plaintiff, and not submitting the question of payment to the jury, as requested by the defendant.

We sustain appellant's contention, and hold that the question of payment should have been submitted to the jury. It would hardly be proper for this court to discuss at length the testimony bearing upon that question, and express any opinion as to how the question should be decided, and we content ourselves with saying that, in our opinion, the testimony of Joe Perry to the effect that he executed and delivered to one Melton, who was acting as agent for appellee, a renewal note for $1,620 and another note for $125 as advance payment of interest, and that thereafter he saw both of said notes in possession of the bank, together with the letters written by the bank to A. L. Nail, of date February 27, 1905, and May 4, 1905, tended to sustain the plea of payment. There was much testimony to the contrary; but that did not deprive appellant of his right to have the jury pass upon the weight of the testimony and decide the question of payment.

For the error pointed out, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

BELL COUNTY v. FELTS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 175, 854, 856*)—PRESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

To affirm a judgment, the Court of Civil Appeals is not bound by the reasons given by the trial court, nor limited in its conclusions to the grounds stated in the findings below, if the findings of fact or the evidence in the record show that no other result could be reached, and the issue proved is pleaded, though not passed upon by the trial court nor called to its attention by a request for a finding upon it, but where the evidence merely raises the issue, and is not conclusive of it, the party who relies upon it should have it passed upon by the trial court, or at least request that it be done to have the question reviewed, and, if he fails to do so, the contention is waived, and he cannot have the cause remanded, which would otherwise be rendered, to permit him to have the issue submitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1137, 3408, 3409; Dec. Dig. §§ 175, 854, 856.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 589*)—WEIGHT—CREDIBILITY—PARTIES.

Where a witness is a party in interest, his credibility is largely a fact to be considered in determining what effect should be given to his testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2438; Dec. Dig. § 589.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 103*)—ADVERSE POSSESSION OF TRUSTEE—REPUDIATION—NECESSITY.

If a person held title to land in trust for a county, his possession would not be adverse, so as to start the statute of limitations, until there was a repudiation of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 506-510; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

On Rehearing. Motion overruled.

For former opinion, see 120 S. W. 1005.

FISHER, C. J. The only question that we desire to discuss, raised in appellee's motion for rehearing, is whether or not the judgment could be affirmed on the undisputed evidence in the record that the three-year statute of limitations applies, or whether the judgment below should be reversed and remanded for the purpose of permitting that question to be considered and determined in the trial court. Some of the evidence of appellee Felts tends to show that the land in question was intended to be used as a public park; and, if the evidence was satisfactory that it was used for such purpose, then we were correct in holding that limitation did not affect the right of the county to recover, but it is more than probable that we should not have given this effect to the evidence, and that on this branch of the case the rule announced in Johnson v. Llano County, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 39 S. W. 995, should be applied. But however this may be, we are of the opinion that the appellee is in no position to have this question reviewed and the three-year statute of limitations applied in his favor. The case was tried before the court, and the trial judge filed conclusions of fact and law, which did not in any respect touch the question or the application of the three-year statute, nor was there any request made by either party for a finding upon that issue. Of course it is true that in order for this court to affirm we are not bound by the reasons given by the trial court, nor are we limited in our conclusions to the grounds stated in the findings below, but if the findings of fact or the evidence contained in the record show that no other result could be reached, we should affirm, if the issue so proven is pleaded, although not passed upon by the trial court nor called to its attention by a request for a finding upon it. But where the evidence merely raises the issue, and is not conclusive of it, the party who relies upon it should have it passed upon by the trial court, or at least request that this be done, in order to have the question reviewed by the appellate court; and, if in such a case this is not done, it is regarded as waived. Tenzler et al. v. Tyrrell et al., 32 Tex. Civ. App. 443, 75 S. W. 58, and cases cited. In the cases cited and others upon this point this rule of law was invoked to defeat an objection or complaint urged by the appellant, but we can perceive no reason why the rule should not apply to the appellee when he is urging the court in support of his judgment to consider evidence which was not considered by the trial court, and the effect of which was waived by not requesting some finding based upon it. In a case of this character, where the appellate court in reviewing the evidence and the issues of fact and law found by the trial court reaches the conclusion that the judgment is not only erroneous, but that it should be reversed and rendered, the appellee should not be permitted to defeat this course by the suggestion that the case should be reversed merely so that upon another trial he may be permitted to have submitted and passed upon an issue which could, if he had so requested, have been determined and settled at the original trial.

The evidence in this case is not conclusive of the question of limitation. Its effect was merely to present an issue of fact which the trial court could have determined either for or against appellee. The appellee's testimony furnishes the only evidence as to his actual possession, and whether it was adverse to the county. He being a party at interest, his credibility is largely a fact to be considered in determining what effect should be given to his testimony. This has been frequently decided by this and other courts. Further, his evidence as to his possession is not altogether clear, and it is by no means certain that it could be held that it was adverse to the county; that is, that it should be held adverse unless he, in some unequivocal manner, repudiated the trust under which he held the legal title. It is true that he had a deed to the land, but that title was held in trust for the county, as said in the original opinion, which his evidence shows he offered to surrender to the commissioners, but which they declined to accept, and upon that body doing this, he claims that he went into possession. We pointed out in the original opinion that the commissioners' court could not lawfully bind the county by such agreement, and that if the superior title had vested in the county, there was only one way of divesting it; and, in this connection, it is well to remember that the evidence shows there was no final settlement of this matter with the commissioners' court until November, 1904, from which time to the filing of this suit in May, 1907, would not be sufficient to bar under the three-year statute. The most that can be said in appellee's favor is that he relied upon the illegal agreement with the commissioners' court to the effect that he could retain title, as the county did not want it. At least it could be held that up to the time of the final settlement in November, 1904, his possession was based upon that agreement. Prior to the time of this final settlement there was not, independent of the first agreement and the fact of possession, any distinct act of repudiation of the trust. From these facts, if the issue had been passed upon, the trial court could have concluded that a repudiation of the trust was not shown, at least, prior to the time of the settlement in 1904; and, if we were correct in holding that appellee occupied to the county a trust relation with reference to this title, limitation would not run until there was a repudiation. We are inclined to think that the evidence on this branch of the case, with the rules of law applied to it, is sufficient to show that there was no adverse holding for a time sufficient to bar the appellant's action under the three-year statute. Or if not entitled to be given any effect, it could be considered as merely raising an issue of fact which the appellee has waived by not requesting it to be passed upon by the court below, and that we are not authorized to reverse in order to permit its presentation in another trial.

Motion overruled.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 81*)—WAIVER OF RIGHT.

A nonresident defendant who failed to request the court to suspend the trial to enable him to prepare a bond and application for removal of the action to the federal court on the dismissal of the action as to the resident defendant, but who continued in the trial, and took his chances with the jury, waived his right of removal to the federal court.

† Writ of error denied by Supreme Court.

3. COURTS (§ 7*)—TORTS (§ 2*)—TRANSITORY ACTIONS—PERSONAL TORTS.

The right of the courts of one state to take jurisdiction of an action for tort to the person, based on acts or omissions done or occurring in a sister state, is not affected by the fact that there is a dissimilarity between the laws of the two states as applicable to the action, for the court taking jurisdiction must apply the law of the state where the cause of action arose.

4. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 13*)—ANOTHER ACTION PENDING.

That a plaintiff in an action in the courts of Texas for a personal injury inflicted in a sister state, and removed to the federal court on the application of the nonresident defendant, brought an action in the sister state on the same cause of action before the federal court remanded the cause to the state court, did not abate the action in the state court.

Error from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Klittrell, Judge.

Action by Gus C. Street, Jr., against Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, for plaintiff in error. Lovejoy & Parker, for defendant in error.

NEILL, J. This suit was originally brought by defendant in error, hereafter called plaintiff, against the Southern Pacific Company, the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company, and plaintiff in error, Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company, hereafter called defendants, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been inflicted through their negligence when in their service operating a motor car on the railroad of the last-named defendant in the state of Louisiana. Morgan's Louisiana &

Texas Railroad & Steamship Company seasonably filed its application and bond to remove the case to the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of Texas, whereupon the application was granted, and the cause transferred to the federal court. On March 20, 1903, upon motion of plaintiff, the cause was remanded by the United States Circuit Court to the district court of Harris county, Tex., wherein the suit was first instituted. Then each of the defendants filed its original answer in the district court April 7, 1908, which embraced, on behalf of each defendant the following pleas in abatement and demurrers, to wit: (1) A verified plea as to the jurisdiction of the Texas court, based on certain alleged dissimilarities between the laws of the state of Louisiana and of the state of Texas, specially alleged; (2) a plea in abatement, setting forth that prior to the time this cause was remanded to the state court a suit, based on the same cause of action, between plaintiff and the defendant Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company, had been instituted and was still pending in the state of Louisiana; (3) a general demurrer; (4) a special demurrer on account of the misjoinder of parties defendant; and (5) a special demurrer based on the contention that the petition, on its face, showed the injury complained of to have resulted from the negligence of a fellow servant. The pleas to the jurisdiction and in abatement, and the demurrers, were duly submitted, heard, and overruled by the court. Thereafter the Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company filed its first amended original answer, which, in addition to said overruled pleas and demurrers, contained the following pleas in bar, to wit: (1) A general denial; (2) the negligence of a fellow servant; (3) contributory negligence on the part of Street (a) in failing to keep proper lookout for obstructions on the track, and (b) in sitting in a careless position and manner on the motor car, without holding on or securing himself; (4) assumed risk; (5) unavoidable accident; (6) a plea in bar of the action by reason of various dissimilarities alleged between the laws of Louisiana and of Texas applicable to such cases. The case as to all the parties was then tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in plaintiff's favor against Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company in the sum of $12,500; the plaintiff having, before the case was submitted to the jury by the charge of the court, dismissed it as to the other two defendants, and the jury were expressly informed in the second paragraph of the general charge, which directed them, on account of such dismissal, to consider only the defendant, Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company, in arriving at their verdict. After the judgment was rendered, the motion for a new trial overruled, the court adjourned for the term, and the petition for a writ of error filed in the district court, the defendant, Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company, on September 25, 1907, filed another petition and bond for removal of the case to the federal court, which application, with the bond, was presented to and denied by the court on October 5, 1908. This application was based upon the ground of diverse citizenship of the parties, and was urged upon the theory that on the voluntary dismissal by plaintiff of the other two defendants (who, having been parties, defeated the first application for removal) the case against it, as the only defendant, was removable to the federal court upon its filing a proper bond and application therefor. As the action of the trial court in denying the application for removal just referred to is assailed by an assignment of error, styled "Error apparent of record," we will dispose of it before considering those which go to the merits of the case.

If it be conceded, as we think it should be, that upon the voluntary dismissal of the other two defendants the case as to this one, notwithstanding it had gone to trial against them all, eo instante rendered it subject to removal to the federal court upon the defendant's filing a proper bond and application, yet we are of the opinion that it waived its right of such removal, the case being then on trial, by failing to request the court to suspend the trial, in order that it might have time to prepare a bond and application for removal and present it for the action of the court, and by taking its chances for a verdict by continuing in the trial of the case without then taking such steps as were necessary to remove it to the federal court. It cannot be successfully contended that defendant did not know of the fact that plaintiff had discontinued his action as to the other two; for, as is shown in our statement of the case the second paragraph of the court's charge expressly informed the jury that plaintiff had dismissed his suit as against the Southern Pacific Company and the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company, and directed them to only consider the defendant, Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company, in arriving at their verdict. If defendant's counsel did not know of the dismissal before, they knew it then, or were charged with knowledge of it; for the record shows they were in court, where it was their duty to be. And, as the court was required to read the charge to the jury, it must be presumed it discharged such duty, and that it was heard by defendant's counsel. Then they should have taken the proper steps to have the cause removed, instead of taking chances of a verdict in their client's favor, and not have waited until after the verdict against the defendant was returned, judgment entered on it, motion for a new trial overruled, court adjourned, and application for a writ of error sued out before presenting the bond and application for the removal of the cause.

But under the first assignment of error is advanced this proposition: "When a plaintiff, having sued in a state court, and sought to fix joint liability on two defendants, one a resident, the other a nonresident of the state, has kept his pleading in this form, so that the case is not removable until after the lapse of the time limited by the laws of the state for pleading or answering in said case, and thereupon the plaintiff voluntarily abandons and dismisses the case as against the resident defendant by an order entered of record concurrently with, and as a part of, a judgment then entered against the nonresident, such a device is a fraud on the right of a nonresident defendant to have the cause removed under the statutes of the United States. It estops the plaintiff to complain of delay in the removal proceedings, and vitiates the judgment, rendering it void as against the exercise by the nonresident defendant of his right and option to so remove the case by filing and presenting his petition and bond thereafter, and such option and right to remove will continue in defendant so long as the removal status of the record continues, and up to the time when such defendant would be required to plead or answer in response to this new status of the record." We need not discuss nor pass upon the abstract question of the soundness of the proposition in its entirety; for it is more extensive than can be sustained by the record. It is deemed sufficient to point out that the record does not warrant the assertion contained in the proposition that plaintiff voluntarily abandoned and dismissed his case against the resident defendants "by an order entered of record concurrently with and as a part of the judgment against the nonresident." In this case no judgment was entered, nor could be, until after the verdict was returned. There could have been no verdict until after the charge was prepared by the court and read to the jury, and the charge expressly states that the plaintiff had dismissed his suit against the two resident defendants. Therefore the order of dismissal was not entered of record "concurrently with, and as a part of, the judgment against the nonresident defendant." But, as is shown by what has been said in disposing of the preceding assignment, the order was entered in ample time to have enabled the defendant by taking the proper steps to have presented its bond and application for removal before the verdict was returned and the judgment on it rendered. Inasmuch as no such steps were taken, it cannot be truly said that defendant's "option and right to remove continued" after the verdict and judgment; but from that time must be considered waived. N. P. Ry. Co. v. Austin, 135 U. S. 315, 10 Sup. Ct. 753, 34 L. Ed. 218; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v.

Dixon, 179 U. S. 140, 21 Sup. Ct. 67, 45 L. Ed. 125; Powers v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 169 U. S. 101, 18 Sup. Ct. 264, 42 L. Ed. 670; Jones v. Mosher, 107 Fed. 561, 46 C. C. A. 471. Having thus disposed of these preliminary assignments, we come to the consideration of those which question the validity of the judgment.

The contention on the part of defendant that the court erred in not sustaining its plea to its jurisdiction by reason of the alleged dissimilarity of the laws of Louisiana—the state where plaintiff's injury was inflicted—to those of this state, cannot be maintained. The right of the courts of one state to take jurisdiction of causes of action for torts to persons based upon acts or omissions done or occurring in other states is established beyond dispute. The alleged injury to the plaintiff is actionable under the laws of Louisiana as well as under those of Texas. It is transitory in its nature, and such as can be brought wherever jurisdiction can be obtained over the person of the defendant. Even if there were a dissimilarity between the laws of the two states, as applicable to the action, that would not deprive the courts of Texas of jurisdiction; for they would simply apply the laws of the state where the cause of action arose as was done in this case. That after the institution of this suit the plaintiff also sued the defendant on the same cause of action in Louisiana furnished no cause for abating the suit brought in this state.

There was no error in the court's refusing defendant's request to instruct the jury that, according to the law and the undisputed evidence in this case, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and therefore to return a verdict in favor of defendant. Because the evidence was not undisputed, but in sharp conflict, it was for the jury to weigh and determine its probative force. In doing so they must have found that the derailment of the motor car, which was the cause of plaintiff's injuries, was due either to the unsafe and defective condition of the axle of its front wheel, or to the speed at which Stevens, who was defendant's servant and vice principal in charge of and running the car, propelled it; or to both causes combined. The evidence was reasonably sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that either or all of these acts were the cause of the derailment which resulted in plaintiff's injuries, and that they all were negligent acts of the defendant, and also that the plaintiff did not assume the risk of the derailment from any of said negligent acts, and was guilty of no negligence contributing to his injuries.

This disposition of the third assignment of error, also disposes of the fourth, fifth, sixth, and ninth, which complain that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings of the jury, and also of the seventh, which complaints that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question as to a defect in the left front wheel and axle of the car, whether it was in an unsafe and defective condition, and, if unsafe and defective, whether such condition caused the car to leave the track, and was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, upon the ground that there was no evidence to warrant the submission of such issues.

There is no error in that part of the charge complained of in the eighth assignment. If, as is said by the court in that part of its charge, there was mud on the rail, and it was only the concurring cause with the condition of the wheel and axle and speed of the car, or with both together, in producing the derailment, then the presence of mud on the rail would not defeat defendant's action, if the left front wheel was in a defective and unsafe condition by reason of defendant's negligence, or if the rate of speed the car was running was negligence, and that either of such acts of negligence or both concurring caused the derailment, either together or in connection with mud on the rail.

So much of the requested charges, the refusal of which is complained of in the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth assignments, as is the law applicable to the case is embraced in the court's main charge.

There is no error in the judgment, and it is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 141*)—JURY QUESTION—UNDISPUTED FACTS.

Where the essential facts of plaintiff's cause of action are established by undisputed evidence, there is no issue of fact for the jury.

2. SALES (§ 420*) — ACTION BY BUYER FOR BREACH—JURY QUESTION.

In an action by a buyer for breach of the contract of sale, there is no question for the jury except the amount of damages where the facts as to the contract and breach are established by undisputed evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1202; Dec. Dig. § 420.*]

3. SALES (§ 418*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT BY SELLER—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

While ordinarily the measure of damages for the vendor's breach of a contract of sale is the market price of the goods at the time and place of delivery, less the contract price, if, when the contract is made, the vendor has notice that the goods are purchased for resale in a particular market or pursuant to a particular contract, so that he may reasonably be deemed to have contracted in contemplation of such purpose, damages may be recovered on the basis of such market or such special contract.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error in admitting evidence on the amount of damages was harmless where the undisputed evidence fully sustained the verdict as to the damages awarded, measured by the rule properly given the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4163; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 248*) — AMENDMENT — NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where both the original and amended petitions were based upon a breach of the same contract, that plaintiff construed the contract as one of agency in the original petition, and as a contract of sale in the amended petition, did not make the amended petition set up a new cause of action.

6. SALES (§ 406*)—REMEDY OF BUYER—ACTION FOR BREACH—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Where, in an action for breach of contract to deliver lumber sold, it appeared that the seller had no lumber on hand at the time for delivery which it intended to deliver under the contract, the buyer was not bound to inspect and select any lumber in order to sue for the seller's breach.

7. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 55*)—UNLIQUIDATED DEMANDS—EXISTENCE OF SET-OFF.

Where plaintiff at the accrual of an indebtedness owing by him under a contract was entitled, as damages for breach of the contract, to a much larger sum than the amount due, interest on such amount was properly disallowed.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by C. R. Cummings & Co. against the Kirby Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Moye Wicks and Andrews, Ball & Streetman, for appellant. Hutcheson, Campbell & Hutcheson, for appellees.

NEILL, J. This suit was brought by appellees to recover damages against appellant for the breach of certain alleged sales of lumber made by the latter to the former; the breach alleged being the company's failure to deliver the lumber contracted for. The defendant answered by general and special exceptions to plaintiff's first amended original petition, on which the case was tried, a general denial, pleas of limitation, and certain other pleas in bar, which will hereafter be referred to. The case was tried before a jury, whom, after the evidence was introduced, the court instructed as follows:

"The undisputed evidence shows that the 360,000 feet of lumber bought by the plaintiff of the defendants on the 23d of July, 1902, was ultimately delivered, and consequently you will not consider that matter at all in making up your verdict.

"(2) The evidence is also undisputed that all the orders beginning near the foot of page

2 of the plaintiff's first amended original petition filed April 23, 1903, the first order being No. 517, continuing down to and on to page 6, the last being order No. 551, were all given to the defendant Kirby Lumber Company by the plaintiffs, and were by said company accepted for delivery in the quantities and at the prices and at the times stated in the petition.

"(3) The evidence is also undisputed that the Kirby Lumber Company would not have any connection with or sell to any person in Germany or beyond the seas, but that all the orders above cited were sold to and charged to C. R. Cummings & Co., and that they were placed on the books of the Kirby Lumber Company as a charge against the said C. R. Cummings & Co., and it is further undisputed that the said Kirby Lumber Company knew when the orders were given that the lumber was bought to be shipped abroad and sold in foreign markets.

"(4) It is further undisputed that none of the lumber was delivered, and the only duty devolving upon you is to determine what loss Cummings & Co. suffered by reason of such failure on the part of the Kirby Lumber Company to deliver the lumber. In arriving at this, you will take the price at which the lumber was sold for delivery at Rotterdam or at Hamburg, as the case may be, in each instance, and then ascertain what the lumber was worth in that market at the time it was to have been delivered, and allow the plaintiffs as damages the difference between the two prices per thousand feet, and will find what that difference amounted to as to each shipment, and then add to the amount you so find to have been the loss or damages of the plaintiffs on each shipment 5 per cent. on the amount which the whole shipment would have brought at the place of delivery at the time it was contracted to be delivered. You will pursue this method of calculation as to each shipment in regular sequence, and find the aggregate of such loss, if any, as you find there was, and then from that aggregate you will deduct the credit of $2,302.59, admitted to be due by the plaintiffs to the defendant upon some other account, and add to the balance so remaining 6 per cent. interest per annum from June 1, 1903, to this date, and return your verdict for the plaintiffs for the sum resulting from this method of inquiry and calculation. You will then find for the plaintiffs the sum of $925.83 as the amount paid Langbehn & Co., but will allow no interest on that amount, and then, by adding the sum of $925.83 to the aggregate so found as above stated, state the total due at this date, and return your verdict therefor."

In response to the charge the jury returned the following verdict:

"We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, C. R.

Upon the verdict judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $11,311.65, with interest from its date.

We find that the undisputed evidence establishes beyond question such matters of fact as the jury were charged by the court were incontrovertibly proved, and that it is reasonably sufficient to support the verdict as to the damages. We deem it unnecessary to consider and discuss seriatim the numerous assignments presented in appellant's brief, for many can be disposed of on principles of law applicable alike to them all.

Our conclusions of fact dispose of the assignments which attack the part of the charge which enumerates certain matters of fact proved by the undisputed evidence; for, when the undisputed evidence establishes beyond controversy facts essential to plaintiff's action or to the defense of his adversary, as to such matters there can be no issues of fact to submit to the jury's finding but they become matters of law for the court to determine. Hence, under the undisputed evidence, it was proper for the court to submit to the jury only the question as to the amount of damages plaintiffs had sustained by defendant's breach of the contracts.

But it is complained that the charge gives to the jury the wrong measure of damages in a case like this, where the breach consists in the vendor's failure to deliver to the vendee the goods contracted for. Ordinarily, if a contract for the sale of personalty, executory on the part of the vendor, is broken by him, the measure of damages is the market price of such property less the contract price, and the market price for this purpose must be determined as to the time and place of the delivery agreed upon. But, if at the time the contract is made the vendor has notice or knowledge that the goods are being purchased for sale in a particular market, or to be supplied in pursuance of a particular contract, he may fairly and reasonably be deemed to have made his contract in contemplation of that purpose, and to have assumed the risks thereby entailed, then, if he breaks his contract, damages for loss caused thereby, if not uncertain and remote, may be recovered. 3 Page on Contracts, § 1589; Mechem on Sales, § 1763; Sutherland on Damages, § 52. In this case the evidence conclusively shows that at the time the sales were made defendant knew that plaintiffs purchased the lumber for resale in a foreign market—at Rotterdam or at Hamburg. In fact, the defendant knew when it sold plaintiffs the lumber that they bought it for delivery to parties in Rotterdam and Hamburg, with whom they had contracted to sell it at prices designated in the orders which they furnished the defendant at the time it made the contracts with them upon which this action is founded. We think, therefore, that the proper measure of damages was presented to the jury in the court's charge. While it may be that in view of the court's charge the evidence as to prices at which plaintiffs had contracted resales of the lumber in Rotterdam and Hamburg, and as to their having to indemnify the parties to whom they sold for the damages they sustained by reason of their inability to deliver the lumber, occasioned by defendant's breach of its contract, was irrelevant, it cannot be held to have been inadmissible in view of plaintiff's pleadings. If, however, all the evidence, the admission of which is complained of by numerous assignments, should be deemed inadmissible under the objections urged to its introduction, still, inasmuch as the undisputed evidence fully sustains the verdict as to the damages, measured by the rule given the jury, its introduction could have in no way affected the verdict, and such error, if error, was therefore harmless.

The plaintiffs' first amended original petition declares upon the same contracts that were sued upon in their original petition, the breach of which in each pleading is the foundation of the action. That the plaintiffs did not place the same construction upon the contracts in each pleading—having construed them in the first as contracts of agency and in the other as a contract of sale—did not constitute the filing of the first amended original petition the beginning of a new or different cause of action. In view of this, it is apparent from the dates of the several contracts and of the filing of the original petition that plaintiffs' action was not barred by the statutes of limitations pleaded, and that the court did not err in refusing to submit as an issue in the case the question of limitation to the jury.

From the uncontroverted evidence the defendants had no lumber on hand that it intended to deliver the plaintiffs under the contracts. Hence plaintiffs' failure to inspect and select the lumber cannot be urged as a defense to this action.

Inasmuch as plaintiffs were entitled, as damages, to a much larger sum than the $2,302.59 they owed defendant at the time such sum became due, there was no error in the court's not allowing defendant interest on such amount.

There is no error in the judgment, and it is affirmed.

DOLINSKI et al. v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF PITTSBURG et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, Oct. 28, 1909.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 69*)—PURCHASE BY AGENT—ACCOUNTING FOR PROFITS.

The purchasers of property requested the vendor to purchase other property for them. He was not told what to pay for it, but, upon his asking to be limited as to the price, he was told not to give more than $6,000. He was to receive nothing for making the purchase. He paid $5,000 for the property, and took a bill of sale for $5,800, and on the same day deeded it to the purchasers for $5,800. Held that, in making the purchase, he acted as agent for the purchasers, so that he was bound to account to them for his profit on the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 130, 132, 140; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 852*) — REVIEW — SCOPE AND THEORY OF CASE.

Where plaintiff in an action on a note pleaded performance of a condition precedent, but not a waiver by defendant of performance, the court, on plaintiff's appeal, need not consider whether the evidence supports a finding that there was such a waiver of performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3402; Dec. Dig. § 852.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 346*)—ACTION—PLEADING AND PROOF—PERFORMANCE—WAIVER.

Plaintiff, who pleads performance of a condition precedent, cannot recover on proof of a waiver by defendant of such performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1750; Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 285*)—VENDOR'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—JUDGMENT.

In an action to foreclose a vendor's lien retained in a note for the purchase price of property, no judgment except for foreclosure should be rendered against a defendant who has succeeded to the rights of the makers of a note, in the absence of allegations in the pleadings showing a further liability and a prayer for further relief against such defendant than such foreclosure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 803-805; Dec. Dig. § 285.*]

5. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 120*)—VENDOR'S LIEN—NOTE—CONSTRUCTION—"WE OR EITHER OF US PROMISE TO PAY."

Where a vendor's lien note stated that "we or either of us promise to pay," etc., the liability of the four makers was properly held joint and several, though the conveyance, a part of the consideration of which was represented by the note, stated that the cash payment was made by the purchasers in the proportions of one-fourth, one-third, one-sixth, and one-fourth, and that the amounts to be paid by the purchasers on the note were in the same proportions.

Appeal from District Court, Camp County; R. W. Simpson, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Pittsburg against P. Dolinski, H. D. Knight, and others. Judgment for plaintiff against all defendants, and for defendant Knight against the other defendants, who appeal. Affirmed as to the judgment in favor of the bank against Knight, and in other respects reversed and remanded for new trial.

The suit was by the appellee bank against the appellants P. Dolinski, C. G. Davis, J. B. Greer, and P. W. Thorsell as makers, and against appellee H. D. Knight as an indorser, to recover a balance of $1,800, interest and attorney's fees, alleged to be due on a promissory note for the sum of $5,300, payable to said Knight, and representing a part of the purchase price of a saw and a shingle mill, certain pine timber, and other property which need not be specified, and as against said appellants and appellee Knight and as against appellant the Progressive Lumber Company to foreclose a vendor's lien recited in the note as having been retained on the property to secure the payment thereof. In accordance with the verdict of a jury, judgment was rendered in favor of the bank against all the other parties for the sum of $2,277.44, interest and costs, and foreclosing the vendor's lien as prayed for, and in favor of Knight over against all the appellants for said sum of $2,277.44 and costs. The appeal is prosecuted by Dolinski, Greer, Thorsell, Davis, and the Progressive Lumber Company.

The note declared upon was as follows: "$5,300.00. Gilmer, Texas, February 6th, 1907. On or before the first day of January, 1908, we or either of us promise to pay to H. D. Knight or order the sum of Fifty Three Hundred Dollars for value received, with interest from date hereof at the rate of eight per cent. per annum until paid. And in case this note is placed in the hands of attorneys for collection by suit we agree to pay 10% additional as attorney's fees. This note is given in part consideration for the purchase money for one saw mill complete, and Thirteen hundred and forty five acres of Pine saw timber, this day conveyed Phillip Dolinski, C. G. Davis, J. B. Greer and P. W. Thorsell, on which property a vendor's lien is hereby retained until the purchase money is fully paid. It is further agreed by the said H. D. Knight that he is to furnish the Grantees herein the amount of One hundred acres of virgin Pine timber, in order that the amount of 1345 acres conveyed in said deed may be completed. One thousand dollars of this note not to be paid until 100 acres is deeded to said grantees by good and sufficient deed. The said H. D. Knight agrees further that he will secure releases for approximately $900.00 outstanding against said timber before the payment of this note. [Signed] Phillip Dolinski. C. G. Davis. J. B. Greer. P. W. Thorsell." A portion of the instrument conveying the property referred to from Knight to appellants Dolinski, Davis, Greer, and Thorsell, bearing the same date as the note, was as follows: "Know all men by these presents: that I, H. D. Knight of the county of Upshur and state of Texas, for and in consideration of the sum of twenty-two thousand and one hundred dollars to me paid and secured to be paid by Phillip Dolinski, C. G. Davis, J. B. Greer and P. W. Thorsell, as follows: Sixteen thousand and eight hundred dollars cash in hand paid, the receipt whereof is fully acknowledged, and the sum of fifty three hundred dollars in one certain promissory note executed by the said grantees to said H. D. Knight for said sum, due January first, 1908, with interest from date hereof until paid at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, and the respective amounts paid by the grantees herein is as follows, Phillip Dolinski forty-two hundred dollars, the same being his one-fourth interest of the cash payment; C. G. Davis fifty-six hundred dollars, the same being his one-third interest in the cash payment; J. B. Greer twenty-eight hundred dollars, the same being his one-sixth interest in the cash payment; P. W. Thorsell forty-two hundred dollars, the same being his one-fourth interest in the cash payment. The respective amounts to be paid by the grantees on the said note being in the order above named, one-fourth, one-third, one-sixth, and one-fourth being in the same proportion as the cash payment."

Mell & Stephens and Sam D. Snodgrass, for appellants. Warren & Briggs and W. R. Heath, for appellees.

WILLSON, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). Appellants insist that the uncontradicted evidence showed that in purchasing the shingle mill Knight acted for them as their agent, and therefore that they were entitled to have allowed as an offset against the balance remaining unpaid on the note the sum of $800, representing the difference between $5,000, the sum Knight actually paid for the shingle mill, and $5,800, the sum he represented to them he had paid for it and the sum he demanded and received of them on account of same. Knight testified: "They," referring to appellants Dolinski, Davis, Greer, and Thorsell, "asked me to buy the property for them, and I told them I would, and went, but did not buy it for them. I did not tell them I was going to buy that property for myself. I did not tell them anything about it. I don't remember them asking me to buy it directly for them. They asked me to go and buy it, I suppose for them, but they did not say I was to buy it for them. They did not tell me how much to pay for it. When I started, I said, 'You had better limit me on this thing, because I might give more than you want to give for it;' and they said, 'Don't give over $6,000.' They did not want to give any more than that. They said, 'Don't pay over $6,000.' They were not to give me anything for making the purchase of that Brown property for them. There was nothing said about it at all. * * * I paid

$5,000 for the property. I deeded the same property to them the same day I got it. * * * I took a bill of sale to the Brown property for $5,800. This is the bill of sale that Brown executed to me that same day. When I went back, I showed this bill of sale to these parties. I gave it to them. The bill of sale shows the consideration paid for the Brown property was $5,800. The reason I did that was because it suited me to do it that way. But, as a matter of fact, I only paid $5,000 for it. I did not say there to those gentlemen, 'This is what I paid for it.' I never did say that. They did not ask me. They never asked me if I did not pay but $5,000 for that property. I never told them what I really paid for this piece of property. They did not ask me, and I did not tell them voluntarily. I got $5,800 for the property because that is what I asked them for it. I did not represent anything about the price to them, any more than I just showed them the bill of sale." From the testimony quoted we think the conclusion is irresistible that, when he purchased the shingle mill, Knight acted as appellants' agent, and we do not think the conclusion is weakened by other portions of Knight's testimony tending to show that he may have believed he acted for himself in purchasing the shingle mill, and that at the time he undertook to represent appellants in the purchase thereof the negotiations between himself and appellants with respect to the sale by him to them of his sawmill had not reached a point where appellants had become bound to purchase his sawmill property in the event they secured the shingle mill. Whether they had become bound to purchase the sawmill property or not, when they authorized Knight on their account to purchase the shingle mill, they became bound to receive and pay for same after Knight had purchased it for them at a price authorized by them. And, as their agent, the latter became bound, when he took a conveyance to himself of the shingle mill, to convey same to appellants at the price he paid for it. He would not be permitted to make a profit for himself out of his agency by selling to his principals at a price in excess of that he paid for it property he had undertaken to purchase on their account. 1 Clark & Skyles on Agency, p. 800. On the evidence as it appears in the record, we think the peremptory instruction requested by appellants directing the jury to find in their favor the offset of $800 claimed as specified should have been given.

By the terms of the contract between the parties to the note declared upon, $1,000 of the amount thereof was not to be paid until 100 acres of virgin pine timber, in addition to the quantity conveyed by the instrument referred to in the note, had been conveyed by a "good and sufficient deed" to the makers thereof. Appellants insist that the testimony showed that in the particular referred to the contract had not been complied with, and therefore, in so far as the judgment awarded a recovery against them for the $1,000 interest, etc., it is erroneous, because contrary to the evidence. That the 100 acres of timber, nor any part of it, never was conveyed to appellants, seems to have been conclusively established by uncontradicted testimony. Appellees sought to avoid the consequence of the failure on Knight's part to comply with his undertaking to make a conveyance of such timber by a "good and sufficient deed" by testimony tending to show that the Progressive Lumber Company, succeeding to the rights of the makers of the note, had cut and manufactured into lumber for its own use the timber off of 29 acres of land belonging to Knight, and that Davis, as president of said lumber company, had accepted as a compliance on the part of Knight with his undertaking a conveyance to him (Knight) from one Ferguson of 71 acres of timber owned in common by Ferguson and other persons who did not join in the conveyance. Davis denied having so accepted such a deed; and, without going into a discussion of the evidence on that phase of the case, we will say, if it established anything, it established a waiver by Davis of the performance by Knight of that term of the contract, and not a performance, substantial or otherwise, thereof. The allegation in appellees' pleading was that Knight had performed the undertaking in question by conveying to appellants the 100 acres of virgin pine timber. They did not allege a waiver by appellants of a performance by Knight of his undertakings. It therefore is unnecessary to consider whether the testimony was sufficient to support a finding by the jury that there was such a waiver or not. To be available as an excuse for the nonperformance by Knight of his undertaking, the waiver must have been pleaded. Insurance Co. v. Holcomb, 89 Tex. 410, 34 S. W. 915; Insurance Co. v. Brown, 82 Tex. 631, 18 S. W. 715; Insurance Co. v. Daniels (Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 550.

For the errors indicated by what has been said, the judgment except so far as it is in favor of the bank against appellee Knight will be reversed. On another trial, in the event of a recovery by the appellees, if the pleadings remain as they are, a judgment other than for a foreclosure of the lien asserted should not be rendered against the Progressive Lumber Company. Facts showing further liability on its part were not alleged, and the only relief prayed for as against it was for a foreclosure of the lien.

We do not think the court erred in construing the contract between the parties to the note as binding the makers jointly and severally for the full amount of the balance, if any, due on the note. Such a construction was necessary to give effect to the language of the contract as evidenced by the note and the instrument conveying the property from Knight to Dolinski, Davis, Greer, and Thorsell. We think the recital of the proportions paid and to be paid of the purchase price of the property by the purchasers thereof should be construed as intended as between themselves to evidence their respective interests in it.

So far as the judgment is in favor of the bank against appellee Knight it will be affirmed. In all other respects it will be reversed, and the cause will be remanded for a new trial on the issues remaining.

Appeal from District Court, Nacogdoches County; James I. Perkins, Judge.

Action by Mrs. N. Payne against the Attoyac River Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

June C. Harris and Ingraham, Middlebrook & Hodges, for appellant. King & King and C. D. Mims, for appellee.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This suit was brought by appellee against appellant to recover the sum of $738.65, the aggregate amount of certain time checks issued by the appellant to various of its employes, and claimed to be owned by appellee.

In addition to general and special exceptions and general denial, the defendant's answer contains the following special pleas: "Further answering herein, defendant denies that it ever at any time issued any time checks which were given for labor performed by its employes to be redeemed in cash or payable to any one, except in this: That defendant has heretofore for the convenience and accommodation of its employes issued time checks, some of which have been delivered to defendant's employes before their wages were due for the special and peculiar benefit and accommodation of its said employes, and with the specific agreement and understanding in each instance that said checks were issued and delivered to said employes for the special accommodation of the employe to whom they were delivered; that said checks were nontransferable, and were delivered by the defendant and accepted under the condition that such employe so receiving said checks would use them for the purpose of purchasing merchandise at defendant's store located near its mill at Mayo, in Nacogdoches county, Tex., and that said checks were not redeemable in money. Defendant says that the average profit made upon merchandise sold out of its said store to its employes is 25 per cent., and that the value of said checks is not more than 75 cents on the dollar. The defendant did issue checks such as are described in plaintiff's petition with an agreement with such party to whom issued that they would not transfer them to any one, that they were only payable in merchandise at the commissary store of defendant, and were nothing but orders for merchandise at the prices the same was sold at the commissary of this defendant, and were not payable in money, that they were only issued as emergency matter, and to avoid to some extent keeping an elaborate set of books and accounts with each man to whom issued, and the said merchandise was sold at a profit of 20 per cent., and no demand has been made for the payment of said checks in merchandise of this defendant, who was at all times and now is ready to pay them off at its commissary with merchandise at its selling price at its commissary, and the same would thus be paid there on presentation upon proof of ownership of the holder, and these facts it is ready to verify." The trial in the court below was with a jury, and under peremptory instructions by the court a verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff for amount claimed by her, and judgment was rendered in accordance with such verdict.

The record does not contain a copy of any of the checks upon which the suit was brought, and the description of said checks shown by the evidence is very meager. It only appears that the checks were numbered 5, 10, 25, 50, or 100, and were issued by the appellant. It does not appear that said checks show on their face to whom they were issued, or show that in issuing them appellant became liable to any one in any amount. The evidence does show, however, that the number of the check was intended to show the number of cents in which appellant was indebted to the person to whom they were issued for labor performed for appellant, and there was testimony tending to show that the appellant in issuing said check intended to and did obligate itself to pay to the person to whom they were issued the number of cents shown by the number of said check. The evidence offered by the appellant was to the effect that it only issued checks of the kind sued on by appellee at request of its employes and with the distinct understanding and agreement on the part of the employe to whom any such check might be issued that the check was redeemable only in merchandise, and, unless such check was presented at appellant's store and offered in exchange for merchandise, appellant was under no obligation to redeem it. Appellant's testimony upon this issue is as follows:

S. F. Carter for defendant testified: "We just issue these checks for the convenience of the employes and bookkeepers. When they would want something out of the store and had no money, we would issue them a check, and they would buy something out of the store with the check. Any one that wanted something out of the store we would issue them a check; but he had to buy out of the store, and with that check. It was with that understanding that we issued the checks to the men. Sometimes we would accommodate a man that had done no work yet and was wanting something out of the store. We would issue him a check so he could get something to live on until he could get to work and get in some time. We only done this for accommodation, however, but done it quite often. When we would issue a man a check that had in no time, we would just charge him with it, and, as soon as he had worked some, would fix that up again. He would have to get merchandise with his check. We made 18 or 20 per cent. net on our merchandise. We did not give checks for cash at all, but so the men could purchase merchandise. We were advised by our attorney not to put 'Merchandise' on the checks. If a man was working at $1 per day, if he wanted it at night, I would give him $1 check. We had a pay day, Saturday after the 15th of each month. Our hands all worked under this. If a man would draw his checks every night and spend only 15 of them during the month, we would not give $15 in cash for 15 No. 100 checks. We did not issue checks only for men who wanted to trade out of the store. That was the only purpose they were issued for, and that was the understanding with the men."

H. M. Carter testified: "I am superintendent of defendant; know Mr. Atkinson; have cashed small checks for him, not many times. I told him I would not cash any more unless discounted 10 per cent. I told the men they would have to discount the checks 10 per cent. Atkinson told me he would get every one of the damned things he could, and we stopped issuing them. I cashed some to avoid a lawsuit. Every one else was willing to the discount. Mr. Skeeters and Mr. Phillips was. I do not remember who else. The peddlers were. The checks were issued solely for the convenience of the employees of the mill. When those laborers would get the checks and go outside of the store with them, we would discount the man that finally brought them in 10 per cent. Any man who brought them in would have to accept a discount of 10 per cent."

There was no evidence that the persons from whom appellee obtained the checks were those to whom they were originally issued, or had acquired the title of those to whom they were issued.

Under this state of the evidence, the trial court should not have instructed a verdict for the plaintiff, and the assignment of error complaining of such instruction must be sustained.

It is clear that the evidence above set out would authorize a finding by the jury that the checks sued on were issued by appellant with the understanding and agreement on the part of the employees to whom they were issued that such checks were payable only in merchandise. If this is true, it is well settled that neither the employees to whom the checks were issued nor their assignee could recover in money the amount specified in the checks, unless demand had been made for their payment in merchandise and such demand refused by appellant. The privilege of the appellant to discharge the obligation in merchandise was not lost until demand had been made therefor; the obligation not being payable on a day certain, but on demand of the payee. Baker v. Todd, 8 Tex. 273, 55 Am. Dec. 775; Hopkins v. Seymour, 10 Tex. 202; Short v. Abernathy, 42 Tex. 94. The checks in question having none of the essential qualities of a negotiable instrument payable to bearer, the mere possession of them by the appellee raises no presumption that she is entitled to the rights of the person to whom they were issued. The evidence failed to show that appellee had acquired the right and title of the original owner of said checks, and therefore fails to show that she was entitled to recover thereon. Rush Bros. v. Haggard, 68 Tex. 674, 5 S. W. 683; Griffeth v. Hanks, 46 Tex. 217; Robinson v. Texas Pine Land Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 620. The act of the Legislature prohibiting employers from issuing time checks to their employees payable in merchandise was declared unconstitutional by the Court of Criminal Appeals in the case of Jordan v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 531, 103 S. W. 633, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603, and the rights of the parties to this suit are therefore not affected by that act.

For the reasons above given, the judgment of the court below must be reversed, and the cause remanded, and it is so ordered.

Reversed and remanded.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. WILLIAMS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 23, 1909.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—FAILURE TO DELIVER MESSAGE—NOTICE OF PROBABLE DAMAGE.

'A telegram sent by plaintiff to his agent, reading: "Rent building if you think best," was sufficient to show defendant telegraph company's agents that the addressee had been negotiating to rent plaintiff's building, that he was authorized to rent it if he thought best, and that damages might result to plaintiff if defendant did not deliver the message, and the building was not rented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 62*)—FAILURE TO DELIVER MESSAGE—DAMAGES—DUTY TO REDUCE DAMAGE.

It was plaintiff's duty, on losing a prospective tenant for his building for a stated term through defendant telegraph company's failure to deliver a message, to use reasonable diligence to secure another tenant at the best rental he could get, and thus reduce the damages.

Appeal from Freestone County Court; John Terry, Judge.

Action by J. H. Williams against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

N. L. Lindsley, for appellant.

BOOKHOUT, J. Appellee, J. H. Williams, a resident of Freestone county, Tex., on July 23, 1908, brought suit against appellant, Western Union Telegraph Company, for the nondelivery of the following telegram: "Rockwall, Texas, 7-23-1907. To R. H. Waldrop, Teague, Texas. Rent building if you think best. [Signed] J. H. Williams." It was alleged that on the 23d of July, 1907, appellee was the owner, and is still the owner, of lot No. 17, in block No. 94, in the town of Teague, Tex., and a certain storehouse situated thereon; that on said last-mentioned date appellee had an agent, to wit, R. H. Waldrop, who was then residing in the town of Teague, and was in said town at said time, and that he was well known to the citizens of said town of Teague; that Connell Bros., a firm then doing business in said town of Teague, was desirous of leasing appellee's said storehouse for a period of 12 months beginning on the 1st day of August, 1907, and to run for 12 months, or until August 1, 1908, and the said Connell Bros. offered to the appellee the sum of $35 per month rental for said building; that appellee was absent from the town of Teague at the time, and was in the town of Rockwall, Tex.; that being advised by his said agent of the proposition so made by the said Connell Bros. to lease his said building, his said agent not having the authority to lease same without the consent of appellee, he (appellee) on the 23d day of July, 1907, made and delivered to the appellant's agent at Rockwall the telegram hereinabove set out; that he paid to appellant's agent at Rockwall, Tex., the sum of 25 cents, being in full of all charges demanded by appellant's agent at said place; that the said telegram was by the negligence of said appellant, its agents and servants, never delivered to the said R. H. Waldrop, and by reason of such negligence of appellant in failing to promptly transmit and deliver the said message to the said R. H. Waldrop, as it contracted and agreed to do, the said Connell Bros. failed to lease the said building, and appellee has thereby suffered and lost in actual damages the amount of $420; that, had the appellant delivered the said message to R. H. Waldrop, the said Waldrop could and would have closed a rental contract with the said Connell Bros. for appellee's said building for one year, beginning on the 1st day of August, 1907, and ending on the 1st day of August, 1908, at a monthly rental of $35; that appellee has only been able to rent his said building for about two months during said time, and has collected as rents the sum of $45, which said amount he credits on the yearly rental he would have received; leaving a balance due of $375, for which amount he asks judgment. The defendant answered by general and special exceptions, general denial, and by special answer that the plaintiff could and should by the use of ordinary diligence have rented the premises for a reasonable monthly rental shortly after July 23, 1907, and that by reason of plaintiff failing to use ordinary diligence in this respect, and by reason of the fact that the plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence, the alleged loss and damage to plaintiff was occasioned, and that the plaintiff for this reason is not entitled to recover against the defendant herein. The demurrers were overruled, to which action of the court the defendant excepted. Trial was had before the court, which resulted in a judgment in favor of appellee and against appellant for $375.

We are of the opinion that the telegram gave sufficient notice of the object of plaintiff in sending it, and that the agents of defendant could reasonably have contemplated that some such damages as that sued for would result to plaintiff by its failure to use reasonable diligence for its delivery. The message was sufficient to show that Waldrop, the addressee, had been negotiating to rent plaintiff's building, and that he was authorized to rent it if in his judgment he thought best, and that damages might result to plaintiff if the company failed to deliver the message, and the building was not rented. There was no error in overruling appellant's demurrers to the petition.

We are, however, of the opinion that reversible error is pointed out by the sixth assignment of error, reading as follows: "The court erred in rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant herein for the reason that it appears from the uncontradicted evidence in this case that the proximate cause of the damages claimed to have resulted to the plaintiff was caused by the failure on the part of the plaintiff to make other efforts to rent the storehouse during the time it is claimed he could have rented it to Connell Bros." It was the duty of plaintiff, after the contract had been breached and he ascertained that Connell Bros. would not rent his building, to use reasonable diligence to rent the same to some other responsible party. If it could not be rented for the same amount that Connell Bros. were willing to pay, then he should have used reasonable diligence to rent it for the best price he could get from other solvent parties, and hold the appellant liable for the difference, and thus reduce as far as possible his damages. Telegraph Co. v. Jeanes, 88 Tex. 230, 31 S. W. 186; Kramer v. Wolf Cigar Stores, 99 Tex. 597, 91 S. W. 775. Appellee testified that he made no attempt after he found his telegram had not been delivered to rent his storehouse during the balance of the year.

For the error pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

PRATT et al. v. INTERSTATE SAVINGS & TRUST CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)
APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 407*)—CITATION IN ERROR—SERVICE.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1394, provides that a citation in error shall be directed to an officer commanding him to summon defendant to appear, etc. Article 1398 provides that, if defendant is a nonresident or cannot be found in the county, the citation shall direct the officer to summon defendant by service on his attorney of record, if there be one. Held that, where a citation in error merely commands the officer to summon defendant, service thereof on defendant's attorney is not service on defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2129; Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

Error from District Court, Taylor County; J. H. Calhoun, Judge.

Action between John A. Pratt and Emma W. Pratt and the Interstate Savings & Trust Company. To review the judgment entered the Pratts brought error. Heard on motion to dismiss writ of error. Writ dismissed.

Harry Tom King and B. K. Isaacs, for the motion.

On Motion to Dismiss Writ of Error.

RICE, J. This is a motion by the defendant in error to dismiss the writ of error herein. The service in this case of the writ of error was made upon the attorney of the defendant in error, and no service whatever was made upon the defendant in error, nor has it in any manner accepted service of said petition in error. It appears, both from the petition for writ of error and from the petition in the lower court, that the defendant in error was a nonresident corporation. The citation in error in this case commanded the sheriff to serve the same upon the defendant in error, and no direction whatever was made therein to serve the same upon its attorney of record, as was in fact done by the sheriff. Among other requisites of a citation in error it is required that it shall be directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county where the defendant is alleged to reside, and shall command him forthwith to summon the defendant to appear and defend such writ, etc. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1394. Ordinarily service of such writ shall be made by delivering to the defendant in error in person a true copy of such citation by the officer. Article 1398 of the Revised Statutes prescribes that if it appears from the allegations in the papers of the cause that the party is a non-resident of the state, or if it appears from the return of the sheriff or constable that the party cannot be found in the county of his residence, the citation shall direct the officer to summon the defendant by making service on his attorney of record if there be one.

Defendant in error has moved to quash the service and dismiss the writ of error, for several reasons, amongst others, because said citation in error so issued by the clerk was not, by the sheriff serving the same served on the party who by its terms he was commanded to serve; second, because said citation commanded the sheriff to serve the Interstate Savings & Trust Company (defendant in error), and his return on said process shows that he served Harry Tom King (who, it appears from the papers, was its attorney of record); and, third, because the record in this case fails to show that defendant in error was properly cited to appear and defend the writ of error. We think the motion is well taken, and should be sustained. The citation in error was formal, and such as prescribed by article 1394, Rev. Civ. St. 1895, and such as is contemplated when the defendant in the writ is a resident of the county to which the same is directed, but where it appears from the papers of the cause that the party is a nonresident, or if from the return of the sheriff it appears that the defendant cannot be found in the county of his residence, then the citation shall direct the officer to summon defendant by making service on his attorney of record, if there be one. These are the only contingencies authorizing service upon the attorney, so that the writ in this case did not, in fact, direct the sheriff to summon defendant by serving the same upon its attorney of record. Such being the case, the officer was not authorized to serve the writ upon the attorney, and such service was insufficient to give jurisdiction over the defendant in error, for which reason the motion to dismiss is well taken. See Rev. St. 1895, Art. 1398; Bradley's Procedure, p. 284; Thompson v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 679; McGuire v. Newbill, 54 Tex. 317; Scarborough v. Groesbeck (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 687; Oge v. Froboese (Tex. Civ. App.) 63 S. W. 654; National Cereal Co. v. Ernest (Tex. Civ. App.) 84 S. W. 1101; Aspley v. Olcott (Tex. Civ. App.) 90 S. W. 885.

We do not think, however, that we are justified in dismissing the petition in error, but simply hold that the attempted service was insufficient (Holloman v. Middleton, 23 Tex. 537), and dismiss and strike from the docket the writ of error, but without prejudice to plaintiff in errors' right to perfect service in accordance with law, if they should hereafter desire so to do; and it is so ordered.

Writ of error dismissed.

GOLDMAN et al. v. HADLEY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 334*)—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION—RIGHT OF PURCHASER—QUITCLAIM DEED.

In the absence of fraud, a vendor who sells land as vacant land between two surveys, when it is part of one of them and belongs to another, is not liable for the purchase price for failure of consideration; he having given merely a quitclaim deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 968; Dec. Dig. § 334.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—PATENTS—CONTROLLING CALLS.

The call in a patent of a survey for the south line of another survey as its north line controls a call for distance which will not make its north line reach the other survey.

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—SURVEYORS' MARKS ON GROUND.

A call in the patent of a survey for a fixed and undisputed line as a boundary cannot be controlled by the lines and corners marked on the ground by the original surveyor in making the survey; his field notes making no reference to such objects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 27; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—EVIDENCE—LOCATION OF MARKS.

Testimony of a witness that he found on the ground certain lines and corners made by the original surveyor when making a survey is objectionable; he not showing how he knew the marks he found were made by such surveyor.

4. FRAUD (§ 56*)—EVIDENCE—RELIANCE ON REPRESENTATIONS.

As a circumstance tending to throw light on the material question whether plaintiff in buying land of defendant was deceived by any false representation of defendant that it was vacant land, when it was included in a survey belonging to another person, evidence that the evening after plaintiff had paid for it he told defendant's agent in the transaction that he had just found out that there was no land there, and that he wanted his money back, is admissible.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by J. M. Hadley against A. Goldman and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Ford, Crawford & Ford and Moye Wicks, for appellants. E. P. & Otis K. Hamblen, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. This action was brought by Hadley, charging, in substance, that Goldman had by false representations induced him to buy a piece of land as vacant school scrap land in Harris county when the same was not vacant land at all, but a part of section 3, Houston & Texas Central Railroad Company, block 1.

The court charged the jury as follows: "There is no testimony sufficient to prove any fraudulent conduct on the part of the defendant Goldman, but the record evidence shows that there was not, and is not, any vacancy between the Lubbock survey and survey No. 3. You will, therefore, return your verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $759.70, with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from March 2, 1907, against defendant Goldman and the Planters' & Mechanics' National Bank, and return your verdict also against defendant Goldman alone for $100, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from March 2, 1907, and for cancellation of the deed from Goldman to Hadley." The verdict was in accordance with the instruction. We have considered the testimony, and in our opinion it was sufficient to have sustained a finding that the sale was induced by false representations of Goldman, and it was for the jury to pass upon the question. From the tenor of the court's charge it must have been upon the theory of failure or want of consideration that the court deemed Goldman liable. The deed given by Goldman to Hadley was a quitclaim. No liability existed by reason of any warranty, for there was none. The court found that the evidence established that there was no vacancy. This would be a total failure of consideration, but to make the vendor liable for the purchase price paid by reason of this fact would be to give a quitclaim deed the force and effect of a warranty deed.

The only real issues in this case were whether or not there was a vacancy embracing the land which was the subject-matter of the deed, and, if there was not, was the purchaser. Hadley, induced by false representations of Goldman to enter into and make the purchase. That there was evidence to support the latter issue we have already determined. The land in question was covered by the calls of the patent to survey No. 3, Houston & Texas Central Railway Company, the field notes of which made its north line identical with the south line of the Thos. Lubbock survey. The theory upon which the fact of vacancy is founded is that the distance called for in the patent to survey 3 falls to make its north line reach the Lubbock survey, and that the intervening space constitutes the vacancy for which Goldman had secured an award from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The land lay within the calls of the patent to survey 3, and prima facie it was patented land.

The court ruled out the testimony of surveyors offered by Goldman, who sought to show that the footsteps of the original surveyor had been traced by them, and found to be not as far north as the Lubbock south line. To the exclusion of this testimony there are bills of exceptions. The bill shows that Goldman expected to show by the witness Allen that he "located the survey 3 on the ground, and found that the north line of said section 3 as actually found and marked upon the ground was * * * south of the south line of the said T. S. Lubbock survey, leaving a vacant strip between the north line of said section 3 and the south line of the said T. S. Lubbock survey 351.1 varas wide and 2,984 varas in length, containing 185.3 varas of land; that in locating said section 3 he found that the calls as given in the field notes could not be made to fit on the ground, and that it was impossible to give effect to all the calls; that he found upon the ground the northwest and northeast corners of section 3 marked by the surveyor who originally laid out said section 3 at the time of said survey; that said northwest and northeast corners forming the north line of No. 3 were plainly marked on the ground by the surveyor who originally laid out the said survey at the time of making the said survey; that he found and followed said original marks and lines so made upon the original survey of said lands and located said section 3 in conformity therewith; that, as located upon the ground by him, said section No. 3 contains an excess of 25 acres, and that, if section 3 were permitted to extend as far north as the south line of the T. S. Lubbock survey, it would contain an excess of 210.3 acres; that he found and located upon the ground all of the corners of said section 3 placed upon the ground by the original surveyor of said section 3, and that all of them are there to-day, plain, visible, and marked upon the ground, and that he located said section 3 upon the ground exactly in conformity with said original marks and lines, and that said location of section 3 left a vacant strip between the north line of said section 3 and the south line of the said T. S. Lubbock survey 351.1 varas wide and 2,984 varas in length." The court ruled out this character of testimony for the reason that, as the patent of section 3 calls for the south line of the Lubbock, no evidence could be received tending to show that said section, when surveyed out and applied to the ground according to its field notes, fails to reach as far north as the south line of the Lubbock, and held as a matter of law that the north line of No. 3 coincides with the south line of the Lubbock, and that no vacancy existed between them. The above testimony of Allen was an effort to show that the footsteps of the original surveyor in making survey 3 were traceable on the ground by marks, marked lines, and corners of the surveyor, when no reference was made in his field notes to such objects. This has frequently been held not admissible. Brodent v. Carper (Tex. Civ. App.) 100 S. W. 185; Hamilton v. Blackburn (Tex. Civ. App.) 95 S. W. 1097. A survey is to be located by what appears upon the face of the grant (Blackwell v. Coleman Co., 94 Tex. 216, 59 S. W. 530), and here there was nothing in the description to control the call for the Lubbock south line (which was a fixed and undisputed line) except a call for distance. The patent had a clear and well-settled construction and meaning, and the land it designated was ascertainable without any ambiguity arising. Had the field notes called for a marked line and other objects, it would have been different. The testimony of Allen, even if such testimony had been competent, was properly rejected for another reason. It failed to show in any manner how he knew the marks he found were made by the original surveyor. It may have been from hearsay, or merely conclusions. Nothing was shown from which the jury could have found or inferred that the marked lines were those made upon the original survey.

As the sole question in this case upon this transcript is whether or not Hadley was deceived by false representations of Goldman into making the purchase, all testimony which was merely for the purpose of proving that there was or was not a vacancy only incumbered the record. That fact was established. For this reason, the map mentioned in the fourth assignment was irrelevant, and the judgment referred to in the sixth assignment of error was also irrelevant, likewise the reasons of the General Land Office for canceling Goldman's award. The fact that the Commissioner canceled the award to Goldman was shown by the testimony of Goldman himself and was an admitted fact. Therefore he was not prejudiced by the letter mentioned in the fifth assignment, in so far as the letter went to show the fact of cancellation. In so far as it went to show the Commissioner's reasons for the cancellation, it was irrelevant. Upon such an issue as fraud or deceit in inducing a purchaser to buy, the evidence necessarily must take a wide range. One fact essential for Hadley to establish would be that, when he consummated the purchase, he had the belief that the award was a valid one by reason of a vacancy; in other words, that Goldman, by the award, had title. If he did not have this belief, it was not possible for him to have been deceived. This leads us up to the third assignment of error, which complains of the admission of this testimony of Munger, plaintiff's witness: "Now, I will ask you whether or not, when you saw Mr. Hadley that evening after the check was given, Mr. Hadley said anything about the title to the land, and, if so, what he said? Answer. He said he had just found out that there was no land there at all, and he wanted his money back, and he wanted to know what I could do." This was objected to as evidence of a self-serving character. Hadley could testify to what the state of his mind was when he made the purchase. The above testimony was immaterial, if its purpose was to show whether or not a vacancy existed, as that was not really an issue. If its purpose was to show what was in Hadley's mind at the time of the purchase as to what he was getting, it was relevant. Munger was Goldman's agent in the transaction, and nothing was more natural than for Hadley to go to him with a complaint of this kind and to make known his reasons. It was a circumstance which tended to throw some light on a material question, and its weight was for the jury. We think there was no error in admitting the evidence.

Reversed and remanded.

ABBOTT GIN CO. v. MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS et al.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE TO CHARGE—ABSENCE OF REQUEST.

Where two grounds were alleged as a basis for plaintiff's recovery, the court's failure to charge on one of the grounds was not error, in the absence of a special request to charge thereon.

2. CARRIERS (§§ 108, 113*)—DESTRUCTION OF FREIGHT—LIABILITY.

Where goods are placed in a carrier's possession for immediate shipment and are destroyed before transportation begins, the carrier cannot escape liability except by showing that the

3. CARRIERS (§ 113*)—DELIVERY TO CARRIER—DESTRUCTION OF GOODS.

Where plaintiff's cotton seed was placed in certain houses located on a carrier's right of way, but not belonging to the carrier, for storage until cars could be obtained in which it could be shipped, and no bills of lading had been issued by defendant, or other act done showing an intention to accept the seed for transportation, the railroad company was not liable as a carrier for the destruction of the seed by fire communicated to the storage houses from fire originating on its cotton platform from sparks from defendant's engine.

Where plaintiff stored cotton seed in certain houses located on defendant's right of way to remain until cars could be procured for shipment, and it appeared that the storage house was near the track and adjacent to the railroad company's cotton platform, and was destroyed by fire communicated from sparks to the cotton platform and from the platform to the storage house, such facts were sufficient to raise the issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

Error from District Court, Hill County; W. C. Wear, Judge.

Action by the Abbott Gin Company against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Morrow & Smithdeal, for plaintiff in error. Coke, Miller & Coke, Ramsey & Odell, and Vaughan & Hart, for defendants in error.

RAINEY, C. J. This suit was instituted by plaintiff in error against defendants in error to recover the sum of $1,020, the value of 68 tons of cotton seed owned by plaintiff, and which stood on defendant's right of way, alleged to have been burned by negligently permitting sparks of fire to escape from defendant's engine. The defendant pleaded a general denial and contributory negligence of plaintiff in placing said cotton seed on defendant's right of way exposed to fire. A trial before a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant.

Plaintiff in error complains of the giving of a special charge requested by defendant in error, to wit: "You are instructed that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the fire which destroyed the property in controversy was caused from a spark or sparks emitted or discharged from an engine of the defendant railway company; and unless you believe from the preponderance of the evidence that it was so caused, or if you believe that said fire originated from any other cause, you will find for the defendant." The first contention is that "It being alleged in the petition that the cotton seed in question were delivered to the defendant company as a common carrier for immediate shipment, and there being evidence in the record supporting said allegation, it was error for the court to tell the jury in the special charge mentioned that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the fire which destroyed the property was caused by sparks emitted from the defendant's engine, because under the law, if the property was in possession of the defendant as a common carrier for immediate shipment, the destruction of the property would fix its liability." The petition of plaintiff contained two counts. The first was, in substance, that defendant had negligently permitted sparks to emit from its engine and set fire to and destroy the cotton seed, etc.; and the second, in effect, was that the cotton seed had been placed in defendant's warehouse situated on its right of way and tendered to defendant for immediate shipment, that application for cars had been made, and while awaiting the furnishing of cars and "while the seed were in the possession of defendant and in said warehouse upon the right of way, and after the same had been delivered to the said defendant for immediate shipment, the same were destroyed by fire." There being two grounds alleged as a basis for a recovery by plaintiff and a charge covers one ground, the failure to charge upon the other ground, in the absence of a special charge requesting the court to so charge, will not be reversible error. No such charge was asked. Currie v. Gunter, 77 Tex. 490, 14 S. W. 127.

But it is contended that the charge was affirmative error, in that the burden was placed upon plaintiff to show the burning was caused by the negligence of defendant, when the burden was on defendant, as the seed had been placed in its possession for immediate shipment, and the defendant could not escape liability except by showing "the loss was due to an act of God, a public enemy, or inherent defect or negligence on the part of the shipper." While this contention of plaintiff states a correct principle of law, we do not think the facts support the contention. As we view the facts, there was no such delivery of the seed to the defendant in error which would make it liable as a common carrier. The cotton seed were placed in a house situated on defendant's right of way. It had been erected by some concern for its own use, presumably with defendant's consent, in storing and shipping seed, but said concern had gone out of business, and the house was used for the same purpose. McDaniel, who owned a half interest in the Abbott Gln Company, and was its general manager, testified that he had frequently made demands of defendant's station agent for cars to make shipments, and the agent had remarked: "Why don't you fill up that house down there until we can get a little more time and have more cars?" This remark was made before he commenced putting seed in the house. He further testified that Mr. White, general counsel for the Abbott Gln Company, "was the one that instructed me to put those seed in that seedhouse. * * * When I got that instruction from him, I commenced putting those seed in there right away. Mr. White told me to fill up all the houses with the seed if I could not get cars. No bill of lading had ever been executed for the shipment of any of this seed." The house was used during the summer to store grain in by grain buyers. The grain was stored for shipment on the railway. "I could not say that I had made demand for cars for this particular amount of seed." Defendant introduced two written statements made by McDaniel in regard to this matter, in one of which he says he rented the seedhouse from the Swift Cotton Oil Company, and in the other that he was instructed to put the seed in there by G. L. White of Hillsboro. G. L. White testified: "I owned and controlled half of the Abbott Gln Company prior to and in October, 1906. In the management and control of the property, the output of it, I advised with Mr. McDaniel, and he acted through my advice in the management of it. I did have knowledge of the fact that cotton seed were put in the building which was destroyed down at Abbott. We had quite a lot of seed to move that year from Abbott, and could not get cars. * * * I talked to the M., K. & T. Railway Company authorities with reference to cars every day over the phone almost about it. Those conversations did relate to the seed that I had at Abbott for shipment. We had urged the agent here to place us cars at Abbott because our seed was needing to be moved, and our house was full, and I knew we didn't have cars, and I urged them every day to work and co-operate with us and get cars at Abbott." T. H. Shaw, the agent of the defendant company at Abbott at the time of the fire, after testifying that there was cotton for shipment on the cotton platform, testified as follows: "That cotton platform is there on the right of way. I think that right of way is 80 feet from the main line, each side, right through the town there, and 100 feet altogether. This seedhouse was on the right of way, too. I did not know that they were putting those seed in there, and I don't remember when the seed were put there. I knew there was seed there. I expect that Mr. McDaniel had talked to me about getting cars to ship those seed. I did not, that I remember, say anything to him about putting those seed in those houses. I would not be positive that I did not say something to him on the subject. So far as my recollection goes, I think it has always been rulable for them to store the seed in those houses to ship, or probably they wanted to hold them for a raise in price. I don't know. If they wanted to ship, that was the place to put them, because that was convenient to get them in the cars. They could either load them from them or from a wagon. If the car was not there at the time, there was no place right on the right of way to put them except in those houses. In the absence of the car, the only way to load them or have them there was to put them in the seedhouse or dump them in the car when the car came. Those houses had been used for that purpose ever since they had been there, but then they did not ever store them there but once to my recollection. They shipped them out. I remember Mr. McDaniel coming to me about cars several times about shipping cotton seed in 1906. During the fall of 1906, during his ginning season, he wanted to ship to the oil mill at Hillsboro, and often I got him cars as soon as he placed them. Sometimes we would get cars for him, and sometimes we could not. He could not load many cars. They could not load three or four cars every day, or could not load one car every day. Whenever he got a supply of seed, we got him cars. Sometimes we could furnish them and sometimes we could not, which is always the case."

Considering the evidence in its most favorable light for plaintiff, it fails to show that the defendant had received the cotton seed for immediate shipment. Take the remark testified to as having been made by the agent of defendant, which, when properly construed, means that plaintiff might store the seed in the house until cars could be furnished, and it shows there was no intention of then receiving the seed for shipment. That the agent was willing for the house to be occupied by the seed to await the procuring of cars when he had failed to get them for a long time, and did not know when he could get them, would be doing an injustice to hold that defendant had received them for immediate shipment, and that it was liable for loss. No bill of lading had been issued by defendant, nor any other act done by it showing an intention to then accept the seed. We understand the rule of law that the issuance of a bill of lading is not necessary where the property is placed in the possession of the railway company for immediate shipment, but this is not that kind of a case. Neither party under the facts contemplated an immediate shipment, but that the seed should await the procurement of cars. We are of the opinion that, under the circumstances of this case, there is no reversible error in the failure of the court to charge on the matters complained of.

The proposition that the special charge submitted an issue not raised by the evidence, "in that there was no evidence whatever that the fire was caused by anything other than the escape of sparks from defendant's engine," is not tenable. The natural conclusion is that, if the fire was not caused by the escape of sparks from defendant's engine, it was evident that it was from some other cause, and no harm could possibly have resulted to plaintiff by reason of such expression in the charge.

The second assignment of error is: "The court erred in giving to the jury special charge No. 3, requested by the defendant, because the evidence in the case did not raise the issue of contributory negligence, and because there was no testimony showing, or tending to show, that the property destroyed by the fire had been placed on the railway company's right of way without the consent of the defendant's agent at Abbott, and because there was no evidence showing, or tending to show, that at the time the cotton seed were placed in said building where they were stored there was any cotton on the platform, or other inflammable material on defendant company's right of way, or platform, in proximity thereto." The first contention is: "The special charge was error, in that there was no evidence that the property destroyed was placed there without the consent of the agent of the company." Defendant's station agent testified: "I know Mr. McDaniel there at Abbott. I did not tell Mr. McDaniel to place said seed in that house. I did not know that they were putting those seed in there, and don't remember when the seed were put in there. I did not, that I remember, say anything to him about putting those seed in those houses." The witness further testified that the company had nothing to do with the seedhouses, as it did not belong to it, and that they did not accept seed until after they got a car. He further testified: "I never use those seedhouses at all, and had nothing to do with them." It was shown that the seedhouse the seed were stored in was leased by the West Cotton Oil Mills at the time of this fire, and that said building was situated about six feet south of a cotton platform upon defendant's right of way used for the storage of cotton for shipment, and the defendant's house track, main line track, and passing track were west of said structure. The fire originated on the other platform, and was communicated to the seedhouse. The contention of plaintiff on this issue is not sustained. The second contention is that, "it appearing from the evidence that plaintiff desiring to ship cotton seed over the defendant's railroad, and the defendant, having no cars available in which to load them, permitted them to be placed in a seedhouse on its right of way, which was used for loading grain and seed into cars of the defendant company, no issue of negligence of the plaintiff is raised by the fact that on the same right of way the defendant had cotton on its platform for shipment." The house in which the seed were stored was on the right of way near the track and adjacent to the company's platform on which it had placed bales of cotton for shipment. The cotton first caught, and the fire was communicated to the cotton seed. The condition shown by the evidence raised the issue of contributory negligence, and there was no error in the court submitting it. Martin v. Railway, 87 Tex. 117, 26 S. W. 1052; Railway v. Crabb (Tex. Civ. App.), 80 S. W. 408.

We have considered the other assignments of error, all of which we conclude are not well taken.

Finding no reversible error, the judgment is affirmed.

GALVESTON, H. & S. A. RY. CO. v. HOUSTON ELECTRIC CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 20, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. STREET RAILROADS (§ 23*)—CONSTRUCTION IN HIGHWAYS—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 10, § 7, prohibiting laws granting the right to construct and operate a street railroad within any city or town upon any public highway without first acquiring the consent of the local authorities having control of the highways, is prohibitory and does not directly grant the right to construct railways along public highways, but by implication recognizes the right if the consent of the highway officers is obtained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. STREET RAILROADS (§ 25*)—"PUBLIC HIGHWAYS"—"LOCAL AUTHORITIES."

"Public highways," as used in the Constitution, requiring the consent of local authorities to the use of the public highways by street railroad companies, refers to some public thoroughfare different from a street in a city, town, or village, and not to streets in an unincorporated town, or village, as distinguished from the streets in an incorporated city, town, or village; and "local authorities" means those officers on whom the administration of the government of the particular political subdivision of the state, by virtue of their office, devolves in relation to the subject-matter of the provision.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3291-3306; vol. 8, p. 7678; vol. 5, p. 4205.]

3. STREET RAILROADS (§ 25*)—CONSTRUCTION ON HIGHWAYS—POWER TO AUTHORIZE.

The Legislature having conferred upon the commissioners' courts the power to establish, change, and discontinue public highways, and to exercise general superintendence over all highways in their counties, commissioners' courts are the "local authorities" within the Constitution, from whom permission to build a street railway along the public highways of counties must be obtained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

4. STREET RAILROADS (§ 41*)—RIGHT TO OCCUPY HIGHWAYS—OBJECTION BY THIRD PERSONS.

The commissioners' court having granted the right to a street railway company to use a road for the construction of its track upon petition of citizens owning the land in the vicinity and for whose use it was primarily constructed, the company could not be deprived of that right by objection of a steam railway company which had previously been permitted to cross the road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

5. STREET RAILROADS (§ 20*)—OPERATION BEYOND LIMITS OF CITY.

A street railway company incorporated under Rev. St. 1895, art. 642, subd. 21, authorizing the formation of corporations for the constructing, acquiring, maintaining, and operating of street railways and suburban belt lines of railways within and near cities and towns for the transportation of freight and passengers, could construct and operate a line of road beyond the limits of the city wherein it was chartered to operate, and into a city which was practically a suburb of the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 120*)—USE OF HIGHWAY—ADDITIONAL SERVITUDE—RIGHT TO CROSS STREAM ROAD.

No new servitude is imposed upon a public highway by constructing and operating a street railway therein whose cars are propelled by electricity for the transportation of passengers, and the right of such a city railway company to cross over the tracks of a steam railroad crossing such highway is subject to no conditions other than those to which the general public is subject in traveling over the highway.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 316; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

7. STREET RAILROADS (§ 2*)—CHARACTER OF BUSINESS.

That an electric railway carries mail, persons, and property would not render it a commercial, and not a street, railway.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6693-6696.]

8. STREET RAILROADS (§ 68*)—APPLICATION OF STATUTES—CROSSING OTHER TRACKS.

Gen. Laws 1901, p. 255, c. 89, authorizing the railroad commission to regulate railroads crossing each other's tracks, does not apply to street railways.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 146; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

9. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 10*)—DELEGATION OF POWER TO STREET RAILROADS.

Gen. Laws 1907, p. 23, c. 13, conferring the power of eminent domain on interurban electric railway companies, does not apply to street railways.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; W. P. Hamblen, Judge.

Action by the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company against the Houston Electric Company. From a restraining order entered in defendant's cross-action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lane, Wolters & Storey and A. L. Jackson, for appellant. Andrews, Ball & Streetman, for appellee.

FLY, J. Appellant sought to restrain appellee from building a line of suburban street railway across its line of steam or commercial railway about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the city of Houston, at a point where said commercial railway crosses the public road leading from said city to Harrisburg. A temporary writ of injunction was issued, and appellee answered, setting up the facts, and by way of a cross-action prayed that appellant be restrained from interfering with it in building the desired crossing. On a final hearing the temporary order was set aside, the application of appellant was denied, and an order was made restraining appellant from interference with appellee in building the crossing, and a suitable person was appointed to supervise and superintend the installation of a standard grade crossing, which appellee was authorized to build. From that order of the court, this appeal has been perfected.

Upon the petition of numerous citizens of Harris county living in the vicinity of the public road leading from Houston to Harrisburg, permission was granted by the commissioners' court to appellee to build an electric street railway along the public road which was crossed by appellant's line of railway. Appellee sought to build its line along the said public road and across the line of appellant's commercial railroad, as empowered by the commissioners' court, the crossing known as the "Standard crossing" to be a perfectly safe and convenient one, and under its rules, to which it was commanded to adhere by the decree of the court, would be attended with no danger to passengers or operatives on either line of railway. Railroads around Houston are crossed at numerous places by street railways by grade crossings, and no interlocking devices are required, and no inconvenience or danger results therefrom. It appeared that neither a non-grade crossing nor an interlocking device was required at the point in question, and at a similar point appellant had recently consented to a grade crossing over its line, near Houston, by an electric railway company, and the same had been continuously operated without accident or injury to any one. The building of the line of electric railway is a public convenience and necessity. The franchise was granted for 28 years and restricted the use of the road to the carriage of "passengers, mail, express matter, parcels, packages and passengers' baggage only," and the motive power was confined to electricity, "or gasoline in cases of emergency." The following proposition is made under the first assignment of error: "The commissioners' court of Harris county had no power, under the Constitution or the laws of Texas, to authorize the possession, appropriation, or use of a public road for any purpose except a public use, according to the usual methods of travel, and any order attempting to confer upon a private corporation the right to make an unusual or extraordinary appropriation or use of such public road is void."

In section 7, art. 10, of the state Constitution, it is provided: "No law shall be passed by the Legislature granting the right to construct and operate a street railroad within any city, town or village, or upon any public highway, without first acquiring the consent of the local authorities having control of the street or highway proposed to be occupied by such street railroad." The section is merely prohibitory and does not directly grant any authority for the erection of railways along streets or public highways, but by implication recognizes the right to build along such thoroughfares, if the consent of those to whom the supervision and control of the streets and public highways are confided is obtained. So it has been specially decided in the case of Mayor v. Street Railway Co., 83 Tex. 548, 19 S. W. 127, 29 Am. St. Rep. 679, in regard to the streets of a city, and, if the public roads of a county are comprised within the term "public highways," the authority to build street railroads upon such public roads is recognized to rest in the "local authorities." The words "public highways" are clearly used to describe some public thoroughfare different from a street in a city, town, or village, and cannot be construed to mean streets; nor can they be held, with any degree of reason or force, to apply to streets in an unincorporated town or village as contradistinguished from the streets in an incorporated city, town, or village. If the desire had been to confine the power to grant authority to erect and operate street railways to the streets of cities, towns, or villages, the words "public highways," being superfluous and confusing, would never have been used. It is stated by Nelms, in his work on Street Surface Railroads (page 71), that in nearly every state of the Union a like provision is found either in the Constitution or some statutory provision, and in some of them is recognized the right of county boards, commissioners, or supervisors, corresponding to the commissioners' court in Texas, to grant the authority for street railways to be erected along public roads or highways. Matter of Rochester Electric Railway Co., 123 N. Y. 351, 25 N. E. 381; State v. Board, 56 N. J. Law, 416, 28 Atl. 553. We have seen no decision denying such authority.

The term "local authorities," used in the Constitution, is defined in the New York cited case as "those officers on whom the administration of the government of the particular political subdivision of the state, by virtue of their office, devolves, in relation to the subject-matter of the legislative provision." In Texas the commissioners' court is created by the Constitution, and it is given "such powers and jurisdiction over all county business, as is conferred by this Constitution and the laws of this state, or as may be hereafter prescribed." Under that authority the Legislature has conferred upon commissioners' courts the power "to lay out and establish, change, and discontinue public roads and highways," and "to exercise general control and superintendence over all roads, highways, ferries and bridges in their counties." Commissioners' courts are therefore the "local authorities," within the purview of the Constitution, from whom permission to build a street railway along the public highways of a county must be obtained. Control of streets and public highways of a county has been given by law to the local authorities of cities and counties, and the Constitution delegates to them alone the authority to permit street railways to construct their lines upon such streets and highways. Having been granted, by the only authority that could grant it, the privilege of using the road for the construction of its track, appellee could not be deprived of that right because appellant has been permitted to cross the public road and objects to any other railway company using such road, although the citizens owning the land in the vicinity of the road and for whose use it was primarily constructed have petitioned the county authorities to grant the privilege to the street railway of occupying the public highway. However unusual it may be to use "a rural public highway for the permanent location and maintenance of a street car roadbed and track," as stated by appellant, the Constitution and statutes authorize it, the citizens interested in the public road demand it, the commissioners' court has permitted it, and appellant has no right to complain.

Appellee was incorporated under the provisions of Rev. St. 1895, art. 642, subd. 21, which authorizes the formation of corporations "for the constructing, acquiring and maintaining and operating street railways and suburban belt lines of railways within and near cities and towns, for the transportation of freight or passengers." Appellee's desired line of railway is within and near the "city of Houston," and we think that the construction of the railway is fully authorized by its charter. The terms of the statute fully contemplate the construction and operation of street railways beyond the limits of cities and clearly authorize such construction and operation. Harrisburg is but a short distance from the city of Houston, and the testimony tended to show that it is practically a suburb of that city.

Appellant has no right in the public roads of Harris county except those granted it by the proper authorities, and it cannot assume the function of protecting the public from encroachments upon the highways by other corporations, and cannot assume the authority of the state in inquiring into the legality of appellee's acts under its charter. The evidence clearly indicates that it will not be injured by a crossing, to which its resident engineer gave the stamp of his approval, and which is necessary for the accommodation and comfort of a number of the citizens of Harris county. Its rights have been fully protected by the decree of the court. Appellee is not seeking to take possession of anything belonging to appellant, but is merely trying to do what any vehicle of any kind, authorized on a public road, has the right to do—get across a railroad built over a public highway.

No additional burden will devolve upon appellant by the crossing constructed by appellee, and it has acquired no right by being authorized to cross the public road as would empower it to stop the wheels of progress and thwart the efforts of the public to obtain cheaper and faster transportation. It has been held time and again in this state and others that no new burden or servitude is imposed upon a public street or highway by constructing and operating a street railway thereon whose cars are propelled by electricity for the transportation of passengers. Aycock v. Association, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 341, 63 S. W. 953; Rische v. Transportation Co., 27 Tex. Civ. App. 33, 66 S. W. 324; Railway v. Street Railway, 64 Tex. 80, 53 Am. Rep. 739; Railway v. Limburger, 88 Tex. 79, 30 S. W. 533, 53 Am. St. Rep. 730; Railway v. Traction Co., 111 Ga. 679, 36 S. E. 873, 51 L. R. A. 125; Railway v. Railway, 139 Ind. 297, 38 N. E. 604, 26 L. R. A. 337, 47 Am. St. Rep. 264; Kinsey v. Traction Co., 169 Ind. 563, 81 N. E. 922; Railway v. Railway, 169 Ind. 339, 82 N. E. 765, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916; Railway v. Electric Railway, 42 Ind. App. 66, 83 N. E. 650. In several of the cases cited it was held that the right of way acquired by a steam railroad across a public highway is subject to the operation of a street railway, that it imposes no additional burden, and that it can cross the steam railroad tracks without compensation to the company. Quotations from some of the authorities will indicate the reasons for such decisions.

In the case of Railway v. Railway, 139 Ind. 297, 38 N. E. 604, 26 L. R. A. 337, 47 Am. St. Rep. 264, it is said: "So long therefore as it is the settled law of this state that a street railway is not an additional burden to that of the easement the general public has in the street, and that the street railway company's right to use the street is founded on that easement, that long it must be held that the right of such street railway to cross over the tracks of a steam railway laid on such street is subject to no conditions other than those to which the general public is subject in traveling over such streets. When the steam railway company obtains its right of way over and along a public street, it does so subject to the right of the general public to use that street, and the street crossings over its tracks; and it is generally incumbent on such steam railway companies to make such crossings as passable for the general public as they were before the construction of the tracks thereon. * * * In short, the appellant's rights obtained in the use of the streets for its steam railway were subject to the burden of the appellee's use thereof, in the ordinary and proper manner, for its street railway."

In the case of Railway v. Railway, 169 Ind. 339, 82 N. E. 765, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916, the court held: "Assuming that the railroad was constructed across the highway, its owners thereby acquired merely the privilege of crossing in the transportation of freight and passengers, subject to all proper uses to which the highway might be devoted under the law. The owners of the railroad were bound to know that a street or interurban railroad might thereafter be lawfully located upon such highway and across the track at that point. The board of commissioners, in whom the authority was lodged, determined that the location and construction of the interurban road upon the highway would subserve the convenience of the traveling public. When appellants obtained the privilege of crossing the highway, they did it with the knowledge and upon the condition that they must submit to such growing inconveniences as might result from the development of the country, among which would be the wants and demands of the public for better facilities in traveling. Appellants complain that their track will be cut and their private rights invaded. Such interference must have been contemplated when their road was located across a public highway. * * * Our conclusion therefore is that the owners of a steam railroad are not entitled to recover compensation for the crossing of its track, at a public highway intersection, by an electric interurban road built upon such highway with the consent of the board of commissioners of the county; nor can such crossing be enjoined until compensation therefor shall have been assessed and paid or tendered." A long list of authorities were cited to sustain the decision.

The case of Michigan Central Railroad v. Electric Railway, 42 Ind. App. 66, 83 N. E. 650, not only holds as do the cases quoted from, but, in addition, defines a "street railroad" and holds an electric railway carrying mail, persons, and property was a street railway, and not what is known as a "commercial" one, and therefore its occupancy of a street or road was not an additional servitude. The same contention is made in this case; but it is not shown that appellee's charter authorizes it to carry freight, and its character cannot be fixed by the order of the commissioners' court giving it permission to build along the Harrisburg road. Its character is fixed by the charter which it obtained from the state of Texas, and not by orders made by the commissioners' court. It was not shown that it had ever carried freight, and, should it attempt to do so in violation of the terms of its charter, the state will be fully able to care for the matter.

The act of 1901 (Gen. Laws 1901, pp. 255, 256, c. 89) has no reference to street railways, and neither does the act of the Thirtieth Legislature (Gen. Laws 1907, p. 23, c. 15) appertain to street railways. Appellee obtained its charter under a different statute, and claims the right to cross the railroad of appellant in a public road just as a dray or wagon would claim the right to cross. Having obtained permission of the "local authorities," it claims the right of any other vehicle using the public road.

The judgment is affirmed.

GALLUP et al. v. LIBERTY COUNTY.†
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 20, 1909. On Motion for Rehearing, Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 173*)—LANDS OF STATE—SCHOOL LANDS—SALE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—STATUTES.

Const. art. 7, § 6, as it existed in 1881, provided that lands granted to counties for school purposes might be sold by the counties as provided by the commissioners' court; the proceeds to be held for the benefit of the public schools. Const. 1876, art. 5, § 18, declared that the county commissioners' court should exercise such powers and jurisdiction over all county business as was conferred by the Constitution or laws of the state, and Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1550, 4271, made it the duty of the commissioners' court to provide for the disposition of all county school lands in the manner provided by the commissioners' court. Held that, while such provisions authorized a disposition of such lands, they could only be sold "in the manner" provided by the commissioners' court, which had no power to delegate to the county judge the power to make such sales as agent for the county, and sales so attempted to be made by him were invalid.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 163*)—"RATIFICATION."

"Ratification" is the election by a person, and the expression of such election in words or conduct, to accept an act or contract previously done or entered into in his behalf by another who had at the time no authority to do the act or make the contract on his behalf. If the acts have been performed or contracts made without his authority on his behalf, he has, when he obtains knowledge thereof, an election either to accept or repudiate them. If he accepts them, his acceptance is a "ratification" of the previously unauthorized acts or conduct and makes them as binding on him from the time they are performed as if originally authorized.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 248*)—UN-AUTHORIZED ACTS OF OFFICERS—RATIFICATION.

The principle of ratification applies to a municipal corporation as well as to an individual as to contracts which have been unauthorizedly entered into on its behalf, if the corporation could have originally authorized such acts or contracts, especially where the illegality consists of some irregularity or informality in the manner or time of its execution, so that it is incapable of enforcement; but, if there is no legal authority to contract, such authority cannot be created by estoppel, acquiescence, or ratification.

On Motion for Rehearing.

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 173*)—LANDS OF STATE—SCHOOL LANDS—INVALID SALE—RATIFICATION.

Where a county had full power to sell certain school lands, but the sale was invalid because made by the county judge under an ultra vires delegation of authority by the commissioners' court, the county, having received the purchase money and used it for county purposes, thereby ratified the sale and was not entitled to recover the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 544-551; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

5. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 173*)—LANDS OF STATE—SCHOOL LANDS—SALE—DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS.

Where a county having full power to sell school lands without authority directed sales to be made by the county judge, and thereafter ratified the same, such sales were not invalidated as against the county because the judge was allowed a commission of 5 per cent. of the proceeds, which was diverted from the school fund for which the county held the lands in trust; the beneficiaries of the school fund being entitled to recover such commission from the county as an obligation payable out of its general fund.

Appeal from District Court, Polk County; L. B. Hightower, Judge.

Suit by Liberty County against David L. Gallup and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and rendered.

Coke, Miller & Coke and Terry, Cavin & Mills, for appellants. Branch T. Masterson and Stevens & Pickett, for appellee.

NEILL, J. "This suit was brought by the county of Liberty, appellee herein, against David L. Gallup and East Texas Oil Company, appellants herein, and C. M. Votaw, C. W. Nugent, Oscar E. Oates, A. G. Hodges, A. W. Hodges, J. K. Humble, J. W. Humble, and E. D. Saunders, to recover the title to 10 certain tracts of land, aggregating about 16,000 acres, situated in the counties of Polk, Hardin, and Tyler. The suit was in the ordinary form of an action in trespass to try title. Of the defendants, David L. Gallup was a resident and citizen of the state of New York, the East Texas Oil Company was a resident and citizen of the state of New Jersey, and all of the other defendants were residents of the state of Texas. The defendants David L. Gallup and East Texas Oil Company, who are appellants in this court, filed petition and bond for removal of the cause to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Texas, upon the filing of which the plaintiff dismissed its suit as to all of the defendants except David L. Gallup, a citizen of New York, the East Texas Oil Company, a citizen of New Jersey, and J. W. and J. K. Humble, citizens of Polk county, Tex. The petition of these appellants for the removal of the cause to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Texas was granted; but the cause was remanded to the district court of Polk county from the Circuit Court of the United States, and was tried in the district court of Polk county. Judgment was rendered against the defendant J. W. Humble by default, and judgment nil dicit was rendered against the defendant J. K. Humble, and upon trial had judgment was rendered for the land in controversy against the defendants Gallup and East Texas Oil Company, appellants here. These appellants answered in the court below by general demurrer, plea of not guilty, and also filed a cross-action against the plaintiff, seeking to recover the title and possession of the same land sued for by the plaintiff, upon which cross-action judgment was also rendered against these appellants. The trial court duly filed, at the request of appellants, his findings of fact and conclusions of law, which were excepted to by these appellants, who filed also a motion to correct and supplement said findings of fact and conclusions of law, which motion was overruled. The case has been properly brought to this court by appeal of these appellants, David L. Gallup and East Texas Oil Company." This statement of the nature and result of the suit, taken from appellant's brief, is accepted by the appellee, with this emendation: "Final judgment in favor of the county of Liberty was against defendants David L. Gallup, East Texas Oil Company, J. K. Humble, and J. W. Humble, for the land in controversy"—and is adopted by us.

The findings of fact and of law by the trial judge are as follows:

"Findings of Fact.

"(1) I find that the 10 tracts of land in controversy, as described in plaintiff's first amended original petition, were patented during the year 1858 by the state of Texas to the school commissioners of Liberty county in due form of law.

"(2) I find that on July 1, 1881, the commissioners' court of Liberty county made and entered on the minutes thereof the following order: 'Whereas, it is the judgment of the court that it is for the interest of Liberty county that all of the county school lands situated in the counties of Polk, Tyler, and Hardin be placed on the market for sale, and the proceeds thereof invested as provided by law: It is therefore ordered by the court that W. W. Perryman be and he is hereby appointed agent of the county of Liberty with full power to sell all of said school lands, either at private or public sale, in his judgment he may deem best for the interest of the county, and to make good and sufficient title to the purchaser or purchasers of said lands; provided that said lands, nor any part thereof, shall not be sold for a less price than $1.50 per acre. It is further ordered that any sale made by said Perryman shall in no wise affect actual settlers of any rights acquired by them under the laws of this state; and the price of land to such actual settlers is fixed at $2.00 per acre.' And also that said court on the same date made and entered on its minutes another order, as follows: 'It is ordered by the court that W. W. Perryman be and he is allowed 5 per cent. commission on all sales made by him of the Liberty county school lands.'

"(3) I find that W. W. Perryman, purporting to act as agent for the county of Liberty, under the above orders, on August 17, 1881, executed a deed to Walter H. Allen, conveying the said 10 tracts of land, patented as above found, aggregating 15,905½ acres, for a cash consideration of $26,164.54.

"(4) I find that the above-mentioned consideration of $26,164.54 was paid to W. W. Perryman by the grantee in said deed executed by said Perryman, and that 5 per cent. of said consideration (the same being the sum of $1,308.22) was retained by said Perryman for himself, and that he kept and held said amount in his own right and applied same to his own use and benefit.

"(5) I find that on November 14, 1881, the commissioners' court of Liberty county made and entered on its minutes the following order: 'Whereas, it appears from the report of the county judge that he has in his hands the sum of $24,843.32 from the sale of school lands: It is ordered by the court that the county judge deposit one-third of said amount with T. W. House, of Houston, one-third with City Bank of Houston, and one-third with the First National Bank of Houston, to the credit of the school fund of Liberty county.'

"(6) I find that the county judge of Liberty county deposited the said sum of $24,843.32 in the three Houston banks mentioned above, and that thereafter, to wit, on June 29, 1882, the commissioners' court of Liberty county, by order entered on its minutes, directed that said sum of money be transferred from said banks at Houston and deposited with Ball, Hutchings & Co., bankers of Galveston, Tex., and further directed that said Ball, Hutchings & Co. invest said money in bonds of the state of Texas.

"(7) I find that in pursuance of said order of the commissioners' court last above mentioned said Ball, Hutchings & Co. did invest said sum of money in bonds as directed, holding said bonds on deposit, and paid the interest collected thereon to the county treasurer of Liberty county, Tex., and the same was by him placed to the credit of the available school fund of Liberty county.

"(8) I find that W. W. Perryman, who executed the deed to Walter H. Allen dated August 17, 1881, as above mentioned, was county judge of Liberty county during all of the years 1881 and 1882, and that he died prior to the institution of this suit.

"(9) I find that during the year 1885, 'in accordance with orders of the commissioners' court of Liberty county, said Ball, Hutchings & Co. sold a portion of said bonds which were on deposit with them, and the proceeds of such sale were invested in Liberty county jail bonds; the amount so invested being, at first, $6,500, and later an additional sum of $3,500. And I further find that these bonds in the sum of $10,000 were placed on deposit with Ball, Hutchings & Co. of Galveston for safe-keeping. And I further find that interest on these bonds was paid to the county treasurer of Liberty county for a number of years thereafter, and the sums so paid were placed to the credit of the available school fund; but the evidence does not disclose exactly the amount so paid nor accurately the number of years such interest was paid.

"(10) I find that on September 5, 1890, the commissioners' court of Liberty county made and entered on its minutes the following order: 'It is ordered by the court that the $12,100 of state of Texas 5 per cent. bonds belonging to the permanent school fund of Liberty county, and now in the hands of the treasurer of Liberty county, be sold by M. D. Rayburn, county judge of Liberty county, and delivered by him to the purchaser thereof. The proceeds to be paid over by him to the county treasurer of Liberty county to be hereafter invested as this court may decide.' And I further find that on the same date said court made and entered on its minutes this order, to wit: 'It is ordered that the proceeds of the sale of $12,100 and the $500 Refugio county bonds belonging to the school fund of Liberty county be invested in the 5½ per cent. interest-bearing script of Liberty county, and the money used in paying the back indebtedness of Liberty county. Also that 5½ per cent. interest-bearing script be issued in the sum of $6,500.00 to the permanent school fund of Liberty county in lieu of $1,500 illegally spent by the county by mistake and $5,000 of jail bonds which were void for want of proper authority in their issuance, in July and December, 1885.'

"(11) I find that W. W. Perryman, who executed the deed to Walter H. Allen on August 17, 1881, for the lands in controversy (as found in paragraph 1 of these findings), made no written report of that sale to the commissioners' court of Liberty county, and that said sale was never expressly approved or ratified by said court.

"(12) I find that the defendants David L. Gallup and the East Texas Oil Company claim title by mesne conveyance to the land in controversy through and under the deed from W. W. Perryman to Walter H. Allen dated August 17, 1881, referred to in the first paragraph of these findings of fact, and that said defendants now have and hold only such title as became vested in said Allen by virtue of said deed. And I further find that the defendant David L. Gallup paid in cash to Augustus F. Kountze a valuable consideration for the land in controversy when he bought same from said Kountze.

"(13) I find that 40,000,000 feet of timber have been cut from those tracts of land in controversy located in the counties of Polk and Tyler, under contract with parties claiming title to said lands under and by virtue of said deed above mentioned from W. W. Perryman to Walter H. Allen dated August 17, 1881, and that said parties were paid for said timber the sum of $1.25 per thousand feet. And I further find that the present market value of said timber would be $2 per thousand feet.

"Conclusions of Law.

"I conclude that the commissioners' court of Liberty county had no power to delegate to W. W. Perryman the authority to sell the lands in controversy as said court attempted to do in its order made and entered on July 1, 1881, as set out in above findings of fact, and therefore said order was and is null and void.

"(2) I conclude that the deed executed by W. W. Perryman to Walter H. Allen on August 17, 1881, conveying the lands in controversy, as set out in above findings of fact, is null and void, and that no title whatever passed thereby; the said Perryman being wholly without authority to execute the same. And I further conclude that neither the commissioners' court of Liberty county nor any act of said county has ever expressly ratified or confirmed said void sale.

"(3) I conclude that the title to the lands in controversy is vested in fee simple in the county of Liberty for the public schools of said county in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the state of Texas, and that therefore judgment should be rendered for said county of Liberty, plaintiff in this cause."

Opinion.

The first, second, and third assignments of error are directed against the first and second conclusions of law of the trial court. Every one of them is advanced as a proposition in itself. Under the three assignments this additional proposition is advanced: 'The order of the commissioners' court of July 1, 1881, was within the power of said court, and in all respects valid, and the sale and conveyance made thereunder by W. W. Perryman to Walter H. Allen was valid and effectual to convey, and did convey, to said Allen the land in controversy.'

Section 6, art. 7, of the Constitution as it stood in 1881, so far as material to the question involved, is as follows: "All lands heretofore or hereafter granted to the several counties of this state for education or schools are of right the property of said counties respectively to which they were granted and title thereto is vested in said counties. * * * Each county may sell or dispose of its land, in whole or in part, in manner to be provided by the commissioners' court of the county —. Said lands and the proceeds thereof, when sold, shall be held by said counties alone as a trust for the benefit of the public schools therein; said proceeds to be invested in bonds of the state of Texas or of the United States and only the interest thereon to be used and expended annually." Section 18, art. 5, of the Constitution of 1876, provides that "The county commissioners, * * * with the county judge as presiding officer, shall compose the county commissioners' court, which shall exercise such powers and jurisdiction over all county business as is conferred by the Constitution or the laws of the state or as may thereafter be prescribed." After the adoption of the Constitution of 1876, and prior to 1881, the Legislature enacted the following provisions, which appear in the present revised statutes as articles 1550 and 4271, and, so far as material, are as follows: Article 1550: "It shall be the duty of the commissioners' court to provide for the protection, preservation and disposition of all lands heretofore granted, or that may hereafter be granted to the county for education or schools." Article 4271: "Each county may sell or dispose of the lands granted to it for educational purposes in such manner as may be provided by the commissioners' court of such county; and the proceeds of any such sale shall be invested in bonds of the state of Texas, or of the United States, and held by such county alone as a trust for the benefit of public free schools therein, only the interest thereon to be used and expended annually."

It is clearly seen from these constitutional provisions: That the land in controversy, it having been granted by the state to Liberty county for educational purposes, was the property of such county in whom the title vested; that the county was authorized to sell or dispose of the land, in whole or in part, in the manner to be provided by its commissioners' court; that the proceeds of sale should be invested in certain securities and held by the county alone as a trust for the benefit of public free schools therein; that only the interest thereon should be used and expended annually. In other words, Liberty county was of right the owner of the land, and empowered to sell the same in the manner provided by its commissioners' court. The manner of sale was not prescribed by law; but it was left to be provided by the county commissioners' court. In this case the county commissioners' court of Liberty county did provide, or attempted to provide, for the sale of the land in controversy, as is shown by the order of said court copied in the trial court's second conclusion of fact. Was this order, under the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court, sufficient, in the manner it provided for the sale being made, to empower the county to sell its land? The order is predicated upon the express judgment of the commissioners' court that it was, when made, for the interest of Liberty county that its school lands described therein be placed upon the market for sale and the proceeds thereof invested as provided by law. It appointed W. W. Perryman agent of the county, with full power to sell the land, either at private or public sale, as in his judgment he might deem best for the interest of the county, and to make good and sufficient title to the purchasers, and provided that the lands, nor any part thereof, should be sold for a less price than $1.50 per acre.

In the case of Logan v. Stephens County, 98 Tex. 283, 83 S. W. 365, a case very similar to this, it is said by the Supreme Court: "The Constitution, as before quoted, gives to the commissioners' court of each county ample powers to sell the school lands of the county; but it in terms declares that the counties hold 'the said land and proceeds thereof, when sold, * * * alone as a trust for the benefit of the public schools therein.' The county was in the attitude of trustee for the benefit of the public school fund in the handling and management of the land, and we must construe the power given to the commissioners' court in accordance with the rules which govern trustees in the discharge of their duties. * * * With reference to the constitutional provision now under consideration, the act of selling is necessarily the direct act of the county through its commissioners' court, which is empowered to transact all its business"—and that a sale by an agent would not be a sale by the county. Under the decision quoted from, the provision in section 6, art. 7, of the Constitution, "that such county may sell or dispose of its lands * * * in manner to be provided by the commissioners' court of the county," must be read and construed in connection with that part of section 18, art. 5, which provides that such "court shall exercise such powers and jurisdiction over all county business as is conferred by the Constitution and laws of the state," and, when so read, must be construed to mean that the sale of school lands, being the business of the county to which they belong, can only be made by the county through its commissioners' court as its agent. That the sale under which the appellants claim the land was by Perryman as its agent, and not by the county of Liberty, is apparent from the order of his appointment, as well as from the deed made in its pursuance. By the order he is given full power to sell the land. To hold such order valid would be to say that the county commissioners' court could divest itself of a power given it alone by the Constitution and delegate it to another, contrary to the principle, "Delegatus non potest delegare." The case in hand, as well as the one we have quoted from, is distinguishable from Mata-gorda County v. Casey (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 477, in that the terms of sale in that case were fixed, and an agent was only appointed to make the sales on the specific terms prescribed by the commissioners' court. No power or discretion delegated by the Constitution and laws of the state to that court was divested by its order appointing Donald & Cobb its agents nor lodged in them; but such power and discretion had been fully exercised and discharged by the court, and they were only empowered to carry into effect sales, the terms of which had been definitely fixed by the court itself. Their authority was purely ministerial; nothing being left to their judgment or discretion.

We therefore think the question stated, involved in the assignments, should receive a negative answer.

The fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh assignments of error, presented as original propositions, are as follows: "(4) The court erred in its third conclusion of law, which is as follows: 'I conclude that the title to the lands in controversy is vested in fee simple in the county of Liberty for the public schools of said county, in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the state of Texas, and therefore judgment should be rendered for said county of Liberty, plaintiff in this cause'—for that the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that the title to the lands in controversy in this case is vested in said David L. Gallup and East Texas Oil Company, because the sale made by W. W. Perryman, acting for and on behalf of the commissioners' court of Liberty county, Tex., to Walter H. Allen, has been ratified and confirmed by the plaintiff in this case and by the county commissioners' court of Liberty county, Tex., and said plaintiff has continuously retained and used the proceeds and benefits of said sale for a period of 26 years before the filing of this suit, and has thereby ratified and confirmed the same, and is estopped to deny the validity thereof. (5) The court erred in rendering judgment herein in favor of the plaintiff for the land in controversy herein against these defendants, and in failing and refusing to render judgment for said land in favor of these defendants against said plaintiff, for that the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence herein shows that these defendants held under Walter H. Allen, to whom the land in controversy was conveyed on August 17, 1881, by W. W. Perryman, acting for the plaintiff herein, and that the said plaintiff, with full knowledge of all of the facts connected with said conveyance and sale, and the said commissioners' court of Liberty county, with full knowledge of all of the facts with said sale, accepted the benefits arising from said sale, and has continuously used and enjoyed the said benefits and proceeds of said sale for a period of 26 years before the filing of this suit, and has never tendered a return thereof to said Allen or his assigns, and the plaintiff is estopped from questioning and attacking the validity of said sale made to said Allen. (6) The court erred in rendering judgment in this cause for the land in controversy in favor of the plaintiff against these defendants, and in failing and refusing to render judgment in favor of these defendants against said plaintiff for said land, for that the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence shows that these defendants hold the title to said land under and through Walter H. Allen, to whom said lands were conveyed by W. W. Perryman, acting for the plaintiff herein, in 1881, and that since said time the county of Liberty, plaintiff herein, and the commissioners' court thereof, has continuously retained and used the consideration paid by said Allen, and have never tendered a return of said consideration to said Allen or his assigns, and that, by receiving and using the benefits of said sale, the said plaintiff herein has ratified and confirmed the said sale. (7) The court erred in rendering judgment herein in favor of the plaintiff for the land in controversy against these defendants, and in failing and refusing to render judgment for said land in favor of these defendants against said plaintiff, for that the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence shows that these defendants hold under Walter H. Allen, to whom the land in controversy was conveyed on August 17, 1881, by W. W. Perryman, acting for the plaintiff herein, and that the said plaintiff accepted the benefits arising from said sale, and has continuously used and enjoyed the said benefits for a period of 26 years before the filing of this suit, and has never tendered a return thereof to said Allen or his assigns, and that said plaintiff is estopped from questioning and denying the validity of the said sale made to said Allen."

And under the assignments are asserted these additional propositions: "(1) If the order of the commissioners' court of July 1, 1881, was not within the power of the court and in all respects valid, the sale and conveyance made thereunder by Perryman, acting for and on behalf of Liberty county, to Allen, has been ratified and confirmed by said county and the commissioners' court thereof, and is in all respects valid and binding on said county. (2) The county commissioners' court of Liberty county was vested with authority to make a sale of the land in question, being a portion of the school lands donated to said county by the state of Texas. If it be admitted that the order entered by said court, directing W. W. Perryman to sell the lands, was beyond the authority of the commissioners' court, yet, as the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that Perryman, who purported to act as the agent of Liberty county, reported said sale to the commissioners' court, and that the commissioners' court of Liberty county, well knowing all of the facts connected with said sale, received the proceeds and benefits arising therefrom, and retained and used said proceeds and benefits, well knowing all the facts, for a period of 26 years before the filing of this suit, and has never tendered them to the purchaser from Perryman or his assigns, the county of Liberty has thereby ratified and confirmed the sale so made to Perryman, and, as appellants held the title of the purchasers from Perryman, the county of Liberty cannot now disaffirm said sale and recover the land involved therein, and it was error for the court below to render judgment in favor of the county. (3) Accepting and retaining the benefits arising from a conveyance by which one was not bound, or which was voidable as to him, with knowledge of the facts, is a ratification of such conveyance. This applies as well to municipal corporations and trustees as to any other class of persons. (4) The county commissioners' court of Liberty county and Liberty county itself, having full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances connected with the sale made to Allen by Perryman purporting to act as the agent for Liberty county and its commissioners' court, and having received the benefits arising from said sale, and retained and used said benefits for over 26 years after said sale was made, and having taken no steps during that time to disaffirm said sale, and having given no indication of any intention to so disaffirm said sale, and having allowed innocent parties, such as appellants herein, to purchase the title which passed from Allen, for valuable consideration, are estopped to deny the validity of said sale, and are estopped from claiming the title to the lands in question against appellants, and the court therefore erred in rendering judgment in favor of the county of Liberty and against appellants."

The principle is axiomatic that where one person executes a deed, purporting to be the act of another, without authority to do so, and the person for whom such act purports to have been done is fully apprised of all the facts connected therewith, and knowingly receives and uses the benefits derived from such sale, he thereby ratifies it and is estopped from asserting that the person purporting to act as his agent was without authority to make it. As is said: "Ratification is the election by a person, and the expression of such election by words or conduct, to accept an act or contract previously done or entered into in his behalf by another who had at the time no authority to do the act or make the contract on his behalf. If certain acts have been performed or contracts made on behalf of another without his authority, he has, when he obtains knowledge thereof, an election either to accept or repudiate such acts or contracts. If he accepts them, his acceptance is a ratification of the previously unauthorized acts or contracts, and makes them as binding upon him from the time they were performed as if they had been authorized in the first place." Clark & Skyles on Agency, § 98. This principle applies to a municipal corporation the same as to an individual as to contracts which have been unauthorizedly entered into on its behalf, if it could have originally authorized such acts or contracts. If there is legal authority for the contract, though it be illegal because of some irregularity or informality in the manner or time of its execution, and therefore incapable of enforcement, it may be ratified by an acceptance of the benefits of the contract by the corporation; but, if there be no legal authority for the contract, that authority cannot be created through the application of any doctrine, or of principle of estoppel, acquiescence, or ratification. Clark & Skyles on Agency, § 121; Abbott on Municipal Corporations, §§ 279, 280; Smith's Modern Law of Municipal Corporations, §§ 258, 259.

The case before us does not disclose a sale beyond the scope and powers of Liberty county or of its commissioners' court, intrusted by the Constitution and laws of the state with its business, but one that the county is expressly authorized to make "in the manner to be provided by the commissioners' court of the county." The manner provided by the court was simply illegal. That is all. If the manner it provided had been legal, the sale would have been. Therefore we think the sale, though illegal, under which appellants claim the land in controversy, was such as could be ratified by the county, and that the facts found by the trial court show a full and complete ratification of it.

Wherefore the judgment of the district court, as against these appellants, is reversed, and judgment is here rendered against the appellee in their favor for the land in controversy.

On Motion for Rehearing.

The land sued for was, by virtue of section 6, art. 7, of the Constitution, expressly granted by the state to Liberty county for "education or schools," and was "of right the property of said county," in whom the title by virtue of the grant vested. The same constitutional provision which authorized the grant empowered the county to "sell or dispose of the land in manner to be provided by the commissioners' court of the county." Article 4271, Rev. St. 1895, added nothing to the county's power to sell or dispose of such lands, nor could it divest the county of such power conferred by the Constitution. The land was donated and dedicated for education or schools. To accomplish the purpose of the grant it was essential that it should be sold or some other disposition be made of it. This disposition could only be made by the county, in the manner to be provided by the commissioners' court. In other words, it was for the county to dispose of it, and the commissioners to prescribe the manner of its disposition. As the land was the county's, its sale or disposition was "county business conferred by the Constitution of the state," and the power of the county to sell could only be exercised by the county commissioners' court in such a manner as it might prescribe; but it could prescribe no manner of selling or disposing of the land which would take from it and vest in another the discretionary power necessary to be exercised in making a sale, as is held by the Supreme Court in Logan v. Stephens County. When the court acts itself in the sale of county school lands, it can exercise to its fullest extent the power conferred upon it as a trustee by the Constitution; but, when it attempts to act through another as its agent, it can delegate none of its discretionary powers, for, under the rules governing trustees, the court itself must exercise the discretionary powers intrusted to it by the Constitution. Meerschmidt v. Gardner (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 619.

The rule that a trustee, who is authorized to sell property under an instrument which does not contain any special direction as to the mode or time of sale, must exercise his own judgment in determining the time and mode of sale, and whether the amount offered shall be accepted or not, cannot, with respect to any of these matters, delegate the exercise of his judgment or discretion to another, is the one applied by the Supreme Court in the Stephens County Case; but, while the trustee may not delegate the exercise of the judgment and discretion reposed in him, he may employ agents to a limited extent to aid him in the execution of the powers intrusted to him. Still their employment should be restricted to carrying out what he has already determined upon, for the judgment and discretion must be that of the trustee, though, in accomplishing what his judgment has previously approved, he may call others to his aid. Gillespie v. Smith, 29 Ill. 473, 81 Am. Dec. 328; Kennedy v. Dunn, 58 Cal. 339; Johns v. Sargeant, 45 Miss. 332. Herein lies the distinction between the cases of Logan v. Stephens County, 98 Tex. 283, 83 S. W. 365, and Matagorda County v. Casey (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 476. In the one case the county commissioners' court ordered that E. L. Walker be appointed commissioner for the sale of the Stephens county school lands and to make title to the same as such commissioner, which was clearly an attempt on the part of the court to delegate to another the judgment and discretion, the exercise of which was intrusted by the Constitution to it alone. In the other case the order was that Donald & Cobb be appointed as agents of the county of Matagorda for the management and sale of its school lands and empowered them, as such agents, to sell and convey the lands at the prices specifically set forth in the order. From the order it is apparent that no judgment or discretion of the court was attempted to be delegated to Donald & Cobb, but that they were simply appointed for the purpose of carrying out what the court, in the exercise of its judgment and discretion, had already determined upon. Hence the sale in the first case was invalid, and in the other it was all right. While the surrender of its judgment and discretion and its attempted delegation by the county commissioners' court of Liberty county to Perryman was not as complete in the case at bar as it was in the Stephens County Case, it seems to us that enough was surrendered and sought to be delegated to him to render the sale made by him, through which appellants deraign title, invalid, when tested by the principles before enunciated.

This brings us to the consideration of the question whether the sale was susceptible of ratification. It is stoutly asserted and vigorously argued in this motion that we erred in deciding this question in the affirmative in our original opinion, and that we should, upon reconsideration, decide that the sale could not be ratified. There are certain contracts which are incapable of ratification; or, more properly speaking, there are certain transactions partaking of the color of contracts, which are not and never can become contracts according to the legal conception of the term. Such transactions as are directly or impliedly prohibited by the Constitution or statute; such as are clearly against public policy; or such as, were it not perforce of a statute, would be unauthorized, which do not comply, in manner and form of their execution, with the requirements of the statute authorizing them—are in no sense of the term contracts, and never can, by ratification, acquiescence, or any act of the parties, become contracts such as can be enforced through the medium of the courts. To illustrate: A., in consideration of a promise made to him by B. to pay him a designated sum of money upon his murdering C., commits the murder in the performance of his part of the agreement. B. then refuses to pay him the sum of money according to his agreement. Then A. sues him, setting up the terms of the agreement, the performance of his part of the agreement, and prays judgment for the sum of money B. promised to pay him for committing the felony. Any child in the land would know that such an agreement is not a contract, and the reason why it is not and could not be, that, though on account of the murder B. accepted pecuniary benefits arising from it, the transaction was such that it could not, in the sense of the law, be ratified by any subsequent act; that, if the law were enforced, instead of a judgment for money, B. would get one for a hangman's noose entitling him to dangle from a gallows by the side of A., his partner in the crime. That such a suit has never been brought is not because no such agreement has ever been made, but on account of the knowledge, of those who have sunk to the lowest depths of human depravity, of the law. Take another case, of a character which has frequently arisen and been adjudicated, for illustration of the principle: A., knowing that B. desires to rent his house to be used for an illegal purpose—such as for gambling, a house of prostitution, storing smuggled goods, or secreting stolen property—rents it to him for the purpose of his carrying on such illegal business therein. B. takes possession of the building under the lease and uses it during the term for the purpose of carrying on such unlawful business. B. has not paid, but refuses to pay, A. the rental agreed upon, and the latter sues him for it. B. pleads in answer the illegality of the agreement, to which A., by his supplemental petition, replies: "You ratified the agreement by entering into possession of my house thereunder and occupying it during the entire term of the lease." The reply has no force, for the law pronounces the agreement illegal from its inception because the purpose for which it was entered into was contrary to the statute, as well as against public policy, and incapable of ratification. Such an agreement is so tainted by the putrefaction of immorality as to render it an absolute nullity, incapable of ratification in any manner.

It is not insisted in appellee's motion for rehearing that the case under consideration is of the class we have just illustrated, and we have offered the illustrations only for the purpose of demonstrating the principle that a contract which is in itself illegal is not susceptible of ratification. It cannot be said that the sale by a county of her public school lands is in itself illegal, for such a sale is expressly authorized by the Constitution, as well as by statute; nor can it be held against public policy for a county to do that which it is fully authorized by the Constitution and laws of the state to do. On the contrary, it would seem that it was the duty of Liberty county to sell such of her lands at the time her commissioners' court attempted to do so, and by its order of July 1, 1881, appointed W. W. Perryman the agent of the county to sell such lands; for it, at the same time, declared it to be the judgment of the court that it was for the interest of the county that all its school lands situated in the counties of Polk, Tyler, and Hardin be placed on the market for sale, and the proceeds thereof invested as provided by law. In this there was an exercise of the discretion and judgment of the court, which was, no doubt, properly determined, for the children within the scholastic age then residing in Liberty county were as much entitled to the benefaction provided by the state as the children who may reside within its limits a hundred years from now. In this view it would seem that the county had not only the right to place the lands on the market for sale at that time, but that it was its duty to do so, in order that those who were entitled to the interest on the proceeds of the sale, invested as a permanent school fund, could get the benefit of it, as was intended by the state when the donation of the land to the county was made. It was certainly not contemplated by the "Fathers" that the children of their generation should be deprived of the fruits of the state's bounty in order that in the distant future a better price might be obtained and a larger permanent school fund realized for the children of future generations. It must have been contemplated that the children of those who "let down the gap and trod down the first grass, fought back the Indians and smoothed the trail for others," were entitled to some benefit from the donation of lands by the state to the several counties for school purposes.

So far there was no illegality in the order of the commissioners' court, nor would it have been illegal for the county, by its commissioners' court, to have sold the land and have carried into effect a sale made by it through the agency of Perryman, or any other suitable person. Its invalidity consisted in the order's giving him "full power to sell the land either at private or public sale, as in his judgment he might deem best for the interest of the county." Thus expressly delegating its powers of discretion and judgment, which, as we have seen, it alone could exercise. But the sale made by him was not like the sales in those cases where the commissioners' courts conveyed county school lands to parties in consideration of their locating and surveying such lands, which were invalid, because contrary to the Constitution and statute which provide that the proceeds of such lands, when sold, "shall be held by said counties alone as a trust fund for the benefit of the schools therein." Inasmuch as such sales were in consideration of services performed, the counties received nothing that could be held as a trust fund for the benefit of the schools. The trust expressly imposed by the Constitution upon the county was violated, and the source from which the trust fund was to flow was destroyed, by the very power intrusted by the law with its preservation. Hence such proceedings of the commissioners' court were absolutely void and incapable of ever being ratified in any way by any power in this world.

This case is not analogous in principle to Nichols v. State, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 327, 32 S. W. 452. In that case the plaintiff's demand against the state for payment for extra work upon the building could not be enforced because of the inhibition contained in section 44, art. 3, of the Constitution, which provides that: "The Legislature shall not grant money to any individual on a claim, real or pretended, when the same shall not have been provided for by pre-existing law." As there was no such pre-existing law authorizing payment for the extra work done by Nichols on the state's building, the acceptance and occupancy of the building by the state was not a ratification of the pretended contract upon which his demand arose, and could not be, for the reason that the Legislature was by the Constitution expressly inhibited granting money on such a claim; no provision having been made by any law existing before the claim arose for its payment.

The cases of Noel v. City of San Antonio, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 580, 33 S. W. 285, and National Bank v. Dallas (Tex. Civ. App.) 73 S. W. 841, are ruled by the principle that a pretended contract by a municipal corporation, which the municipality is prohibited by the Constitution from making, is absolutely void and not susceptible of ratification. In the two cases mentioned no provision was "made to assess and annually collect a sufficient sum to pay the interest thereon, and to create a sinking fund." Therefore the claims sued upon were in direct violation of section 5, art. 11, of the Constitution, which declares that no debt shall be created by a city, unless at the same time provision be made to assess and collect a sufficient sum to pay the interest thereon and create a sinking fund of at least 2 per cent. thereon. Consequently, in accordance with the principle stated, it was held, as has been done in a number of similar cases, that the contracts sued on were absolutely void and incapable of ratification. Hence it appears that there is no analogy between that class of cases and the one at bar.

Nor is there any analogy between the case in hand and that of Daniel v. Mason, 90 Tex. 240, 33 S. W. 161, 59 Am. St. Rep. 788, wherein it was held by the Supreme Court that a married woman's deed to her separate property was void, although her vendee had no notice of her coverture, and though she accepted from him the cash consideration, appropriated, and never returned it. That decision rests upon the principle that where a contract, which could not under the common law be made, is authorized by a statute which prescribes the manner and form of its execution, it must be made in conformity to the statute which authorizes it, or else it will be void. In that case a married woman undertook to convey real estate, which was her separate property, without being joined in the conveyance by her husband, which was absolutely required by article 635, Rev. St. 1895, which conferred the right to make the conveyance and prescribed the manner and form of its execution. Hence the court held her deed was absolutely void and not susceptible of ratification.

In the case of Logan v. Stephens County, supra, there was no ratification of the sale attempted to be made by Walker under his appointment as commissioner for the sale of the county's school lands, nor was the question of ratification involved.

We have thus classified and analyzed the cases upon which appellee relies to show that the sale of the lands in controversy was void and incapable of subsequent ratification, disclosed the principle upon which each class was decided, distinguished the case in hand from each class of such cases, and demonstrated that the principle by which it is ruled does not obtain and is inapplicable to the case under consideration.

The appellee in its motion makes this quotation from Dillon on Municipal Corporations: "A municipal corporation may ratify the unauthorized acts and contracts of its agents or officers which are within the scope of the corporate powers, but not otherwise. * * * But a subsequent ratification cannot make valid an unlawful act, without the scope of corporate authority. An absolute excess of authority by the officers of the corporation, in violation of law, cannot be upheld, and, when the officers of such a body fail to pursue the requirements of a statutory enactment under which they are acting, the corporation is not bound. In such a case the statute must be strictly followed. And a person who deals with a municipal body is obliged to see that its charter has been fully complied with. When this is not done, no subsequent act of the corporation can make an ultra vires contract effective." The argument its counsel bases upon the principle begs the question, in assuming that the sale of the land was not within the corporate powers of Liberty county, from which premise they reach the conclusion that it was ultra vires, and therefore incapable of subsequent ratification. Whether such premise is sound or not is the very question to be determined. If it is sound, the conclusion inevitably follows that the sale in question is not susceptible of ratification; but, if unsound, the conclusion fails with the premise. In the latter event some other premise must be formed as a basis for such conclusion. In the quotation the principle is clearly and unequivocally enunciated that "a municipal corporation may ratify the unauthorized acts and contracts of its agents or officers which are within the scope of its corporate powers." We have seen: That it was within the scope of the corporate powers of Liberty county to sell its school lands, such power being expressly granted by the Constitution and laws of the state; that the invalidity of the sale did not rest upon the principle of ultra vires; but that the vice lay in the manner in which the county exercised its corporate power to sell. As is said in Abbott on Municipal Corporations, § 279: "A contract may, because of some irregularity in the manner or time of its execution, be illegal because defective, and therefore incapable of enforcement. Such a contract the authorities hold may be ratified either by an acceptance of the contract by the public corporation, * * * or by acquiescence in existing conditions." See, also, the authorities cited in note 837, pp. 623, 624, vol. 1, of the work just quoted from.

There is no mandatory provision prescribed by either the Constitution or laws of the state, as in the case of the conveyance by a married woman for the conveyance of her separate real estate, for the sale and conveyance by a county of her county school lands; but, as we have seen, it is left to the county commissioners' court to provide the manner of its sale and disposition. It is a general rule that, "if the invalid contract was one which the corporation could make and is not void because not in compliance with a mandatory provision of the law, it may be ratified." Supervisors of Marshall County v. Schneek, 5 Wall. 772, 18 L. Ed. 556; State v. Milling Co., 156 Mo. 620, 57 S. W. 1008; Bell v. Waynesboro Borough, 195 Pa. 299, 45 Atl. 930. Hence we conclude that the sale of the land evidenced by the deed from W. W. Perryman, under which appellants claim, though invalid, was not void, and was therefore susceptible of ratification.

We omitted to express our opinion in the proper place upon the effect of Perryman's retaining 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sale as his commissions for effecting the sale. It is that it does not affect the question of ratification. The commission was allowed by a different order of the commissioners' court from that which sought to empower Perryman to effect the sale of the land. The purchaser was not therefore charged with notice of it when he paid the purchase money, which was more than the minimum price for which the commissioners' court, as is shown by its order appointing him as agent of the county to sell, was willing for it to be sold. The court's allowing Perryman to retain the 5 per cent. was, in our opinion, simply a diversion of the money from the fund to which it belonged to the general fund of the county. Thereby the county commissioners' court created a claim by the school fund on the general county fund for the amount of money paid Perryman, and therefore the commissioners' court should restore the amount thus diverted from the school fund by taking it from the general fund to which it was diverted.

The sale of the land being susceptible of ratification, the next question is: Do the facts found by the trial court show its ratification by the county? As is said in our original opinion: "The principle is axiomatic that where one person executes a deed, purporting to be the act of another, without authority to do so, and the person for whom such act purports to have been done is fully apprised of all the facts connected therewith, and knowingly receives and uses the benefits derived from such sale, he thereby ratifies it, and is estopped from asserting that the person purporting to act as his agent was without authority to make it. * * * 'Ratification is the election by a person, and the expression of such election by words or conduct, to accept an act or contract previously done or entered into in his behalf by another who had at the time no authority to do the act or make the contract on his behalf. If certain acts have been performed or contracts made on behalf of another without his authority, he has, when he obtains knowledge thereof, an election either to accept or repudiate such acts or contracts. If he accepts them, his acceptance is a ratification of the previously unauthorized acts or contracts, and makes them as binding upon him from the time they were performed, as if they had been authorized in the first place.' Clark & Skyles on Agency, § 98." Inasmuch as the evidence shows indisputably the presence of all the facts essential to a complete ratification, we think it is self-demonstrative. If a man, who had knowingly received from another the purchase money for an unauthorized sale of his land, invested the money in interest-bearing securities, collected and used the interest on the investment for over 20 years, should sue the purchaser to recover his property upon the ground that he never authorized the sale, his action would unquestionably be defeated by proof of such acts of ratification. To our minds it is equally clear that Liberty county cannot, for the same reason, recover in this action. The education of the children of Texas does not demand the sacrifice of public integrity. Such a sacrifice is too great for any purpose. No individual can afford to make it, and we do not think that any county of the great state of Texas is, or should be, allowed to make it. "Robbing Peter to pay Paul" has never been regarded as orthodox religion by any church, or as sound morals by any man; and it may be doubted whether Peter himself, with all his Christian forbearance, approved such conduct.

The motion is overruled.

STACY v. DELERY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 23, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1909.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 87*)—UNLAWFULLY DETAINING WATER—ACTIONS—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

Where a lower riparian owner, suing an upper owner for unlawfully appropriating the water of a stream, alleged that the upper owner impounded the water of one of the forks of the stream, and the evidence showed that the damages complained of were caused by dams on the other fork of the stream, there could be no recovery, because the evidence did not support the petition.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 731*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

An assignment of error "because the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and judgment of the court" is too general to require consideration on appeal.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 78*)—USE OF WATER FOR IRRIGATION PURPOSES.

Each riparian owner has equal rights in the stream for irrigation purposes, and the use of each must be reasonable as to the rights of the others.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 78*)—USE OF WATER FOR IRRIGATION PURPOSES.

The right of a riparian owner to the water of a stream for irrigation purposes is not confined to a use of the water as it flows by, and while it is so flowing, but he may store the water in reservoirs for future use after it has ceased to flow so far as is consistent with the rights of the lower owners, but such use of the water by one owner as will prevent a lower owner from storing water for irrigation is not reasonable.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 78*)—USE OF WATER FOR IRRIGATION PURPOSES.

A lower riparian owner is not entitled to water which has been stored by an upper owner while the stream was running, unless such water also included water which the latter caught and stored by entirely obstructing the flow while the stream was running, to the former's damage.

Appeal from District Court, Liberty County; L. B. Hightower, Judge.

Action by William Stacy against W. S. Delery and another, in which defendant Delery pleaded in reconvention for damages against plaintiff. From a judgment for defendant Delery on the plea in reconvention, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Stevens & Pickett, for appellant. Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, for appellee.

REESE, J. This suit was brought by William Stacy in the district court to enjoin W. S. Delery and Jane Frisbie from cutting certain dams erected by Stacy on White's bayou. Both defendants answered. Delery also pleaded in reconvention for damages against plaintiff Stacy, occasioned by injury to his rice crop caused by unlawful detention and appropriation by plaintiff of water flowing in White's bayou. After answer by defendants, plaintiff dismissed his suit for injunction, with the allegation that such remedy was no longer necessary, and the cause, as between Stacy and Delery, proceeded to trial upon Delery's plea in reconvention. Upon trial without a jury judgment was rendered for Delery for $823.25, from which Stacy appeals.

By the first, second, fifth, and tenth assignments of error appellant complains of the judgment as based upon a cause of action not embraced in the pleadings, but variant therefrom. The plea in intervention sets out: That appellee had rented a tract of land for the year 1907, upon which he had planted, and was growing, a crop of rice. The land lay along White's bayou, a running stream from which appellee procured water to water the crop, catching and holding the water in a dam across the bayou, and pumping it out on his rice. That appellant, who was a rice grower on land above him, had placed a dam in White's bayou, and had thereby stopped the flow of the stream, appropriated all of the water, and prevented any of it from reaching appellee at a time when he was in pressing need of the same to water his rice crop, for lack of which water his rice crop was injured. It is further alleged in the pleadings: "That the stream known as White's bayou has its head at a point north or northwest from the town of Devers, on the north side of the Texas & New Orleans Railway track, and runs thence in an easterly direction through the Whittington league, owned by William Babcock, and turning south across said railway at a point east of the town of Devers, and enters the Benjamin Barrow survey of land, and continuing thence in a southwardly direction, passing through said land leased by the defendant, W. S. Delery, hereinabove described. That in recent years a gully has been washed out by the flow of water caused by rainfall, which gully begins on said White's bayou and the Benjamin Barrow survey of land, extending thence northwestwardly through said Barrow's survey, a part of the Chism survey, and on west of the town of Devers, the head of said gully being near to said White's bayou, northwest of said town of Devers; that this said gully is not now and has never been the main stream or waterway of White's bayou, but that same has only in recent years come into existence as a stream, and that by reason of natural rainfall and overflow of water from said White's bayou northwest of the town of Devers, which rainfall and overflow water, following a natural depression west of said town of Devers, has flowed southwardly into the said White's bayou again, and by reason of washing caused by said rainfall and said overflow of water from said White's bayou the said gully has been made. That one tract of plaintiff's land borders on said White's bayou, and said tract of land so bordering upon said White's bayou is shown on the map, which the defendant hereto attached, and same is marked for identification. That the other two tracts of land owned by plaintiff are on the said gully, which is located west of the town of Devers, as hereinbefore described and referred to. That the said two tracts of said land are so riparian to the said White's bayou, and the same do not touch or come in contact with the said White's bayou in its natural channel or proper basin. This defendant is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief avers, that said plaintiff's crop of rice referred to and described in his petition was grown upon said tracts, which are not riparian to the said White's bayou. This defendant says, therefore, that the plaintiff did appropriate the water from White's bayou to irrigate said tracts of land, which are not entitled to irrigation from it; that the supply of water from said White's bayou is wholly inadequate to irrigate the lands owned by plaintiff, which are not riparian to said White's bayou, and the land leased by defendant Delery, and upon which the said Delery was growing a crop of rice last year." A plat attached to the plea in reconvention and introduced in evidence shows the stream, the course of which has been shown, marked "White's bayou" and the other stream marked "White's bayou gully," the upper end of which is shown to be connected with White's bayou by a ditch, and which runs thence in about a straight line to connect with White's bayou, below the lands marked as Stacy's lands, and above the lands of Delery. The map also shows Stacy's cultivated land lying along this stream marked White's bayou gully, other lands intervening between them and White's bayou. The sketch also shows a dam on White's bayou just above the junction of the two streams, and another further up the stream marked "White's bayou gully."

It is further alleged "that the said tract of land which is located upon and which is riparian to the said White's bayou is south of and along the course of said White's bayou below the other tracts of land owned by plaintiff; that said tract of land riparian to said bayou is woodland, not adapted for the cultivation and growth of rice, and that no part of same is now in cultivation for the purpose of growing rice, and that none of the water from said White's bayou was used upon said land for the purpose of irrigating crops growing on same; that said plaintiff has constructed a dam across said bayou, and by means of said dam stops the water which should naturally drain past the land of the defendant, Delery, and confines same by said dam on the said tract of land owned by plaintiff, and within the banks of said White's bayou, and then pumps same from said dam back upon the lands owned by plaintiff, which are not riparian to White's bayou; that said dam practically consumes all of the water flowing through said White's bayou, and plaintiff is now appropriating and seeking to appropriate all of said water, and confines same by said dam, thereby preventing it passing beyond same to the land being cultivated by said Delery; that it is not necessary for the cultivation and growth of crops of rice upon said plaintiff's premises to appropriate all of said water, but that the said plaintiff is storing said water on his said land, instead of permitting the same to take its natural course, which would permit it to reach the land leased and cultivated by said defendant, Delery."

It is made clearly to appear from the allegations of the plea that appellee intends to distinguish carefully White's bayou from the other stream which he calls a "gully," and which is marked on his sketch as "White's bayou gully," and the gravamen of his complaint is that by means of a dam across White's bayou, which is shown on the sketch, appellant has impounded the water coming down White's bayou, thus depriving appellee of the use thereof to water his lands lower down on the stream, and using the same to water his (appellant's) rice on land alleged to be not riparian to White's bayou, but lying along said gully. In every way appellee distinguishes White's bayou from White's bayou gully, and makes it clear that his ground of complaint is the damming up of White's bayou and the stoppage of the flow of water down this stream and using it to irrigate land on the "gully," and away from this stream. No reference is made to any dam on the stream which he distinguishes as White's bayou gully, or to any flow of water down said stream. By means of the allegations of the plea, in connection with the sketch, appellee puts his finger upon the objectionable dam across White's bayou, above the lower junction of that stream with the so-called gully.

The court found as a basis for the judgment (and the findings are not disputed) that White's bayou divides at the point where the ditch was cut and runs into two prongs (one being the stream called by appellee "White's bayou," and the other the stream which he denominates "White's bayou gully"), the two prongs uniting below appellant's and above appellee's lands, that both streams throughout their courses possess all the characteristics of water courses as defined by law, and that the water runs through both of them during all the year, except extreme dry weather in the summer time. The court in its findings speaks of the stream marked on the sketch as White's bayou as the east prong of the bayou, and the other as the west prong. The court in its findings treats each prong as White's bayou. The court finds that appellant had erected two dams across the west prong, and at a point lower down and a short distance above the junction had erected a dam "extending from the east bank of the east prong to a point about where Big Ben's marsh empties into the eastern prong, across to the western bank of the western prong." The court further finds that, "by reason of said series of dams, the plaintiff, Stacy, stopped entirely the flow of water in White's bayou, confining in said dams all the water that came down this stream, and permitting none of it to pass save that which wasted from his irrigated lands." The findings of the court leave no room for doubt that, when White's bayou is spoken of, the stream embracing both prongs is meant, and that the judgment is based upon the stopping of the water flowing down both streams and obstructed in both by the "series of dams" mentioned.

It is further found that in 1907 the water ceased to run in the eastern prong (White's bayou) on July 1, 1907, and in the western prong (White's bayou gully) on July 25th, and it is so conclusively shown that appellee had sufficient water to thoroughly water his rice crop up to July 20th, and that he, in fact, watered his crop up to about July 25th. Appellee had a dam to catch the water at his place sufficient to hold enough water for his purposes. When we consider that the water ceased to flow in White's bayou or the eastern prong on July 1st, and continued to run in the western prong, or White's bayou gully, until July 25th, and that appellee had plenty of water at least as late as July 20th, it is clear that his damage was caused principally, if not entirely, by the erection of the three dams in the western prong across the stream called by him "White's bayou gully," and that the dam complained of by him in his plea across White's bayou, or the eastern prong, contributed very little thereto, if at all. Clearly this western prong carried the heavier flow of water. Eliminate all the dams on the western prong or gully, of which there is no mention in the pleading, and it does not appear that appellee would have suffered any damage, as he would have received the flow of that stream to fill his dam until July 25th. By the allegations of the plea appellant had no notice that any complaint was made of any of his dams on the western prong of the stream, as found by the court.

It is not necessary to cite authorities to sustain the proposition that facts proven, but not alleged, cannot form the basis of a judgment.

The several assignments referred to are well taken, and must be sustained.

The seventh assignment of error is as follows: "Because the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and judgment of the court." The assignment is too general to require consideration, and would not be considered but for the fact that the judgment will be reversed on another ground, and, in view of another trial, it is proper that we express our views upon some of the propositions advanced under the assignment. Miller v. Schmullen, 37 Tex. 233; Randall v. Carlisle, 59 Tex. 70; Yoe v. Montgomery, 68 Tex. 342, 4 S. W. 622; Bonner v. Whitcomb, 80 Tex. 178, 15 S. W. 899. The error is not fundamental.

The first proposition under this assignment is that a riparian owner is only entitled to his proportionate part of the flow of a running stream, and, after a running stream has ceased to flow naturally, a lower riparian owner has no cause of action to an upper riparian owner, who during the time that the stream flowed naturally stored in reservoirs a part of the water, provided that during the period of such storage by the upper owner the lower owner received his quota of the flow of the stream. The opinion of the Supreme Court in Watkins Land Co. v. Clements, 98 Tex. 578, 86 S. W. 733, 70 L. R. A. 964, 107 Am. St. Rep. 653, must be taken as settling the law in this state as to the respective rights of riparian owners on the same stream in the water of the stream for irrigation purposes, and that "each riparian owner has equal rights in the stream of water which flows by him, and the use of each must be reasonable as regards the rights of others"; what is such reasonableness being a question for the jury in each case. Clark v. Allaman, 71 Kan. 206, 80 Pac. 571, 70 L. R. A. 971; Crawford v. Hathaway, 67 Neb. 325, 93 N. W. 781, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647. This right to take is not only to use the water as it flows by, and while it is so flowing, but also, so far as this can be done consistently with the rights of lower owners, the right to store it in reservoirs or confine it for future use after it has ceased to flow. Long on Irr. § 118. It was shown that the water in the east prong ceased to flow on July 1st and in the west prong July 25th, but that at a much earlier date appellant, by damming the water, appropriated all of it, and allowed none to get by to appellee's land where he was prepared to catch and store at least a part, if not all, of the flow. Perhaps if the water had been allowed to continue to run down to appellee's lands up to the time it ceased to run at all in both streams (if appellee's pleadings are so framed as to meet the case made by the findings of the trial court), he would have been able to catch and store a sufficient quantity of this continued flow to continue to water his rice and save his crop from damage. Such use of the water by appellant as would prevent his doing this could hardly be said to be a reasonable use consistent with the equal right of appellee to the use of the water. This view makes it important to determine upon another trial whether the damage to appellee's crop was caused by this stoppage of the flow while the water was still running in the streams, depending to some extent upon whether he was prepared to catch and hold this continued flow if it had not been stopped by appellant. The evidence does not make this entirely clear.

The judgment is not predicated to any extent, as shown by the findings of the trial court, upon the act of appellant in diverting the water from the east prong to the west prong by means of the ditch cut by him in 1895, more than 10 years before the institution of the suit. It does not appear to us that the second, third, and fourth propositions advanced by appellant under this assignment have any relation to the case made by the evidence.

What we have said disposes of the fourth and sixth assignments of error, with this addition: Appellee would not be entitled to the water which had been caught and stored by appellant while the stream was running unless such body of water also included water which appellant caught and stored by entirely obstructing the flow while the stream was still running, to appellee's damage, as explained in this opinion.

There is no merit in the eighth assignment, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Watkins v. Clements, supra.

What we have said sufficiently disposes of the ninth and tenth assignments of error, which are overruled.

For the error indicated, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

HAMILTON v. KEGLEY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 20, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 719*)—ERRORS REVIEWABLE IN ABSENCE OF ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

There is no fundamental error apparent of record which alone can be considered in the absence of assignments of error, where the judgment, for the full amount of the claim, makes no provision for application in payment of it of money paid by defendant to plaintiff pending the litigation; plaintiff's testimony showing without anything to controvert it that on filing his amended petition he paid it into the registry of the court, where it is still held, there being nothing to prevent defendant withdrawing it and applying it on the judgment, plaintiff having lost all power and control over it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2968-2982; Dec. Dig. § 719.*]

Error from District Court, Bell County; John M. Furman, Judge.

Action by Jay Kegley against W. H. Hamilton. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Durrett & Pendleton, for plaintiff in error.

RICE, J. Kegley sued Hamilton for a balance claimed to be due him from Hamilton arising out of a former partnership business conducted by them at Belton. There was a verdict and judgment in favor of Kegley for $699.41, to reverse which Hamilton sued out this writ of error.

While plaintiff in error complains of numerous rulings of the court, yet there was no assignment of errors filed in the lower court, as required by law, and therefore none is brought up in the record. Hence we are not called upon to consider any error, except such as may be fundamental and apparent from the face of the record, which doctrine is admitted to be correct by counsel for plaintiff in error. See article 1018, Rev. Civ. St.; District Court Rules 97, 98 (67 S. W. xxvii);

Supreme Court Rules 22, 23; Bopp v. Ganzer (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 444; Lewis v. Steiner, 84 Tex. 364, 19 S. W. 516; Durham v. Garrett (decided at the present term, not yet officially reported) 121 S. W. 1141.

Plaintiff in error, however, contends that there is fundamental error apparent of record, in this: That it is shown thereby that he had paid to defendant in error pending the litigation the sum of $552.28, with which he has not been credited. While this is not denied, yet Kegley testified that this amount, upon the filing of his amended petition, had been paid by him into the registry of the court, and is still held there, and there is nothing controverting his statement. This being true, notwithstanding that the judgment of the court in Kegley's favor made no provision for the application of this money in payment of his judgment against Hamilton, yet there is nothing to prevent Hamilton from withdrawing this money and applying the same in satisfaction thereof; Kegley having lost all power and control over the same. It is true that the court might have provided for the application of the same in satisfaction pro tanto of the judgment rendered, but this does not prevent plaintiff in error so applying it; and doubtless the court, if it becomes necessary, will order the same paid over to Hamilton for this purpose. In the absence of an assignment of error, this failure on the part of the court to so provide does not in our judgment constitute such fundamental error as the authorities contemplate we should take notice of, and the judgment is therefore in all things affirmed.

Affirmed.

ESTES et al. v. ESTES et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 731*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

An assignment of error that the verdict is clearly against the law, the evidence, the great preponderance of evidence, and directly against the admitted, agreed, and uncontradicted evidence, is too general and indefinite under Court of Civil Appeals Rules 22-28 (67 S. W. xv), relating to the preparing of causes for submission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3021; Dec. Dig. § 731.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 728*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

Assignments of error which do not identify the particular proceedings complained of in the record, as expressly required by Court of Civil Appeals Rules 25 and 26 (67 S. W. xv), are not sufficient; and hence an assignment merely urging that the court erred in several rulings in excluding legal and competent evidence offered by plaintiffs, to their great prejudice, all of which was duly excepted to by them, referring to bills of exception, was insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3010-3012; Dec. Dig. § 728.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—PROPOSITIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

Where propositions under assignments of error are not germane to the assignments, or are general and indefinite, failing to specify with certainty the particular error complained of, they are insufficient under Court of Civil Appeals Rules 30-32 (67 S. W. xvi), prescribing the form of such propositions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO ASK.

It is not compulsory upon the judge to set out any more of the pleadings in his charge than he may deem necessary, and it is the duty of a party, if dissatisfied with the charge, to have prepared and presented a special charge, covering the supposed defect, and, if he does not do so, he cannot complain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 628; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SEVERAL PROPOSITIONS OF LAW AS ONE PROPOSITION.

Assignments complaining of several separate charges, embracing several propositions of law as one proposition, are insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 730*)—SUFFICIENCY—GENERALITY.

Assignments that the court erred in refusing to give charges requested by plaintiff because they were clearly the law arising on the issues and evidence, and were absolutely necessary, that the court, having failed to give any equivalent charge, wrought fatal injury to plaintiffs, and that the court erred in every paragraph of its charge from the fourth to the ninth, twelfth to the sixteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second paragraphs, because they were not warranted by the issues raised or the proof made, are too general and indefinite.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3013-3016; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—INSUFFICIENCY OF STATEMENT.

An assignment of error complaining of the court's refusal to give requested charges, not followed by any statement, and an assignment urging that the court erred in certain paragraphs of its charge, followed by a statement not setting out the charges complained of, need not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

Appeal from District Court, Bell County; John M. Furman, Judge.

Trespass to try title by J. W. Estes and others against Florence Estes and others. Judgment for defendants, and one of the plaintiffs appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 118 S. W. 174.

Saunders & Saunders and Woodward & Baker, for appellant. Tyler & Tyler and A. L. Curtis, for appellees.

RICE, J. J. W. Estes, Mrs. Margaret Murphy, joined by her husband, W. G. Murphy, and C. P. Estes, brought this suit against Mrs. Florence Estes and the other appellees herein, in the ordinary form of trespass to try title, to recover 700 acres of land in Bell county. Appellants, except Murphy, were the children of E. T. Estes by his first wife, Jane Estes, and the appellees were the children and grandchildren of said E. T. Estes by his second wife, S. A. Estes. By amendment to the pleading, the suit was in effect one to recover on the part of said plaintiffs a one-half interest in said tract of land, basing their contention upon the theory that the land involved was purchased by E. T. Estes, their father, with the money realized by him from the sale of the homestead of himself and his said first wife, their mother. Appellees replied by general denial, plea of not guilty, and also pleaded the statutes of limitation of 3, 5, 10, and 4 years, and stale demand, and likewise pleaded by way of estoppel that E. T. Estes, the ancestor of both plaintiffs and defendants, and who held the legal title to the land in controversy up to his death in 1887, made a valid will, which was duly probated and in full force, by the terms of which he devised to said plaintiffs, J. W. Estes, C. P. Estes and Margaret Ann Murphy, certain lands in Grimes and Montgomery counties, amounting to 1,167 acres, and by the same will devised the lands in controversy herein and all his personal property to his said second wife (mother and grandmother, respectively, of appellees) during her lifetime, with remainder to the children of said E. T. Estes and S. A. Estes, some of whom are defendants herein, and others of whom are their descendants, charging said land and said personal property with the payment of his debts; that but for said will appellees would have been entitled by inheritance to their shares in said land in Grimes and Montgomery counties, so devised to appellants; but that said will excluded appellees from any interest therein, and also from any interest in the lands in controversy or in the estate of said E. T. Estes until the death of their mother, S. A. Estes, in 1905; that appellants have sold the lands in Grimes and Montgomery counties, appropriating the proceeds thereof to their own use; that appellants, excepting W. G. Murphy, who is a nominal party hereto, were wholly insolvent and cannot be compelled to restore said land or the proceeds thereof to be partitioned between appellants and appellees; that appellees and their mother, S. A. Estes, have long since paid off the debts and expenses of last illness, in accordance with said will; and that it would be inequitable now for appellants to share with appellees in the land sued for, whereby they are concluded and estopped from claiming any interest therein, and have elected to take said land in Grimes and Montgomery counties under the provisions of said will. Appellants by supplemental petition sought to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations, so pleaded by appellees, by alleging an agreement between Mrs. Estes and themselves, to the effect that if they would not disturb her possession during her lifetime they should be entitled to an undivided one-half of the same after her death, and denied that they had elected to take under said will, but asserted that the Grimes and Montgomery county lands had been paid for by them by work done for and money loaned their father during his lifetime. Said J. W. Estes pleaded that prior to the death of his step-mother, Mrs. S. A. Estes, he had an understanding and agreement with her to the effect that he should pay her during her lifetime a certain sum of money for her support, equivalent to the rental value of said land, and that said land should not be divided during her lifetime, and that he was in possession of said land at the time of her death under this contract, with which he had complied, and remained in possession after her death until 1907, when he was ousted therefrom by the defendants in a forcible entry and detainer suit. There were other pleadings on the part of appellees, unnecessary to notice. There was a jury trial and verdict and judgment in behalf of defendants, from which all of appellants prosecuted this appeal; but at a former term of this court, on account of an insufficient appeal bond, the appeal was dismissed so far as J. W. Estes and Murphy and wife were concerned; appellant C. W. Estes being allowed to give a new appeal bond, which he did, and now alone prosecutes this appeal. See Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 174.

By his first assignment appellant contends that the verdict of the jury is clearly against the law and evidence, the great preponderance of the evidence, and directly against the admitted, agreed, and uncontradicted evidence. Appellees insist that this assignment is too general and indefinite, citing rules of Court of Civil Appeals 22 to 28, inclusive (67 S. W. xv), and likewise urge that appellant's propositions thereunder are not germane to the assignment, but are a complaint of the action of the court in excluding certain evidence, citing in support thereof rules 30 to 32 of Court of Civil Appeals (67 S. W. xvi); Railway Co. v. Taylor (Tex. Civ. App.) 58 S. W. 166; Oil Co. v. Disborough (Tex. Civ. App.) 83 S. W. 1004; Railroad Co. v. Norris (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 950. We are inclined to agree with appellees in this contention and hold that the assignment is too general to require further consideration at our hands.

The second assignment of error merely urges that the court erred in several rulings in excluding legal and competent evidence offered in behalf of plaintiffs to the jury, to the great prejudice of the plaintiffs, all of which was duly excepted to by the plaintiffs, referring to bills of exception. The propositions under this assignment are likewise general and indefinite, failing to specify with certainty the particular error complained of. Appellees also except to this assignment, because of its failure to specify the particular errors complained of. For the same reasons assigned above, we think this objection well taken, because it has been frequently held that assignments of error which do not identify the particular proceedings complained of in the record, as required by the rules, are not sufficient and cannot be reviewed. See rules 25 and 26, Court of Civil Appeals (67 S. W. xv); Swift v. Bruce, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 92, 71 S. W. 321.

The third assignment complains that the court in its charge omitted to make a full and correct statement of appellant's material allegations in his first supplemental petition. We have examined the charge, and, while it may have omitted to incorporate all of the issues raised by the pleadings, yet it is not compulsory upon the judge to set out any more of the pleadings of the parties in his charge than he may deem necessary. Besides, it was the duty of appellant, if dissatisfied therewith, to have prepared and presented a special charge covering the supposed defect, and, failing so to do, he is not in a position to complain. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co. v. Lehmberg, 75 Tex. 66, 12 S. W. 838.

By the fourth assignment it is insisted that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury the charges requested by appellant, because they were properly and clearly the law arising on the issues and the evidence, were absolutely necessary, and, the court having failed to give any equivalent charge, wrought fatal injury to plaintiffs. By his fifth assignment it is urged that the court erred in every paragraph of its charge from the fourth to the ninth, twelfth to the sixteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second paragraphs, because they were not warranted by the issues raised or the proof made in the trial of the case. There is no statement whatever under the fourth assignment, and the statement under the fifth does not undertake to set out the charges complained of. These assignments complain of several separate and distinct charges of the court, embracing different propositions of law. It has frequently been held that an assignment of error combining several propositions of law as one proposition is in violation of the rules. See Street v. Robertson, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 222, 66 S. W. 1120. Besides this, both of these assignments are subject to the objection that they are indefinite and too general, and, in addition thereto, they are not followed by such statements as the law requires. It is therefore not incumbent upon us to search the entire record in order to ascertain whether or not there may have been possible error committed, especially in view of the objection to their consideration on the part of appellees.

Because no such error has been pointed out by appellant as will require a reversal of the judgment, the same is, in all things, affirmed.

Affirmed.

MONTGOMERY v. AMSLER et al.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 21, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1909.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 11*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION.

That a broker having a contract with the owner of land for the sale thereof had an understanding with plaintiff, another broker, that, if plaintiff would send him a purchaser to whom a sale was made, the profits should be divided, no expenses or losses or profits to be shared unless a sale was effected by their joint efforts, did not make the parties partners, so as to render notice to the other broker of defects in the title notice to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action by a land broker for commissions, the erroneous admission of evidence showing notice to plaintiff of defects in defendant's title was harmless, where other evidence showed that plaintiff had such notice or had knowledge of facts sufficient to put a prudent person on inquiry, and which, if followed with reasonable diligence, would have resulted in his learning of the defects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161-4166; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

3. BROKERS (§ 61*)—DEFECTS IN TITLE—NOTICE.

That a land broker was told by the owner that defects had been found in the title, but that he believed it was good, as they had owned the land 30 or 40 years, was sufficient to put the broker on inquiry and charge him with notice of the defects; the statement by the owner that the title was good for the reason given being merely an expression of opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

4. BROKERS (§ 61*)—COMMISSIONS—DEFECTS IN TITLE.

A broker knowing at the time he undertakes to sell land of defects in the title cannot hold the owner responsible for the failure of the sale of a portion of the land because of such defects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

5. ESTOPPEL (§ 63*)—GROUNDS.

In an action by a land broker for commissions on the sale of land at $4 per acre, under a contract by which he was to receive all of the purchase price in excess of $2.50 per acre, a plea that after the purchaser offered $3 per acre, and said offer was rejected, and before the sale at $4, plaintiff demanded of defendant 50 cents per acre as his compensation, and that defendant, when he sold the land at $4 per acre, did so believing that plaintiff would demand no more than 50 cents per acre as his compensation, did not show an estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where plaintiff was not entitled under any phase of the evidence to recover more than the amount awarded him, error in overruling an exception to a certain plea was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4102; Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

7. BROKERS (§ 63*)—COMMISSIONS.

On the wrongful refusal of defendants to complete a sale of land made by plaintiff, a broker, in accordance with his contract, they became liable to him in the amount to which he would have been entitled under the contract had they ratified the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 79, 81, 94-96; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

8. BROKERS (§ 87*)—ACTION FOR COMMISSIONS—DAMAGES.

Where a broker sued on his contract for commissions, his damages were limited to those he sustained by the breach of the contract, and he was not entitled to any part of the profits made by defendants on a subsequent sale of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 131; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

Alleged error in the refusal of an instruction will not be considered, where it is not copied or referred to in the statement following the assignment, and the contents are not shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 500*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

An assignment of error complaining of the refusal to give certain instructions will be overruled, where the record does not show that appellant requested the instructions indicated in the assignment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2298; Dec. Dig. § 500.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Any error in the instructions was harmless to plaintiff, where he recovered all he was entitled to under the undisputed evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4225-4228; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

12. BROKERS (§ 7*)—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

Where defendant, in reply to plaintiff's letter informing him that he thought he could sell defendant's land under certain conditions, wrote plaintiff that he would sell the land for $2.50 per acre, net cash, and that he would write the deed to include plaintiff's profits, there was an employment of plaintiff as broker to sell the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 5-8; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

13. BROKERS (§ 44*)—AUTHORITY TO SELL—WITHDRAWAL.

Though defendant reserved the right to withdraw at any time authority given plaintiff as a broker to sell land, he could not, having known that plaintiff was continuing his efforts to find a purchaser, and spending time and money in so doing, keep silent and withdraw his offer after plaintiff had procured a purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 45; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

† Writ of error denied by Supreme Court.

Amsler, and L. D. Amsler to recover the sum of $5,815.50, alleged to be due appellant as commission or compensation for his services in the sale of 3,877 acres of land owned by appellees. Plaintiff alleges, in substance: That he contracted with appellees to procure a purchaser for said land, and did procure such purchaser in the person of one D. A. Odell, to whom defendants sold said land at the price of $4 per acre; that plaintiff was the procuring cause of such sale; and that by the terms of their contract with plaintiff the defendants agreed and promised to pay to him, in consideration of his services in procuring such purchaser, whatever amount they might receive for said land over and above the sum of $2.50 per acre. The defendants answered by general demurrer and general denial and by special pleas, in which they averred, in substance: "(1) That defendants withdrew, annulled, and terminated plaintiff's right and authority under said contract before a contract of sale was entered into. (2) That the sale as made was made by defendant, and not according to the terms of said contract of agency. (3) That said sale was not made through the efforts of plaintiff, nor were plaintiff's efforts the procuring cause thereof. (4) That plaintiff was acting as agent of the purchaser in said sale. (5) That a part of the land so contracted for was rejected by the purchaser on account of defective title, and that plaintiff knew of said defect when he procured the purchaser. (6) That plaintiff is estopped from claiming more than 50 cents per acre, because, after the purchaser had offered $3 per acre, and said offer had been rejected by defendant, and before the sale at $4 per acre had been made, plaintiff demanded of defendant 50 cents per acre as his compensation, and that defendant, when he sold said land to the purchaser at $4 per acre, did so believing that plaintiff would demand no more than 50 cents per acre as compensation."

Plaintiff directed general demurrer to defendants' answer and special exceptions to that portion of it which seeks to set up and plead an estoppel against plaintiff's cause of action for more than 50 cents per acre commission or compensation, on the grounds that same is insufficient as a plea of estoppel, and the matters therein pleaded constituted no answer or defense to plaintiff's cause, and asked that the same be stricken from said answer. To defendants' answer plaintiff replied: (1) By general denial; (2) that defendants represented to him at the time of his employment by them that they had good title to said land and all of it, and that he relied upon said assertions and believed that they did have good title; (3) that Odell contracted to buy all of said land of defendants at $4 per acre, and that if he failed or refused to buy any portion of said land it was because the defendants did not have a good and marketable title to the land which he refused to buy; (5) plaintiff admits that he made the demand for 50 cents per acre as his compensation, but says that the same was made after the purchaser procured by him had offered defendants $3 per acre cash for all of said lands and defendants had refused to convey, and before plaintiff knew that said land had been sold to the said Odell at $4 per acre; (6) that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale of said land at $4 per acre. Upon the trial in the court below, the trial judge instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $962.66, which amount was the aggregate of 50 cents per acre for all of the land sold by the defendants to Odell. Upon the return of such verdict judgment was rendered in accordance therewith.

The facts disclosed by the record are as follows: In August, 1906, appellee owned a body of land situated near Magnolia, in Montgomery county, Tex., supposed at the time to aggregate about 3,877 acres, but which in fact aggregated 3,867 acres. Said body of land consisted of the following tracts: 1,280 acres in the Jno. W. Niles survey; 441 acres in the James Pierpont survey; 580 acres in the James M. Hamm survey; 668 acres in the Wm. Stansbury survey; and 898 acres in the R. O. Lusk survey. Jno. C. Amsler is now, and has been ever since and prior to August, 1906, the general agent and manager for appellees, with full power and authority to contract in relation to said lands in behalf of appellees. Appellant is, and was at the time mentioned in the evidence, a land broker, residing in Conroe, Montgomery county, Tex., and known to be such by appellee and her agent, Jno. C. Amsler, both of whom resided, and still reside, in Hempstead, Waller county, Tex.

On August 25, 1906, appellant wrote and mailed to John C. Amsler the following letter with reference to the above-mentioned lands: "Conroe, Tex., 8/25/06. J. C. Amsler, Esq., Hempstead, Tex.—Dear Sir: I have a customer who I think will take your 3,877 acres north of Magnolia on condition that he be allowed to commence cutting pine pole ties after completing purchase on that part that had been cut over. This man is a tie and timber man, and proposes to clean the land of commercial timber, and then cut it up in farms. Of course he would buy subject to Mr. Lawson's contract, and would follow Lawson's chopping, taking off the tie timber and cordwood as fast as Lawson cut over the mill timber. Can this be arranged? Kindly answer at Magnolia, and oblige. Yours truly, Jack Montgomery."

On August 30, 1906, John C. Amsler, in reply to the above letter, wrote and mailed to appellant the following letter: "Hempstead, Tex., Aug. 30, 1906. Jack Montgomery, Magnolia, Tex.—Dear Sir: Replying to your favor of the 25th, will say that we will sell our lands at $2.50 net to us cash. Will write the deed to include your profit. This is in no sense an option and subject to withdrawal at any time. Trusting that you can make a deal, we are, Yours truly, C. Amsler Estate, Jno. C."

On September 22, 1906, appellant wrote and mailed to John C. Amsler the following letter: "Conroe, Tex., Sept. 22, 1906. John C. Amsler, Esq., Hempstead, Tex.—Dear Sir: Yours of 30th ult. is to hand, and am working on your lands with good prospects of selling same. I am putting out one hundred blueprints and 500 printed folders. Mr. F. W. Colby is working with me on the proposition. Yours truly, Jack Montgomery." No reply was made by Amsler to the above letter.

On February 24, 1907, appellant wrote and mailed to John C. Amsler the following letter: "Conroe, Tex., 2/24/1907. John C. Amsler, Esq., Hempstead, Tex.—Dear Sir: Kindly advise me by return mail whether your Magnolia 3,877 acres has been sold yet. Yours truly, Jack Montgomery. P. S. I have a northern man I want to show it to next week, say about Saturday or Sunday. J. M."

John C. Amsler replied to the above letter by writing on the bottom thereof, as follows: "Dear Sir: The land is still unsold. Although I have been dickering with some parties, there is no option. Yours truly, John C. Amsler."

On February 28, 1907, appellant wrote Jno. C. Amsler the following letter, to which Amsler made no reply: "Conroe, Tex., 2/28/07. Jno. C. Amsler, Hempstead, Tex.—Dear Sir: I have just returned from Magnolia, where I showed your lands to two parties from Wisconsin. They did not express themselves very favorably, but may call on you for better terms than I was authorized to grant them. Kindly protect me in the premises, as I priced it to them at $3.50 cash. Yours truly, Jack Montgomery."

On March 19, 1907, appellant sent from Houston, Tex., the following telegram to John C. Amsler: "Houston, Texas, March 19, 1907. Jno. C. Amsler, Hempstead, Texas. Sold your land subject to your approval of terms. Coming on morning train with buyer. Jack Montgomery."

Appellant testified, in substance: That upon receipt of Amsler's letter of August 30, 1906, above quoted, he (appellant) began an active campaign of advertisement of said lands for sale, by sending out folders and blueprints and carrying advertisements in northern and western papers, etc., and continued working on the matter, trying to effect a sale, all fall and winter; that on March 16, or 17, 1907, he showed the land to D. A. Odell of Minnesota, who agreed with appellant to buy same at $3 per acre, partly cash and partly on credit, and thereupon appellant and Odell went to Houston, Tex., and from the latter place appellant sent Amsler the telegram of March 19th, as before quoted. Odell was not the customer referred to by appellant in his letter to Amsler of date August 25th, above quoted. There is nothing in the evidence showing, or tending to show, that appellee, or her agent, John C. Amsler, had any notice or knowledge of appellant's activities relating to procuring a purchaser for said lands, or that he was acting, or purporting to act, in appellee's behalf, save and except such as the correspondence above set out discloses. On March 20, 1907, appellant and Odell went to Hempstead, where they had a conversation with J. C. Amsler, in the course of which Odell offered to buy said lands at $3 per acre, partly cash and partly on credit, which offer was refused by Amsler. Thereupon Odell offered to buy said lands at $3 per acre cash, which was likewise refused. Appellant details such conversation as follows: "John C. Amsler came to the bank in a short time, and we took the matter up with him. He made no objections to the terms of part cash and part credit. He refused to deliver at $3 per acre. I then had a consultation with Odell, and at my request he offered $3 per acre all cash for the land. This offer was also refused by John C. Amsler. I spread my letters on the bank table and stated to Mr. Amsler that he knew he had authorized me to sell the land at that price. Mr. Amsler replied: 'Yes, I did; but I reserved the right to withdraw the land from your charge at any time.' I replied: 'Yes; but have you ever withdrawn it?' He replied: 'No, but I withdraw it now.'" John C. Amsler gives the following version of said conversation: "The day Mr. Montgomery and Mr. Odell came up here I was serving on the jury. When they first came up, I could not talk to them, but after a while I got off the jury and went down town to the bank, where they were, and we talked the matter over; but as soon as they spoke of the price at $3 per acre I refused it. I never would agree to that price for the reason that lands in that vicinity had gone up in value since I wrote the letter to Mr. Montgomery of August 30th. It seems that Mr. Montgomery had represented to Mr. Odell that he (Montgomery) had an option on the land, for I remember Mr. Odell saying to Montgomery, 'Why, I thought you said you had an option on the land,' and Mr. Montgomery pulled out his letter from me of August 30, 1906, and spread it before us and said, 'Here is my option.' Mr. Odell said, 'That is no option.' I had reserved the right in my letter to Mr. Montgomery to withdraw that price at any time, and I did so that day. Mr. Odell at first wanted to pay one-third cash and the balance in one and two years, and then he offered $3 cash for the land. I priced the land to them that day at $4, or it might have been $5 per acre for some, and $4 per acre for the balance. * * * When Mr. Montgomery and Mr. Odell were in the bank, Mr. Odell offered to buy the land at $3 per acre, and I refused the same. Mr. Montgomery said, 'You promised to deliver it at $2.50 per acre.' I said, 'Yes, I gave you that price six or seven months ago; but lands have gone up since, and I won't sell at that price now. I expressly reserved the right to withdraw at any time.' He said, 'You have never written me that you have withdrawn it.' I said, 'Well, I withdraw it now,' and walked out. Lands of that character in that community, in the vicinity where these lands lay, had at that time risen to from $4 to $6 per acre." After the above conversation, appellant and Odell departed from Hempstead, and afterwards, on March 23d, Odell, of his own volition, came back to Hempstead, and he and Amsler finally agreed upon and executed a contract of sale for said lands at $4 per acre, partly cash and partly on credit. Pursuant to such contract of sale, appellee conveyed by warranty deed, to said Odell, the 1,280 acres in the Jno. W. Niles survey and the 441 acres in the James Pierpont survey for $4 per acre, one-third cash, and balance in one and two years; but the lands in the Hamm, Stansbury, and Lusk surveys were rejected by Odell because of defects in appellee's title thereto.

John C. Amsler testified: "I made a trip down to Magnolia, Tex., to look after my mother's business down there. It was either July or August, 1906. I met Mr. Jack Montgomery at Magnolia, Tex., and he asked me if I had disposed of those overcut lands. I told him no; that I had given Mr. Colby an option on that land. It was for either 30, 60, or 90 days. That after a great deal of persuasion on Mr. Colby's part I had extended that option, and during that time I was continuously getting letters from Mr. Colby that the prospects were good. That he had taken his wife, and they were spending the winter in Missouri, and in the meantime I had an abstract made and had given them to Mr. Colby. I remember having the conversation with Mr. Montgomery prior to August 25, 1906. I told him that the deal with Mr. Colby had failed to materialize; that it did not go through; that Mr. Colby had found some defects in the title to the land (which is the same in controversy); that Mr. Colby raised a lot of complaint about it. Mr. Montgomery told me, at the same time, that he had a great many old lands in that condition, and that he had been quite successful in patching them up. I told Mr. Montgomery that we had owned the land for 30 or 40 years, and for that reason I thought the title was good."

Appellant testified: "Yes, I remember having a conversation at Magnolia with Jno. C. Amsler before I took the agency for the sale of this land. Yes, I remember that in this conversation with Mr. Amsler he stated that Mr. Colby had complained about some minor defects in Amsler's title to some of the land; but he (Amsler) in that conversation assured me that their title to it was good, stating that they had owned all of it for 35 or 40 years. I knew absolutely nothing about their title to it and supposed it was good. There are minor defects in nearly all titles to lands in these older surveys; but they rarely ever prove to be serious. We can usually remedy them by getting proof of heirship, etc., and have record made of same."

The first assignment of error presented in appellant's brief is as follows: "The court erred in admitting the letter from Colby to Amsler in evidence, because it does not show, or tend to show, that plaintiff had either actual or constructive knowledge of defects in defendant's title that existed at the time of writing said letter by Colby."

The letter referred to in the assignment was written by Colby to Amsler on July 12, 1906, and contained this statement: "When I wrote you that your abstract showed two serious defects and asked you to explain same to relieve my mind, and you declined to do so, I of course stopped my advertising at the end of the contracts." This letter was offered and admitted for the purpose of showing that appellant had notice at the time he entered into the contract with appellees that the title to some of the land he was authorized to sell was defective. The theory upon which it was admitted was that the evidence shows that at the time it was written, and at the time appellant contracted with appellees, he and Colby were partners, and, the letter containing an admission by Colby that he had notice of the defects in appellees' title, such admission was evidence against appellant on the ground that he was charged with notice of any fact known to his partner in the undertaking. We do not think the letter was admissible as evidence of notice on the part of appellant of defects in appellees' title. The evidence fails to show that appellant and Colby were ever partners in a legal sense, so that either would be bound by the acts of the other, or that notice to one would be notice to the other. The relation between them is thus stated by appellant: "Yes, when Mr. Colby had the agency for this land, he and I were working on it together. I was to share the expenses with him of trying to sell it, and we were to divide the profits, if sale was made by our efforts, and when I got this agency for it we worked the same way. Mr. Colby had a contract of agency from Amsler to sell this same land prior to the time I got this contract. He and I were partners in the matter. We shared the burdens, losses, and expenses, and were to share the profits if a sale had been made; but none was made. If either of us made the sale, both would have shared in the profits. This same kind of an arrangement existed between Mr. Colby and myself in relation to my contract of agency with Amsler. We are partners in this matter. We shared the burdens, losses, and expenses, and also the profits, if there are any profits." On redirect examination the witness testified as follows: "I wish to explain my testimony of yesterday with reference to Mr. Colby and myself being partners. We were what you would probably call 'associate brokers.' It is this way: When a land broker gets an agency for a tract of land, he sends it out to other brokers, and whichever one of them brings him a purchaser, if either of them does so, they share the profits of the sale after deducting the expenses. When Mr. Colby got this agency, he sent his list to me, as well as to many other brokers, and if I had succeeded in helping him to make the sale—that is, if I had brought him a buyer, or put him in correspondence with a buyer, who purchased the land—I would have shared the profits of the sale after the expenses had been deducted. If no sale was made, as was the case while Colby had the agency, then each of us bear his own expenses. That was the arrangement between Mr. Colby and myself while he had the contract. When I got the agency, I sent it out to a great many other brokers, most of them in the north and west, and sent one to Colby. Colby brought Mr. Odell, and because of that fact he was entitled to share in the profits; but he looks to me, and not to Amsler, for his share. If any other broker had brought me the purchaser, or if I had found him myself without Colby's help, Colby would have had no share whatever in the profits."

While the original testimony of appellant might be sufficient to show that he and Colby were partners in the undertaking to sell appellees' land, in that they were to share in the profits and losses of the undertaking, his explanation on redirect examination shows that they were not. Appellant was not a party to the contract between appellees and Colby at the time the letter was written, and Colby was not a party to the contract between appellant and appellees. During the existence of Colby's contract, he had an understanding with appellant to the effect that, if appellant should send him a purchaser for the land, and a sale was made to such purchaser, he would share the profits of the sale with appellant. After Colby's contract with appellee expired, and appellant entered into his contract with them, he had a similar understanding with Colby. Under this agreement between them there was to be no sharing of the expenses or losses incurred by them, or of the profits, unless a sale of the property was effected by their joint efforts. An agreement by one person to give another a share in the profits of an undertaking as compensation for services to be rendered, provided such services contribute to the success of the undertaking, does not make such persons partners, and this is the relation shown to have existed between appellant and Colby. We think, however, that the error in admitting this testimony was immaterial because other evidence before set out shows that appellant at the time he made the contract with appellees had notice of the defects in appellee's title, or had knowledge of facts sufficient to put a prudent person on inquiry, which, if followed with reasonable diligence, would have resulted in his ascertainment of knowledge of the defects in the title.

Appellee J. C. Amsler testified that, when the appellant first spoke to him in regard to selling the land for him, he told appellant: "That Colby had found defects in the title to the land; that Mr. Colby raised a lot of complaint about it. Mr. Montgomery told me at the same time that he had a great many old titles in that condition, and that he had been quite successful in patching them up. I told Mr. Montgomery that we had owned the land for 30 or 40 years, and for that reason I thought the title was good." The appellant admits that he had this conversation with Amsler; the only difference between his statement and Amsler's being that appellant states that Amsler spoke of the defects complained of by Colby as "minor defects," and that Amsler in that conversation stated that their title to it was good, that they had owned it for all of "35 or 40 years." No other reasonable interpretation can be given this testimony as a whole than that the assurance of Amsler that the title was good was nothing more than the expression of his opinion that, because appellees had held a title to the land for a long time, said title was good, notwithstanding the defects claimed by Colby to exist therein. The facts shown by this testimony were sufficient to put appellant upon inquiry, and that he would have learned of the defects in the title if he had used any diligence in making inquiry cannot be questioned. Such being the case, he is charged with notice of the defects in the title. Having this notice at the time he undertook to sell the land for appellees, he cannot hold appellees responsible for the failure of the sale of a portion of the land because of defects in the title. He undertook to sell the land with the defective title, and the failure to do so was not the fault of appellees.

This disposes of all of the assignments complaining of the ruling of the court in permitting the letter above mentioned to be introduced in evidence. The objections to the testimony of the appellee Amsler above set out, presented under appellant's tenth assignment, to the effect that the testimony was inadmissible because the statement made by Amsler as to the defects in the title was too vague and indefinite to put appellant upon notice, and because said testimony shows that Amsler told appellant that the title was good, and appellant was therefore not required to pursue the inquiry further, cannot be sustained. What we have before said in regard to this testimony disposes of the objection that it was too vague and indefinite to put appellant upon inquiry.

In regard to the second objection it is sufficient to say that the testimony objected to does not show that Amsler assured appellant that the title was good. All that he said was that appellees had owned the land for 30 or 40 years, and for that reason he thought the title was good. Appellants having been informed that Colby had complained of defects in the title to the land, ordinary prudence required of him that he should not rest satisfied with the mere opinion of Amsler that the title was good because appellees had owned the land 30 or 40 years.

The trial court erred in not sustaining appellant's exception to the plea of estoppel set out in appellees' answer. The facts pleaded do not constitute an estoppel. This error is immaterial, however, because appellant was not entitled under any phase of the evidence to recover more than the amount awarded him by the jury, and therefore was not injured by the error of the court in overruling the exceptions to the plea. The only sale effected by appellant was the one to Odell for $3 per acre which appellees declined to ratify. It does not appear that appellant made any further effort to sell the land, or that he could have sold to Odell for cash for any greater amount. Under his contract with appellees he was only to receive the excess over and above a cash consideration to appellees of $2.50 per acre, and the evidence shows that the cash consideration received by appellees in the sale made by them to Odell was less than that amount. This sale not having been made by appellant, and not being made in accordance with the terms of his contract, he would not be entitled to recover the compensation therefor named in his contract. Upon the wrongful refusal of appellees to complete the sale made by appellant to Odell in accordance with the terms of the contract, they became liable to appellant in the amount which he would have been entitled under the contract had they ratified the sale. Appellant's rights became then fixed, and would not be changed by a subsequent sale by the appellees upon terms different from those contained in the contract with appellant. Appellant sued upon his contract, and the liability of the appellees to him is limited to the damages which he sustained by the breach of said contract, and this breach was the refusal of the appellees to ratify the sale made by him to Odell. He is not entitled to recover any part of the profits that appellees may have made by the subsequent sale of the land to Odell.

The twelfth assignment of error complains of the refusal of the trial court to give special instruction No. 1, requested by plaintiff. The special instruction mentioned in this assignment is not copied or referred to in the statement following the assignment, nor are its contents shown. The statement is clearly insufficient to entitle the assignment to consideration.

The thirteenth and fourteenth assignments complain of the refusal of the court to give certain instructions to the jury. The record does not show that plaintiff made any request that the court instruct the jury as indicated in the assignment, and for this reason the assignment should be overruled. In addition to this, as before said, appellant recovered a judgment for the full amount to which he was entitled under the undisputed evidence, and therefore any error in the submission of the case to the jury would have been harmless.

We find no reversible error in any of the assignments presented by appellant, and all of them are overruled.

Under an appropriate cross-assignment, the appellees urge that the judgment of the court below be reversed because "the evidence was insufficient to establish such a contract of employment or appointment by appellees of appellant, as broker, to find a purchaser for appellees' land," as would entitle him to recover thereon. We think this assignment is without merit. When appellee J. C. Amsler, in reply to appellant's letter of August 25th, informing him that the writer thought he could sell the land for him under certain conditions, wrote appellant that he would sell the land for $2.50 (per acre) net cash, and that "he would write the deed to include appellant's profits," he thereby agreed and contracted that, if appellant should find a purchaser for the land who would pay appellees $2.50 per acre cash therefor, appellant could have as profits, or compensation for his services, whatever amount in excess of $2.50 per acre he might receive for the land. All of the correspondence between the parties indicates that appellant was acting under this understanding of the contract, and appellee Amsler does not deny in this testimony that such was the contract, but claims that by the terms of the contract he had the right to withdraw or rescind the agreement after appellant, without any notice of an intention to rescind on the part of appellee, had fully performed his part of the contract. No such construction should be given the contract. Appellee Amsler was informed by appellant from time to time that he was continuing his efforts to procure a purchaser for the land under his contract, and appellee, knowing this fact, could not keep silent and permit appellant to continue to spend his time and money in procuring a purchaser for the land, and withdraw his offer after appellant had earned his compensation by procuring a purchaser for the land under the terms of the contract. The right to withdraw at any time reserved in the contract could not be exercised by appellee after a performance by appellant of his part of the contract.

We are of opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

STATE v. TULLER.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
June 14, 1909. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 1, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 15*)—STATUTORY OFFENSES —REPEAL—EFFECT.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3047 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1746), relating to the sale of liquors by druggists, was repealed, not merely suspended, by the adoption in a county of prohibition under the local option law, and one violating such section before the adoption of prohibition was thereafter subject to conviction under section 2392 (page 1466), providing that no offense committed previous to the repeal or amendment of any statutory provision shall be affected by such repeal or amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 19; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Caldwell County; Samuel Davis, Judge.

F. M. Tuller was convicted of violating Rev. St. 1899, § 3047 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1746), relating to the sale of liquor by druggists, and appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Wilson and Garland Wilson, for appellant. L. R. Kantz and D. E. Adams, for the State.

JOHNSON, J. Defendant and W. H. Edwards, who, as partners, were conducting a drug store in Caldwell county, were indicted for a violation of section 3047, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1746). Edwards died before trial, and the prosecution was continued against defendant alone. The trial resulted in a conviction, and the cause is here on the appeal of defendant.

The alleged offense was committed in October, 1907, and defendant was indicted December 4th of that year. After the offense, but before the trial, a "local option" election was held in Caldwell county, and the vote was in favor of prohibition. It is conceded the election and proceedings were regular, and that prohibition became effective in that county December 16, 1907. The trial was had in June, 1908. Defendant contends that the effect of the adoption of prohibition in Caldwell county after the date of the offense and before the trial was to relieve defendant of criminal responsibility for the offense, under the common-law rule that there can be no legal conviction for an offense unless the act be contrary to law at the time it is committed, nor can there be a judgment unless the law is in force at the time of the indictment and judgment. Defendant argues that the provisions of section 2392, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1466), that "no offense committed and no fine, penalty or forfeiture incurred or prosecution commenced or pending previous to or at the time when any statutory provision shall be repealed or amended, shall be affected by such repeal or amendment," has no application here for the reason that the effect of the adoption of prohibition under the local option law was to suspend, not to repeal, the operation of the druggist act in Caldwell county, and, consequently, that section 2392 does not apply, since it relates only to repealed or amended laws.

This precise question was before the St. Louis Court of Appeals in State v. Walker, 129 Mo. App. 371, 108 S. W. 615, and was decided adversely to the contention of defendant; but the decision was deemed to be in conflict with the majority opinion of this court in State v. Winfield, 65 Mo. App. 602, and on that account the cause was certified to the Supreme Court. A careful investigation of the question convinces us of the correctness of the conclusion of the St. Louis court, and we refer to the opinion of Judge Goode in that case for a full expression of the views we entertain. To the extent that it may be in conflict with the present ruling, the decision in the Winfield Case is overruled.

Point is made that the verdict and judgment are not supported by evidence; but we find the evidence sufficient to sustain a conviction. State v. Quinn, 40 Mo. App. 627. Further, we find that the instructions given the jury properly stated the law of the case.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 1109, 1130*)—APPEAL—ABSTRACT—BRIEF.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2716 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1595), providing that no assignment of error or joinder in error shall be necessary on any appeal or writ of error, in a criminal case, etc., but the court shall without delay render judgment on the record before them, where defendant presents a complete record of the case, with the evidence, instructions, verdict, judgment, and motion for new trial and in arrest of judgment, and the ruling on them and the order granting an appeal, the appeal will not be dismissed for failure to file an abstract of the case and brief and argument.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Caldwell County; Francis H. Trimble, Judge.

F. M. Tuller was convicted of illegally selling liquor, and appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Wilson, for appellant. D. E. Adams, for the State.

BROADDUS, P. J. At the November term, 1907, of the circuit court of Caldwell county, the defendant was indicted by the grand jury of the county for the illegal sale of whisky. The indictment was in three counts. In the first count he was charged with the illegal sale of whisky as a dramshop keeper. In the second and third counts he was charged with the illegal sale of whisky as a licensed druggist. The prosecuting attorney dismissed as to the first count of the indictment, and the cause was tried before a jury on the charges contained in the second and third counts, and defendant was convicted on both counts. The defendant in due time filed motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, which were overruled by the court, and judgment entered on the verdict of the jury. The defendant appealed. He has filed no abstract of the case and no brief and argument in this court. The state has moved to dismiss the appeal for such failure; but the motion is overruled.

Section 2716, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1595), governing appeals in criminal cases, expressly provides that: "No assignment of error or joinder in error shall be necessary upon any appeal or writ of error, in a criminal case issued or taken," etc.; "but the court shall proceed upon the return thereof without delay, and render judgment upon the record before them." The defendant has presented to the court a complete record of the case, including the trial, with the evidence, instructions, verdict, judgment, and his motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, and the ruling of the court upon them and the order granting an appeal. In the pursuance of the mandate of the statute, we have examined the record, and find: That the indictment is sufficient; that the evidence justified the defendant's conviction of the crime with which he was charged; that there was no error in the admission or rejection of evidence; and that defendant had a fair and impartial trial.

Wherefore the cause is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cooper County. Action by James M. Rippetoe against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. P. B. Jackson, for appellant. W. M. Williams and Roy D. Williams, for respondent.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while working for defendant as engineer of a steam ditcher in use on defendant's railroad. The ditcher was set on wheels placed on rails laid on two flat cars, fastened together, which formed a part of one of defendant's trains. At the time of the accident it was standing on a side track. A crane was attached to the machinery with a bucket fastened to the end which operated as a shovel, and which took up the earth from the sides of the railroad, and deposited it on flat cars in the train. The crane moved in its station laterally and perpendicularly at the will of the engineer on application of power derived from the engine. The cars when loaded were moved away by an engine, and, after being unloaded at some other place, were returned to the ditcher to be again filled. Before being moved, the loaded cars were uncoupled from the ditcher. On the day in question the engine used to move the cars upon which the ditcher was carried from place to place came in on the side track to couple up with the cars upon which the ditcher was stationed. Plaintiff was on the flat car at the south end of the ditcher, and in the act of stepping up on the ditcher to his place as engineer, when the other cars of the work train attached to the engine struck the cars, carrying the ditcher, causing it to move south on the rails lying on the flat cars. Plaintiff's evidence tends to prove that, immediately before he was injured, he went under the machine to take some measurements; that, before doing so, he set the levers to keep the engine in place; that he supposed that in so setting the levers that they would hold the ditcher in its place as it had for some time previously; that the engine, when it coupled other cars to the cars upon which the ditcher was stationed in the usual manner, would not move the ditcher on the flat cars more than two or three inches; that plaintiff, after coming from under the ditcher, was about to step up to his place as engineer, and was in front and on the south side of the ditcher, when the engine came in on the side track from the south, going north to couple with the flat cars carrying said ditcher, and struck them with unusual and extraordinary and unnecessary force; and that in consequence the ditcher moved forward a foot or more, running over both his feet, and mutilating the left foot so badly that an amputation became necessary, whereby he lost one foot. His evidence tended to show that his position at the time was the proper one; that it was convenient to step on the rail lying on the flat car, and then up to his place on the ditcher; that he was standing at least a foot in advance of the wheels of the ditcher; that it had been his custom to stand at this place while couplings were being made, and that it had not at such times moved much forward; and that the force of a coupling ordinarily made would not have moved the ditcher to the place where plaintiff was standing. The petition alleges that "defendant's said servants and agents in charge of said locomotive engine carelessly and negligently caused the engine and car attached thereto to suddenly strike the flat cars upon which said steam ditcher was standing with great, unnecessary and unusual force and violence, and, by reason of said carelessness and negligence in causing said cars to come together with sudden force and violence, said steam ditcher was thrown or moved forward in the direction of said engine and caused to run over and crush plaintiff's feet," etc. The answer was a general denial, except as to the allegations of the petition that defendant was a corporation, and was operating and controlling the railroad in question. The defendant's evidence tended to prove that the coupling in question was not made with unusual force and violence. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $3,000, upon which judgment was rendered, and defendant appealed.

The defendant contends that the court erred in the admission of the evidence of witness Moss as to what defendant's witness Schaffer said to him on a former occasion. Schaffer was asked if he did not tell Moss that his testimony could easily cause plaintiff in the case to win or lose it. His answer was that: "I may have been joshing, or something like that. I don't believe I made it to the best of my recollection." When Moss was questioned as to the statement, defendant's attorney objected to the statement because it did not pertain to any material issue in the case. We think it was material. It went to show want of candor and truth on the part of Schaffer. It went to impeach his credibility. This is always admissible.

The defendant insists that plaintiff failed to make out such a case as entitled him to go to the jury; but, as plaintiff introduced evidence that went to prove the allegation of negligence and the extent of the injury he sustained by reason of such negligence, it is useless to discuss the question. Defendant's counsel has argued the matter with much skill and great length, but, after all, we do not feel impressed with the correctness of his views.

An instruction given at the instance of plaintiff is criticised by defendant and alleged to be erroneous. The instruction is in the following language: "The jury are instructed that if they believe from the evidence that on or about the 15th day of June, 1905, plaintiff was in defendant's employ as engineer of a steam ditcher, and that said steam ditcher was set on wheels or rollers and placed on two flat cars fastened together, and which formed a part of one of defendant's work trains, and was being used in improving and repairing defendant's roadbed on the Columbia branch of defendant's railroad, and that while the flat cars carrying said steam ditcher were upon a side track defendant's servant in charge of its locomotive engine used in connection with said work train moved said locomotive engine and some cars attached thereto to the side track upon which said flat cars carrying said ditcher were standing, and undertook to couple the cars attached to said locomotive engine to said flat cars, and carelessly and negligently caused the cars attached to said locomotive engine to suddenly strike the flat cars upon which said ditcher was standing with great, unnecessary, and unusual force and violence, and that, by reason of the carelessness and negligence of defendant's said locomotive engineer in causing said cars to come together with such force and violence, said steam ditcher was moved forward on said flat cars in the direction of the locomotive engine, and was thereby, in consequence of said carelessness and negligence, caused to run over and injure plaintiff's right and left foot, while plaintiff was in the exercise of reasonable care, then plaintiff is entitled to recover, and the verdict should be in his favor." The criticism is that the words "carelessly and negligently" mean nothing in an instruction, and that they have the effect to turn "the jury loose to reach a conclusion upon any theory that may seem sufficient to them without advising them as to what the law requires." It would be better in all cases of negligence for the court to tell the jury what constituted negligence or carelessness; but that duty is often omitted. The appellate courts, however, hold that it is not necessary in all cases, for the reason that a jury of ordinary intelligence understand the meaning well enough. Defendant, however, is in no condition to complain as the court in instruction numbered 2, given at its instance, also left it to the jury to interpret the expression. Moreover, if defendant had desired a more specific instruction as to that, it should have asked for it. Ashby v. Gravel Road Co., 111 Mo. App. 79, 85 S. W. 957; Rattan v. Central Electric Ry. Co., 120 Mo. App. 270, 96 S. W. 735.

The court refused to give defendant's instruction numbered 4, which contains a proper theory of the case from the defendant's standpoint; but as instruction 9, given by defendant, contains the same elements, there was no error in the refusal to give the former. It is not necessary to repeat instructions to the jury. We find no error in the record.

The cause is affirmed. All concur.

STATE ex rel. DORAN v. JOHNSON COUNTY COURT.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 60*)—PETITION FOR LICENSE—DUTY OF COUNTY COURT TO GRANT.

It is the mandatory duty of a county court to grant a liquor license on a petition signed in accordance with law, by two-thirds of the qualified petitioners in a block.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

2. TIME (§ 6*)—NOTICE OF LOCAL OPTION ELECTION.

Notice of a local option election required to be published 4 consecutive weeks must be published for 28 days.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 33*)—NOTICE OF LOCAL OPTION ELECTION.

If notice of a local option election which need only be published in one paper be published in more than one, it must be published in each for the full time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 33*)—NOTICE OF LOCAL OPTION ELECTION.

If the last day of publication of notice of a local option election be the day after the election, it cannot be counted in determining the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 33*)—NOTICE OF LOCAL OPTION ELECTION.

Evidence held to show that the day of publication of a paper containing notice of a local option election was the date on which it purported to be actually published.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

6. NOTICE (§ 11*)—TIME OF PUBLICATION.

The day a notice is set up in type and printed is not the day of publication, but publication takes place when the notice is seen and read in the paper by the public, though it need not reach every member of the public at the same time; and publication will date from the day when the public begins to receive it from the publisher.

Application for mandamus by the State, on the relation of John T. Doran, against the County Court of Johnson County. An alternative writ is made peremptory.

J. W. Suddath & Sons, for relator. W. L. Chaney, Pros. Atty., and S. T. White, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This is an original proceeding in this court by mandamus seeking to compel the county court of Johnson county to issue to relator a license to keep a dramshop in the city of Warrensburg, in such county, a city of more than 2,500 inhabitants. Due return was made to the alternative writ. Relator then moved for a peremptory writ based upon the return.

The case involves the validity of a local option election held in Warrensburg on the 6th day of February, 1908, to determine whether intoxicating liquors should be sold within the limits of such city, which resulted against the sale of such liquors. Afterwards the relator, conceiving the election to have been void, presented his application and petition to the county court of that county asking a dramshop license. Whether the petition was signed by two-thirds of the qualified petitioners in the block, as required by law, was a matter of dispute between the parties in this court. Five of those who signed are conceded to have been proper petitioners. Three others signed whose right is disputed. And three were qualified who did not sign. Thus eleven names were involved. If either one of the three who signed was not a proper petitioner, then the petition contained the names of two-thirds of the qualified petitioners, as determined by the appellate courts (Scarritt v. Jackson County Court, 89 Mo. App. 595); and it was the mandatory duty of the county court to grant the license (State ex rel. v. Turner, 210 Mo. 77, 82, 107 S. W. 1064; State ex rel. v. Meyers, 80 Mo. 601; State ex rel. v. McCammon, 111 Mo. App. 626, 86 S. W. 510; Scarritt v. Jackson County, 89 Mo. App. 585).

In passing on relator's motion for a peremptory writ on respondent's return, we concluded that the record showed him entitled to the license unless the local option has been legally adopted. We found that a determination of that question involved the fact whether proper legal notice of the election had been given—that is to say, whether the publication of the notice had been made for the requisite time—and this made necessary the taking of evidence, which was heard by an officer agreed upon by the parties. The evidence has been written down and filed in court. It appears that the city authorities ordered the notice to be published in two weekly newspapers, the Weekly Journal-Democrat and the Warrensburg Daily Star. The law requires that such notice shall be published for 4 consecutive weeks, which have been repeatedly held to be for 28 days. State ex rel. v. Tucker, 32 Mo. App. 620; State v. Dobbins, 116 Mo. App. 29, 92 S. W. 136; State v. Swearingen, 128 Mo. App. 605, 107 S. W. 1; State ex rel. Gunn v. Cordell, 137 Mo. App. —, 117 S. W. 655. See, also, Young v. Downey, 150 Mo. 317, 330, 51 S. W. 751. And, while it is only necessary that it be published in one paper (either a weekly or daily), yet, if it be ordered published in more than one, it must be published in each for the full length of time. State ex rel. v. Reid, 134 Mo. App. 582, 114 S. W. 1116. The notice before us was published daily in the Daily Star for 28 days, and is conceded to have been properly published for the necessary time in that paper. But it was published in the Weekly Journal-Democrat in papers dated January 10, 17, 24, 31, and February 7, 1908, the last date being the day after the election, and proof of publication was made to the city council as of those dates. If we accept those dates as being the dates of publication, it is apparent that notice of 28 days was not had. The last day, being the day after the election, cannot be counted, and from the 10th of January to the 6th of February, the day of the election, there is not a space of 28 days to the election.

But it is sought to avoid this condition of the record by showing that in point of fact the publications were made one day ahead of each date; that is, on January 9th, 16th, 23d, 30th, and February 6th. This is the point in the case. We will not by any means say that a mere misdating of the distribution of a newspaper to the public would be conclusive of the question. Riche v. Water Co., 75 Me. 91, 97. But we do not find that an error in dates was shown by the evidence. The evidence shows that the date of the paper was regarded as the time of its publication, and was in fact its publication, though it was printed the evening before, and, when printed, it was taken to the post office between 6 and 9 o'clock p. m. for distribution through the mail. The papers for each post office throughout the county, including route men in the city of Warrensburg, were tied up in separate bundles and put in sacks at the printing office, and then some time between 6 and 9 o'clock p. m. were taken to the post office, where the bundles for other offices were taken that night by the post office force to the trains to be transported to their respective destinations, and the bundles for the "routes" in Warrensburg were delivered to route men by the postmaster the next morning, when they were distributed to the public. Clerks in the post office at Warrensburg testified that, when the papers were brought to that office (generally between 8 and 9 o'clock p. m.), those going to offices outside of Warrensburg were sent to the depot and were taken on trains east and west some time after midnight; that there were very few subscribers for the paper through the post office; that the most of the city circulation was put in the post office in bundles for "route men," who distributed them through carriers; and that the route men did not get them of the post office until next morning. A few took the paper individually through the post office, but these could only get it next morning, unless, in exceptional cases, where some one having a lock box might get his paper "late at night." We think it quite manifest from the evidence that the Journal-Democrat is actually published on the day it purports to be; that is, on the day of its date.

It would be unreasonable to say that a notice has been given when the medium of its publication is shut out from the eye of the persons for whom it is intended. To say that would justify the statement that a verbal notice was given when the thought of the notice was conceived or matured, instead of when the words were uttered. The publication of a notice in a newspaper is not the day it is set up in type and printed. It is the day that it may be seen and read in the paper by the public. Not that it must reach every member of the public, but its publication will date from the day when the public begin to receive it from the publisher. We do not think the case of Leroy v. Jamison, 15 Fed. Cas. 873, No. 8,271, and others cited by respondent, have application to the question in respondent's favor.

Respondent suggests that the Daily Star had been designated by the city authorities as the official paper for the city, and that, therefore, a proper publication in that paper would meet all requisites as to notice. We do not think the point well taken. There is a difference in the wording of the orders for publication. That in the Daily Star was "for four full consecutive weeks" while that in the Journal-Democrat was "for four consecutive weeks," omitting the word "full." Upon this difference respondent founds a suggestion that a less time was meant for the Journal-Democrat than for the Daily Star. We think there is nothing in the suggestion. Four full weeks are no more nor less than four weeks. If a week's time elapses, it is both a week and a full week.

After a careful examination of the record, we find that there was not a legal notice of the election, and that it is therefore void. We further find that relator has shown himself to be entitled to the license, and the alternative writ will be made peremptory. All concur.

CLARK et al. v. ST. JOSEPH & G. I. RY. CO.
et al.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 228*)—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—NEGLIGENT DELAY—EVIDENCE.

Proof of delay in the transportation of live stock, unaccompanied by proof that it was caused by negligence, does not prove the negligence of the carrier.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; Henry M. Ramey, Judge.

Action by William Clark and another against the St. Joseph & Grand Island Railway Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Cyrus Crane, Geo. J. Mersereau, and R. A. Brown, for appellants. Culver & Phillip, for respondents.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiffs shipped a lot of fat cattle over the road of the defendant, the Grand Island Railway Company, from Gower, Mo., to Crider Bros. Commission Company, at Kansas City, Mo., for the market at the latter place. It is alleged by plaintiffs that the Grand Island Company transported the cattle to Kansas City, and there delivered them to the defendant the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, which company received them and agreed to deliver to the commission firm aforesaid. It is alleged by plaintiffs that there was such negligent and unreasonable delay in the shipment as caused the cattle to get in the stockyards too late for the day's market they were intended for, and that they lost in weight, etc. The judgment in the trial court was for the plaintiffs.

The foregoing statement suffices for disposition of the case in the view we take of it. The ground of plaintiffs' action is negligent delay. There was no evidence to sustain that ground. Conceding that there was evidence of delay in the transportation, there was no evidence that such delay was caused by negligence, and for aught that appears in the record the delay may have been unavoidable. Negligence is not shown by mere proof of delay. There must be something more, and the burden is on the plaintiff. Ecton v. Railway Co., 125 Mo. App. 223, 102 S. W. 575; Wernick v. Railway Co., 131 Mo. App. 37, 109 S. W. 1027; Anderson v. Railway Co., 93 Mo. App. 677, 87 S. W. 707; Wright v. Railway Co., 118 Mo. App. 392, 94 S. W. 555. The reason upon which this rule is founded is fully explained in the foregoing cases. They are based on the following decisions of the Supreme Court: Witting v. Railway Co., 101 Mo. 631, 14 S. W. 743, 10 L. R. A. 602, 20 Am. St. Rep. 636; Otis Co. v. Railway Co., 112 Mo. 622, 20 S. W. 676; Stanard Milling Co. v. Transit Co., 122 Mo. 258, 20 S. W. 704.

But it is stated by plaintiff that the St. Louis Court of Appeals has decided in Libby v. Railway Co. (Mo. App.) 117 S. W. 669, that mere proof of delay made a case for the jury. The case does not so rule. The court there state that there was a delay of several hours at each of three points en route. The court state specifically that "where it appears that unreasonable delays occurred without just cause therefor, as in this case," the question of negligence is for the jury.

No case was made for the plaintiffs. We do not regard the extract from the letter of the assistant freight agent as aiding the plaintiffs' evidence in any manner.

The judgment should have been for the defendants, and it is accordingly reversed. All concur.

St. 1906, p. 3808), allowing insured, in an action on a policy to recover, in addition to the amount of the loss, damages not exceeding 10 per cent. thereof and a reasonable attorney's fee, if it appears that defendant has vexatiously refused to pay the loss, when there is competent evidence tending to prove vexatious delay, the question is for the jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by Michael Utz against the Insurance Company of North America. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reed, Atwood, Yates, Mastin & Harvey and Neville & Grier, for appellant. Brewster, Ferrell & Mayer and Culver & Phillip, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff instituted this action on a policy of insurance issued to him

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes by defendant, and recovered judgment in the trial court for loss of his property, as well as for a penalty for vexatious refusal to pay the loss. The policy covered loss of plaintiff's house in the sum of $700 and loss of piano in the sum of $300.

It is contended by defendant that plaintiff had other insurance on the piano, of which it was not advised, and that therefore the policy was avoided under specific provisions therein to that effect. The evidence, as plaintiff interprets it, shows that defendant's agent was notified of the other insurance. Defendant concedes that its agent had notice of $200 other insurance on his "furniture," but asserts that such notice was not a notice of insurance on a musical instrument, such as a piano. We do not think the point well taken. We held, in Bowne v. Insurance Co., 46 Mo. App. 473, that where there was an insurance of $1,300 on "household and kitchen furniture, useful and ornamental," it included a Japanese vase valued at $500, although it was not specifically named. In Crossman v. Baldwin, 49 Conn. 490, there was a contract to purchase "all the furniture" in a certain hotel, and it was held to include a piano. In Sumner v. Blakslee, 59 N. H. 242, 47 Am. Rep. 196, pianos were held to be included in household furniture mentioned in a chattel mortgage. In Alsop v. Jordan, 69 Tex. 300, 6 S. W. 831, 5 Am. St. Rep. 53, it was held that an exemption from execution of "household and kitchen furniture" would include a piano. In Lee v. Gorham, 165 Mass. 130, 42 N. E. 556, the statute providing that conditional sales of "furniture or other household effects" should be in writing, was held to apply to the sale of a piano. An English case involved a bequest of "all and singular the household furniture and other household effects of and belonging to the testator in the dwelling house and premises at the time of his decease." There was found in the house and premises "four fowling pieces, a pair of pistols, lathes and apparatus for turning, models of a cutter and mortar, several paintings in frames, one hundred volumes of books, an organ, a parrot and cage, a grey pony, a cow, a haystack, and a considerable stock of wines and liquors." Upon this the Vice Chancellor said that "the words 'household furniture and other household effects' will comprise all property in the house and on the premises, intended for use or consumption therein, or for the ornament thereof. Elizabeth Cole is, therefore, entitled to the pistols, to the apparatus for turning, to the models, paintings, organ, parrot, books, and wine and liquors, but not to the pony, cow, or fowling pieces, unless it is proved that they were kept for the defense of the house. If the haystack was only for use, it would pass; if for sale, it would not pass." Cole v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sim. & St. 189. It follows, from the foregoing authorities, all bearing on the very question here presented, that, when defendant's agent was notified of other insurance on plaintiff's furniture, it was notice of other insurance on his piano.

But defendant insists that it should at least be relieved of the penalty assessed under the provisions of the statute for vexatious delay. Section 8012, Rev. St. 1899 (page 3808, Ann. St. 1906). We held, in Blackwell v. Insurance Co., 80 Mo. App. 75, that to justify a penalty for delay in payment of insurance the refusal must have been without reasonable excuse, and that the mere fact of it being found at the trial that the insurance money was due the assured would not alone determine that the delay was vexatious and without cause. But, where there is competent evidence tending to prove vexatious delay, a question is made for the jury, and we must accept the verdict. In this case no excuse appears, as did in the Blackwell Case, and we think the court properly submitted the question to the jury. It has been so determined by the Supreme Court (Keller v. Insurance Co., 198 Mo. 440, 95 S. W. 903), and by this court in Kellogg v. Insurance Co., 183 Mo. App. 391, 113 S. W. 663.

On the whole record, we find no reason for disturbing the judgment, and it is accordingly affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Grundy County: G. W. Wannamaker, Judge.

Clarence Claybaugh was convicted of larceny, and appealed to the Supreme Court, which transferred the case to the Kansas City Court of Appeals on jurisdictional grounds. Reversed.

See 119 S. W. 333.

O. N. Gibson and Hubbell Bros., for appellant. Elliott W. Major, Atty. Gen., and James T. Blair, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

JOHNSON, J. Defendant was indicted, tried, and convicted for petit larceny, and was granted an appeal to the Supreme Court; but that tribunal transferred the case to this court on jurisdictional grounds. The charge in the indictment is "that Clarence Claybaugh, * * * on the ——— day of December, 1904, at the county of Grundy, state of Missouri, eleven (11) turkeys, the property of W. O. Garnand, of the value of $17.50, did unlawfully steal, take, and carry away; he, the said Clarence Claybaugh, then and there having no right or interest in said turkeys," etc. The record is very voluminous. The contest arose between neighboring farmers over the ownership of 11 turkeys, and the whole countryside appears to have participated in the trial. This great neighborhood ado must have disconcerted the court, since throughout the trial, and particularly in the instructions given the jury, we find the principal ingredient of the offense of larceny—i. e., a criminal intent—was entirely ignored, and the cause was tried as though it were one in replevin, or for conversion. The one great issue, fought at white heat, was whether the turkeys in controversy were Claybaugh's or Garnand's. The jury, immersed by the evidence in a mass of circumstances and details, emerged with a verdict that the turkeys were Garnand's, and convicted the defendant, a very young man, of spotless reputation and the mainstay of his widowed mother.

We shall not attempt to detail the "facts and circumstances." To do so would make this opinion as long as the briefs of counsel, and would but serve to confuse. The principal facts thus may be stated: The Claybaughs, Garnands, and Renfros, neighboring families, raised turkeys in the year 1904. The Garnand and Renfro broods were hatched by turkey hens, and, after the manner of their kind, became nomadic and predatory. They came home at rare intervals, and their owners seldom saw them. Most of the Claybaugh turkeys were hatched and mothered by chicken hens, and, under the wise guidance of their mothers, stayed at home and led a purely domestic life. As Thanksgiving Day approached, the Garnands and Renfros began an unsuccessful hunt for their turkeys. Their quest finally led them to the Claybaugh farm, where they found that two of the turkeys, which at the time were roosting high (thieves had made inroads on the flock several nights before), looked like Garnand turkeys (old hens). Mrs. Claybaugh and her son claimed the hens as their property. There were 41 turkeys in the flock, and Mrs. Claybaugh, who had tended the flock all summer, claimed all of them. Some courteous, but strained, conversation ensued, with the result that the Garnands and Renfros withdrew with the understanding that the turkeys would not be sold for a few days, and that the claimants would return with proof of their claims. The Garnands claimed to own 11, and the Renfros 6, of the turkeys. Mrs. Claybaugh kept the flock intact for over a week, and then, thinking the claimants had abandoned their demands, proceeded to carry out the purpose she had entertained all along to sell the turkeys on the market. Accordingly her son, the defendant, started before daybreak one morning with a load of 30 turkeys, and drove to Trenton to sell them. The poultry dealer would give but 9 cents a pound—the market price had been 11 cents—and defendant returned home with the turkeys. Afterward Mrs. Claybaugh learned that a dealer in a small nearby town was paying 12 cents a pound, and defendant took a load to that town, and sold them to the dealer at that price. The dealer gave defendant a check on the bank for the purchase price, and defendant took the check home. Afterward, and within a week, defendant drove two other loads to the same town, and sold them to the dealer. Each time he surrendered the check previously given him, and received a new check for the purchase price of all the turkeys sold to that time. In this way, Mrs. Claybaugh disposed of the 41 turkeys.

Now, the dealer had heard in some way that the Garnands and Renfros claimed to own some of these turkeys, and he put them all in a pen and telephoned the claimants that he had them. He was notified not to dispose of them until the claimants had an opportunity to appear and claim their property. Accordingly, he stopped payment on the check and advised defendant of what he had done and why he had done it. Defendant, who had refrained from cashing the checks, expressed his satisfaction with the dealer's conduct, and at an appointed time met the Renfros and Garnands at the turkey pen. Defendant offered to settle the controversy, even if it cost him $25, if it could be done in a way that would not amount to a confession that he had done wrong. He insisted that the turkeys belonged to his mother, but was willing to pay for peace. The Garnands and Renfros were obdurate. They demanded unconditional surrender; that is to say, they demanded unconditional orders from defendant on the dealer for the full value of the respective flocks claimed by them. Defendant refused, and the negotia-identifications stopped. The identification of their property by the claimants appears to us very vague and unsatisfactory. They did not profess familiarity with the young turkeys. They did identify one old hen on account of the lightness of her color, and another by her unusually long and extremely red legs, and, by a sort of Sherlock Holmes process of deduction, observing that 17 of the turkeys, a little lighter in color than the others in the pen, herded together and would not associate with their darker fellow prisoners, concluded this exclusive bunch must be their property. Mr. Garnand was asked why he did not replevin his turkeys, or sue somebody for their value, and replied that it would be too much trouble and some expense. Afterward the dealer permitted defendant to cash the check, and later, when the grand jury met, an indictment was found against defendant.

It is elementary that a criminal intent is the principal element of the offense of larceny, whether the offense be grand larceny, and therefore a felony, or petit larceny, a misdemeanor. Often it is difficult to draw the line between theft and a mere unlawful conversion. If one takes the property of another and converts it to his own use, but takes it in good faith under color of a rightful claim, he is not a thief, but an honest wrongdoer, and his liability is civil, not criminal. Generally, the issue of whether the accused acted in good faith under color of right is one of fact for the jury. So frequently in criminal prosecutions for theft a mere pretense of ownership is used by the accused as a screen to a criminal intent that courts will not listen to such assertions, where the evidence discloses facts and circumstances tending to show that they are a mere pretense. "If the bare assertion of a claim to stolen goods shall prevent a conviction for larceny, there is no protection against the invasion of depredators." Witt v. State, 9 Mo. 672. But in such cases, as in all others, it is the province of the court to pass on the question of whether the evidence adduced by the state has enough probative force to raise an issue of fact. If there is no substantial evidence of criminal intent, the court should not send the case to the jury. And in the present case the evidence is so barren of even a reasonable suggestion of criminal intent that we cannot refrain from expressing our surprise at the action of the learned trial judge in overruling the demurrer to the evidence, and in refusing to set aside a verdict so grossly perverted of justice. Here we find a young man of unimpeachable character and reputation, acting on the word of his mother, who was a woman of good character and reputation, but in a manner thoroughly considerate of the rights of the claimants. He willingly gave them every opportunity to identify their property and to bring suit for its recovery or value. There was no attempt at concealment. Everything he did was open and above board. There is no room for any reasonable mind to infer that he harbored a criminal intent. The prosecuting witness had no right to discard his civil remedy and invoke criminal process on account of the trouble and expense a civil suit might cause him. The criminal courts are neither a collection agency nor a forum for the trial of mere disputes over the ownership of property.

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

SLAGEL v. CHAS. H. NOLD LUMBER CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
Nov. 1, 1909.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ASSURANCE OF SAFETY.

A teamster on a load of lumber, assured by his foreman that he could drive under an overhanging joist supporting the roof of a shed with safety, who slowly approaches the shed in daylight and is caught between the load and the joist and injured, is negligent and cannot recover, where, if he had stooped low enough, he could have passed in safety.

Action by William Slagel against the Chas. H. Nold Lumber Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Mytton & Parkinson, for appellant. Allen, Gabbert & Mitchell, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This action is for personal injury. Defendant was the owner of a lumber yard, and in the prosecution of the business was engaged in the hauling of large loads of lumber from the yard; the plaintiff being one of his teamsters. On the forenoon of the 7th of April he was driving a gentle team with a large load of lumber out of the yard, and in doing so it was necessary to drive under a shed and out at an opening. The joist at the point in controversy supporting the roof of the shed was 8 feet 6 inches above the ground. The top of the load of lumber was 7 feet 8 inches above the ground, leaving a space of 15 inches between the top of the load and the joist, where the wagon should pass out from under the shed. Plaintiff was sitting on top of the load. Before starting, he made inquiry of the foreman if he could get through safely, and was told: "Yes; go ahead. There's men on bigger and higher loads than that that have driven through there hundreds of times." He then drove under the west end of the shed; but, as stated by him, the ground rises a little approaching the east end, "and as I drove under the east end of the shed I stooped to get under. I stooped as low as I could, and the joist or cross-beam caught me at the back of the neck and shoulders and crushed my back." The trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence, and plaintiff has brought the case here.

Notwithstanding the assurance given to plaintiff that he could drive under the shed, we are of the opinion that the trial court took the proper view of the case. An assurance of safety to the servant cannot be allowed to control his action as to that which is patently open to his observation. In cases of this nature apparently small differences in fact make a great difference in legal result. If plaintiff had been assured he could drive through safely, and on once starting could not clearly see where he was going, or the conditions into which he was moving, or if he could see, but could not stop after starting, we would have a totally different case from the one the record shows in this instance. Here the foreman told the plaintiff he could drive through; but the latter evidently saw, or should have seen, as he slowly approached the place, that he could not pass under unless he laid down on the load, or at least stooped quite low. There was no disturbance with his team or his wagon or harness, nor did anything happen to distract his attention. It was merely for him to indulge in a matter of common observation. It will not be pretended that he understood the foreman to say that he could get under by standing or sitting upright on the wagon. It was plainly nothing more than an assurance that he could get under, and so he could have, by lying down or stooping quite low.

Besides, notwithstanding an assurance of safety, the servant must not abandon all exercise of common sense and prudence. The situation in which plaintiff found himself did not involve a question of expert knowledge, or of superior knowledge of the foreman. As he came to the low place, he was in position to exercise better knowledge than the foreman had. We could well say here, as was remarked by Judge Lamm in Knorpp v. Wagner, 195 Mo., loc. cit. 666, 93 S. W. 961, that, "in pleading plaintiff's ignorance and defendant's knowledge, the learned counsel for respondent [appellant] doubtless had in mind pronouncements of courts in this class of cases, wherein there always appears an element of ignorance on the part of the servant and superior knowledge necessarily implied on the part of the master. * * * The trouble with respondents' [appellants'] case is that he had the superior knowledge * * *" of conditions at the time of his injury. We have recently had cases in this court bearing directly on the rule applicable to the facts shown by this record. Meyers v. Glass Co., 129 Mo. App. 556, 107 S. W. 1041; Pulley v. Standard Oil Co., 136 Mo. App. 172, 116 S. W. 430. For other cases illustrative of the view we take of the case, see Blundell v. Mfg. Co., 189 Mo. 552, 88 S. W. 103; Mathis v. Stockyards Co., 185 Mo. 434, 448, 449, 84 S. W. 66, and other citations to be found in defendant's brief.

We think the judgment should undoubtedly be affirmed. All concur.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 1, 1900. Rehearing Denied Nov. 15, 1900.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 119*)—Loss of Goods—ACT OF GOD.

The flood on May 30 and 31, 1903, at the junction of the Kaw and Missouri rivers, at Kansas City, Mo., was an act of God, and a carrier was not liable for loss of freight in such flood.

2. CARRIERS (§ 119*)—Loss of Freight—ACT OF GOD.

Though defendant railroad was negligent in not getting the car containing plaintiff's butter out of its freight yards before the destructive part of an unprecedented flood, constituting an act of God, came, it was not liable, unless it was warned of the approach, not merely of a rise in the river, but of the flood.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by the Merritt Creamery Company against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Allen & Allen and Allen, Gabbert & Mitchell, for appellant. Thomas R. Morrow and Culver & Phillip, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff shipped in one of defendant's cars a consignment of butter from Great Bend, Kan., to Boston, Mass. The car left Great Bend on the night of May 27, 1903, and arrived in defendant's freight yards near Kansas City on the morning of May 30th, where, ordinarily, the car would be made a part of a train for Eastern points. But in this instance the car was not taken out of Kansas City, and on the night of May 30th, or during May 31st, the butter was destroyed by a flood. Plaintiff brought this action for damages. The defense was that the flood was an act of God. The plaintiff met this by the contention that defendant knew of the coming of the flood, or by proper diligence should have known it, in time to have taken the butter to a place of safety. At the trial the court gave a peremptory instruction sustaining defendant's case, and plaintiff duly appealed to this court.

That the flood here involved was of such unprecedented, terrific, and destructive nature as to properly be designated as the act of God has been several times determined by this and other courts in cases arising over shipments of freight destroyed or lost in the different railway yards at and near Kansas City. Moffatt Co. v. Railway Co., 113 Mo. App. 544, 88 S. W. 117; Lamar Mfg. Co. v. Railway Co., 117 Mo. App. 453, 93 S. W. 851; Lightfoot & Son v. Railway Co., 126 Mo. App. 532, 104 S. W. 482; Empire Cattle Co. v. Railway Co. (C. C.) 135 Fed. 135; Rodgers v. Railway Co., 75 Kan. 222, 88 Pac. 885, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416. See, also, Grier v. Railway Co., 108 Mo. App. 565, 84 S. W. 158, as to the same flood at St. Louis. But plaintiff insists that defendant had warning of the coming of the water in time to have saved the butter, and that it negligently laid by and failed to move the car out of danger. Plaintiff bases much of its case on the law as stated in Pinkerton v. Railway Co., 117 Mo. App. 238, 93 S. W. 849. But in our opinion the facts of this case do not bring it within the rule in the Pinkerton Case. The law applicable here has been recently so fully discussed in the cases above cited that it can serve no purpose to restate it at this time, especially in a case involving the same flood at practically the same place.

Plaintiff's entire case turns on a mere question of fact; that is, did defendant know, or could it have known, of the coming flood? The Kaw river and the Missouri river meet at Kansas City; the former flowing into the latter. Both rivers were in excessive flood. The Kaw suddenly rose, at Topeka and above, ——— miles from Kansas City, in addition to its already overflowed banks, and much stress is put upon the knowledge which defendant's officers had obtained by telegraph of the coming of these waters. But it was shown that the amount of rise which these additional waters would have caused at Kansas City would have left plaintiff's butter unharmed in the position in which defendant had placed it. The cause of the great destruction and the overwhelming nature of the flood arose, in great part, from the unexpected volume of water added to the already flooded Missouri. The result of the floods of both rivers joining at Kansas City caused the great destruction of property which that catastrophe brought about in such short time that few escaped its fury. We have examined plaintiff's brief and written suggestions, in connection with the oral argument made when the cause was submitted, and have concluded that the record justified the action of the trial court.

It would not aid plaintiff's case, in practical result, if it should be conceded that defendant may have been negligent in not getting the car out of the freight yards before the destructive part of the flood came. The question is: Was it warned of the approach, not merely of a rise in the river, but of the unprecedented flood, which carried destruction to all property within its reach? Though a party be negligent in transporting freight, he is not liable for every misfortune which befalls it, unless it can be connected with the negligence. This phase of the case was considered and determined in the case of Moffatt Co. v. Railway Co., supra.

We have no other alternative than to affirm the judgment. All concur.

WILLIAMS et al. v. BEATTY.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 1, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 15, 1909.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 120*) — ALTERATION — POWER TO ALTER.

A person whose land abutted on a public road constructed on an embankment through lowlands, on the right of way of which, and on his side of the embankment, was a drainage ditch, had no right, without complying with Rev. St. 1899, § 9414 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4327), requiring an application for the change of roads to be by petition to the county court, to obstruct the ditch and change the road by moving the embankment to the other side of the ditch and on his own land, and by placing culverts in the embankment so as to collect and throw onto land on the other side of the road surface water which formerly flowed through the ditch.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 374-378; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

2. HIGHWAYS (§ 120*) — OBSTRUCTION — INJUNCTION BY ABUTTING OWNER — SPECIAL DAMAGES.

It clearly appearing that such a change in the road and ditch would not only be detrimental to the general public, but would inflict special damage to land on the other side of the road, the owner of the other land was entitled to enjoin the change, since an abutting owner has rights in the highway which are special to himself, such as the rights of ingress and egress.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 374-378; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

3. EQUITY (§ 65*) — MAXIMS — CLEAN HANDS — APPLICATION OF RULE.

The fact that the complaining party had previously raised the grade of the road and removed culverts therein without formal authority would not preclude his injunctive relief under the maxim that he who seeks equity must do so with clean hands, as his prior acts were an entirely separate matter, and the maxim applies only to conditions related to the subject of litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 185-187; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

4. HIGHWAYS (§ 120*) — OBSTRUCTIONS — RIGHTS OF ABUTTING OWNERS.

The complainant's right to an injunction was not affected by an instrument executed by his grantor to the other party, giving him permission to construct a drainage ditch through the grantor's land; that right not being in controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

5. COVENANTS (§ 70*) — RUNNING WITH THE LAND — LICENSE — REVOCABILITY — "INCUMBRANCE."

An instrument, giving a person the right to construct a drainage ditch through the land of the person executing the instrument, being without consideration, and not acknowledged and recorded, was a mere license, revocable at the will of the licensor and his grantee, and not a covenant running with the land, and did not constitute an "incumbrance" thereon which would prevent the conveyance of a fee-simple title by the grantor.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Macon County; Nat M. Sheldon, Judge.

Action by Barnett R. Williams and another against Samuel G. Beatty. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

I. G. Ringoldsky and Guthrie & Franklin, for appellant. I. W. Barrow and Dysart & Mitchell, for respondents.

JOHNSON, J. This is an injunction suit, brought by the owners of a farm in Macon county, to restrain defendant, the owner of an adjoining farm, from interfering with the public road and drainage ditch separating the two farms. Both farms are in the valley of the Chariton river on the east side of that water course, and extend eastward to the hills. That of plaintiffs is on the south side of the public road, which runs east and west from the river to the hills, and is in sections 34 and 35, township 59, range 16. The farm of defendant is on the north side of the road, in sections 26 and 27. From the hills westward the roadway, for a distance of about half a mile, is 60 feet wide, thence to the river, a distance of between a quarter and a half of a mile, it is 80 feet wide. At the time this suit was begun the road had been improved by the construction, in 1897, of an embankment over the bottom land, by which the traveled way was elevated to a height sufficient to insure a good road in bad weather. A drainage ditch had been dug on the north side of the embankment and on the right of way from the hills to the river, to carry off the water, flowing in two streams, that come out of the hills and unite at the northeast corner of plaintiffs' land. Before the construction of the ditch the stream formed by this junction flowed in a northwest course onto the land of defendant, where it became diffused into a chain of ponds, swales, and marshy places, that extended first northwesterly, then curved around to a southwest course, until it passed from defendant's land to that of plaintiffs, at a point nearly a half mile west of its place of entry on defendant's land. After the drainage ditch was built, defendant, by running out auxiliary ditches from it, drained these ponds and low places into the drainage ditch, and we think the evidence shows that defendant's farm was greatly benefited by these improvements, and was not subjected to any additional servitude by them, though it appears that the flow of surface water from his land to that of plaintiffs was stopped. The threatened acts of defendant, to prevent which this suit was brought, are these: Professing to have authority from two of the road commissioners so to do, he was about to change the road entirely by moving the embankment north of the drainage ditch and onto his own land, and by putting culverts in the embankment in a way to collect and throw on plaintiffs' land surface water which now flows through the drainage ditch.

What had been done, and is threatened to be done, by defendant appears in the following extract from the judgment entered by the trial court: "And the court finds from the evidence that there is a public road duly established and passing on or near the line between the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 35, and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 34, township 59, range 16 on the south, and the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 26, and the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 27, township 59, range 16 on the north; that near all of the said distance the said road passes over bottom lands of the Chariton river; that at the time of the institution of this suit the said road was well graded up for nearly all of said distance, so as to make a good, permanent road, which was practically above high-water mark, and that at the time of the institution of this suit the said portion of said road was in better condition than it had ever been since it had been laid out and established; that the road right of way throughout near all of said distance was about 80 feet wide; that the said dump or grade was somewhat to the south of the center of said road, and that a ditch sufficient to carry the water had been made on the north side of said road to the river, which ditch was sufficient to carry the waters falling and collecting on the north side of the said roadway; that at the time of the institution of this suit the natural and best course for the waters falling and collecting on the north side of the said grade and roadway was on the side of the said graded roadway to the Chariton river, and that such waters, left to themselves, would find their way to the Chariton river on the north side of the said roadway, and through the ditch on the right of way on the north side of said grade; that the said right of way has ample width for a public road, and also for the ditch to carry all of said waters. The court further finds from the evidence that at the time of the institution of this suit the defendant constructed and was maintaining a levee, or levees, across the said ditch to the north side of the said graded way, so as to hinder the water from flowing in the said ditch, and that the said defendant was threatening to, and proceeding to, cut and injure the said graded roadway and dump and to place culverts in and across the said graded roadway, and to force the water through the same onto plaintiffs' land; that said acts were an injury both to the said roadway and to the plaintiffs herein and their lands south of the said roadway. And the court further finds from the evidence that the defendant, without any legal right to do the same, was threatening and attempting to move a portion of the said established roadway off of the established right of way thereof where the said road passes over the north side of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 35, township 59, range 16, and place the same on the south side of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 26, township 59, range 16; that no petition had ever been presented to the county court, as the law requires, asking for such change of the public road aforesaid; that the said acts of the defendant, threatening to be done by him immediately, would be to the great injury and annoyance and expense of the public, and to the great injury and damage of the plaintiffs." Following these findings of fact, which appear to be well supported by evidence, the court adjudged "that the temporary injunction granted in this cause be made perpetual, and that the defendant and his servants be both enjoined and restrained from filling or damming up and obstructing the ditches on the right of way of the said road, and from making or maintaining any levee, or levees, on said right of way, and from cutting, injuring, or destroying the grade or dump of the said road, or any part thereof, and from removing the said road-bed or grade from said right of way or from its present position and condition, and from putting any culverts or openings through the said road grade or dump, so as to force, or attempt to force, waters across said right of way onto plaintiffs' land, and from making or maintaining any ditches or levee or dump in any way on the said right of way of said road, so as to turn the water flowing along said right of way on plaintiffs' land, and from filling up or impeding the flow of the water in the ditches upon the said right of way."

We adopt the view of the law of the case thus applied by the trial court. Here we find established by constituted authority a good public road and a drainage ditch, obviously placed in the best position to carry to the river the surplus water of that drainage zone at a minimum of damage to the surrounding lands, including the farm of defendant. Further, we find defendant, assuming to act under authority received from two of the road commissioners, has obstructed the ditch, and is threatening to change the road from the present right of way, and to put in culverts in a manner to collect and precipitate surface water in a body on the land of plaintiffs. Such acts would be nothing short of an arbitrary exercise by defendant of the power of eminent domain, since they would be wholly unsupported by legal authority. Under the provisions of section 9414, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4327) et seq., an established public road may be vacated or changed only by order of the county court, in a proceeding complying with the requirements prescribed. State v. Wells, 70 Mo. 635; State v. Rhodes, 35 Mo. App. 360. No such order was made in the present case, and defendant's proposed interference with the road and ditch were wholly without legal justification. As it clearly appears that if carried into effect the threatened changes not only will be detrimental to the general public, but will inflict special damage to plaintiffs' land, a proper case is presented for interposition by a court of equity. "An abutting property owner has the same right to the use of the street that the public have, and in addition thereto he has rights which are special to himself, as the rights of ingress and egress, and this right is a property right which he may protect. Ferrenbach v. Turner, 86 Mo. 416, 56 Am. Rep. 487; Glaessner v. Brewing Ass'n, 100 Mo. 508, 13 S. W. 707. An obstruction in a street or highway may be both a public and a private nuisance, and in such cases the private citizen who is specially injured may have injunctive relief." Schopp v. City, 117 Mo., loc. cit. 135, 22 S. W. 898, 20 L. R. A. 783.

It is argued by defendant that plaintiffs do not come into a court of equity with clean hands because of the fact that, without authority, they removed culverts and raised the grade of the embankment some time before defendant initiated his project of changing the road. It appears from the evidence that work of this character was done by plaintiffs without formal authority, but it was orally approved and accepted by the members of the county court. We concede that plaintiffs were trespassers in doing that work, but we do not sanction the contention of defendant that a prior trespass on the public highway committed by plaintiffs is a justification of defendant's purpose to commit a similar trespass. By whatever means the public road was placed in its present condition, no private person possesses the right to change the road without formal permission of the constituted authorities. The issue before us is the legality of the proposed acts of defendant, not the legality of what others may have done in the past. "The maxim that he who seeks equity must do so with clean hands applies only to conduct related to the subject of litigation." Hingston v. Montgomery, 121 Mo. App. 457, 97 S. W. 202. The prior trespass of plaintiffs was an entirely different matter from that now before us. If defendant would have the road changed, let him proceed in a lawful manner to accomplish his end. The law does not tolerate the employment of the strong hand by an individual to right his grievance, and since defendant has resorted to the strong hand, and plaintiffs are specially interested in the subject of the aggression, we do not think the past wrongs committed by plaintiffs should deprive them of injunctive relief.

Further, it is argued by defendant that the action should fail because of a parol easement or license given defendant in 1900 by plaintiffs' grantor. The instrument executed by the then owner of the land now owned by plaintiffs is as follows: "Ethel, Mo., Oct. 6, 1900. This entitles S. G. Beatty to construct a drain ditch through that portion of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 34, township 59, R. 16 Macon county, state of Mo. in such manner as the said S. G. Beatty should direct. It is agreed that the undersigned owner of said land above described shall bear no part of expense of above mentioned ditch. J. N. Fletcher." We do not think this instrument, if binding on plaintiffs, has any bearing on the present controversy. The issue here is not the right to maintain an established drainage ditch on the land of plaintiffs, but, as we have shown, is the asserted claim of defendant that he has the right to change a public road without authority conferred in the manner prescribed by statute. But the instrument invoked is worthless as an aid to defendant's position for another reason. It was without consideration, and was not acknowledged and recorded. It was a mere parol license, revocable at the will of the licensor and his grantees. Dunham v. Joyce, 129 Mo. 5, 31 S. W. 337. It was not a covenant running with the land, nor did it constitute an incumbrance that prevented the conveyance of a clear fee-simple title by Fletcher to plaintiffs.

The cause was tried without error, and manifestly the judgment is righteous. Accordingly, it is affirmed. All concur.

HALSEY v. RICHARDSON.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals, Missouri.
June 14, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov.
1, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 485*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—TAX BILL—PRIMA FACIE CASE.

Tax bills issued against property owners for a municipal improvement, if regular in form, make out a prima facie case against an owner of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1144; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 305*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACT—AS PART OF ORDINANCE.

Where specifications for a street improvement contained a form of contract which the city intended to employ in making the contract with the successful bidder, the fact that the ordinance referred to the plans and specifications on file for information as to details did not make the form of contract a part of such ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 817; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 304*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—PERFORMANCE—TIME—FAILURE TO SPECIFY—REASONABLE TIME.

Failure of a street improvement ordinance to specify any time within which the work should be completed was not a fatal defect, as it would be construed to require completion within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 816; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 362*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—COMPLETION—REASONABLE TIME—DETERMINATION.

Where a municipal improvement contract provides for excusable delay, and the contractor was required to complete the work within a reasonable time, whether the time consumed was reasonable was to be determined from the surrounding circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 894; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 364*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACT—PERFORMANCE—EXCUSABLE DELAY.

A street improvement contractor was not responsible for delay resulting from the city engineer's failure to set grade stakes, and from the delay of a street railroad company to replace the rails of its tracks, in the absence of proof that the delay was the result of collusion with the contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 897; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 284*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—TIME—LEGISLATIVE POWER—DELEGATION TO CITY ENGINEER.

A street improvement contract, providing that the work shall be commenced within one week after written notice so to do from the city engineer, and should be carried on so as to insure completion within three months thereafter, etc., is not objectionable as delegating to the city engineer the exercise of legislative power of prescribing the length of time for the completion of the work, the engineer not being authorized to postpone the giving of notice either arbitrarily, fraudulently, or without reasonable cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 284.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 414*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—"REPAIRS."

It was not improper to include, in an assessment for the improvement of a street, the cost of work performed on the sidewalks, curbing and guttering, on the theory that such work constituted repairs chargeable to the city.

H. K. White, for appellant. Charles E. Strop and Eugene Silverman, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. Action to enforce the lien of two special tax bills issued in part payment of the cost of certain improvements made on Eighth street, in the city of St. Joseph. Each bill was made the subject of a count in the petition. The cause was heard by the court without a jury. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff on each count for the full amount demanded, with interest, and defendant appealed.

It is conceded that the tax bills, being regular in form, are sufficient to make out a prima facie case in favor of plaintiff, but their validity is attacked on several grounds in the answer and proof adduced by defendant. The improvement in question was made pursuant to a special ordinance passed by the city council on April 12, 1900, and entitled: "An ordinance to provide for the subgrading, paving, curbing, guttering and laying of sidewalks on Eighth street, from the south line of Olive street to the south line of Mitchell avenue." The ordinance contains no reference to the time of the beginning or completion of the proposed work, nor does it contain the details or specifications. It does provide that the improvement shall be made "in accordance with the specifications therefor on file in the office of the city engineer." No point is made that the specifications were not on file at the time of the passage of the ordinance, but one of the defenses we shall presently notice is based on the fact that attached to them, and therefor on file, was the form of the contract afterward entered into between plaintiff and the city. Among the stipulations of this contract, which was signed by the parties on May 29, 1900, are the following, which appear under the head of "Duties and Responsibilities":

"(9) The first party (the contractor) shall not be entitled to any claim for damages for any hindrance or delay from any cause whatever, in the progress of the work or any portion thereof; but such hindrance may entitle said first party to an extension of the time for completing this contract sufficient to compensate for the detention, the same to be determined by the city engineer, provided he shall have immediate notice in writing of the cause of detention.

"(10) The work embraced in this contract shall be commenced within one week after written notice so to do shall have been given to the contractor by the city engineer, carried on regularly and uninterruptedly with such force of men as to insure its full completion within three months thereafter; the time of beginning, rate of progress, and time of completion being essential conditions of this contract."

Under the head of "General Stipulations" is this provision: "If said work shall not be begun when, where, and as ordered by the city engineer, or if the rate at which said work shall be performed shall not, in the judgment of the city engineer, be such as to insure its progress and completion in the time and manner herein stipulated, or if said work shall be wholly or in part improperly constructed, or in case the contractor shall from any cause abandon the work and cease to prosecute the same, then the city engineer shall certify the facts to the common council and the common council shall have the power to declare the contract forfeited, either as to a portion or the whole of said work, and to, at any time, relet the same, or order the reconstruction of the work, in whole or in part, if improperly done."

On the 5th of December, 1900, the engineer for the first time notified plaintiff in writing "to commence work within seven days upon the contract between you and the city of St. Joseph for paving Eighth street from Mitchell avenue to Olive street (Ordinance No. 2619), and to finish the same according to contract." December 18, 1900, the city council passed a special ordinance (No. 2935) extending the time for the completion of the work for a period of five months, and on April 15, 1901, passed another ordinance further extending the time for a period of four months. The work was completed within the period prescribed in the last ordinance mentioned, was accepted by the city, and the tax bills in payment of the cost thereof were issued October 2, 1901, and delivered to plaintiff. The long delay in the performance of the contract after it was made and approved by the city is the foundation of the attack against the validity of the proceedings. To free himself from the imputation of fault on account of this delay, plaintiff introduced evidence which tended to show that very shortly after the contract was ratified he began its performance by making brick, taking out guttering, resetting the curb and breaking rock for foundation, but could not proceed beyond the preparatory stage because of the failure of the city engineer to lay out the work and set stakes for his guidance. Further, it was shown that plaintiff was directed by the city engineer not to proceed with the paving of the street until after the street railway company had reconstructed its tracks thereon, and that, on account of its inability to obtain new rails from the manufacturers, the company was delayed in prosecuting the work of relaying the tracks and bringing them to the proper grade. These obstacles in the way of plaintiff continued for some time after the engineer served notice on him to proceed with the performance of the contract. Plaintiff still was unable to obtain the services of the engineer to give him the necessary grade stakes, and the street railway company could not and did not perform its task until the following spring. Cold weather set in shortly after December 5th, and the ground became frozen to an extent preclusive of the doing of any grading. Such was the situation when the first ordinance was passed which extended the time. When the second ordinance was passed in the following April, the engineer and street railway company were still in default in the respects related. In short, the evidence of plaintiff casts the entire blame for the delay on the city, and the issue of fact thus raised was resolved by the court in favor of plaintiff. Defendant's evidence tended to show that 60 days afforded a reasonable time for doing the work, while that of plaintiff was to the effect that three months would have been required had plaintiff been given the opportunity of prosecuting the work without hindrance from the city.

Since the evidence introduced by plaintiff on these controverted issues of fact is substantial, no reason exists for interference on our part with the findings of the trial court on which, it is evident, the judgment for plaintiff was founded. As far as it may be material, we shall assume as established the fact that plaintiff in no wise was remiss in the performance of his contract but was retarded solely by the acts of the city, and, from this standpoint, shall consider the questions of law presented by the learned counsel for defendant in support of his contention that the tax bills should be declared invalid.

It is argued that, though the ordinance which authorized the improvement is silent on the subject of a time limit, the fact that it specifically referred to specifications on file to which, at the time, a form of contract was attached, made the stipulations contained in that form which related to the time in which the work was to be begun and completed a part of the ordinance itself; consequently that the ordinance should be held to have made time of the essence of the proceedings, and should be pronounced void because it attempted to delegate to the engineer the purely legislative function of fixing the time when the contractor should begin work. In support of this argument we are cited to Barber Asphalt Co. v. Ullman, 137 Mo. 543, 38 S. W. 458; Galbreath v. Newton, 30 Mo. App. 380; Roth v. Hax, 68 Mo. App. 283; McQuiddy v. Brannock, 70 Mo. App. 535. In these cases the rule is declared that, where the ordinance providing for the improvement omits specific mention of the details thereof and refers to plans and specifications on file for information respecting such details, the plans and specifications actually on file at the designated place become a part of the ordinance to the same extent and with the same effect as though they had been literally copied therein. But it does not follow from this rule that the adoption in this manner of specifications should be treated as the incorporation in the ordinance of such extrinsic matter as a form of contract from the mere fact that such form has been attached to the specifications. Had the city intended to embody in the ordinance the stipulations and conditions appearing in such form of contract, it hardly would have contented itself with a reference only to the specifications, but would have referred also to the form of contract on file. The attachment of a form of contract amounted to nothing more than the expression by the city of an intention to employ that form in the preparation of a contract it would make with the successful bidder, but, until the contract was executed by the parties, the form was but so much paper, and did not operate to impose contractual obligations on either party. Neither by provision appearing on its face nor by reference to the specifications on file does the ordinance before us state a time limit. This omission does not invalidate the proceeding, but, under the rule adopted by the courts of last resort in this state, it requires us to construe the ordinance as containing the implied provision that the improvement must be completed within a reasonable time. Allen v. Labsap, 188 Mo. 692, 87 S. W. 926; Heman v. Gilliam, 171 Mo. 258, 71 S. W. 163; Hilgert v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 107 Mo. App. 385, 81 S. W. 496; Curtice v. Schmidt, 202 Mo. 703, 101 S. W. 61; Schibel v. Merrill, 185 Mo. 534, 83 S. W. 1069; Jaicks v. Middlesex Co., 201 Mo. 211, 98 S. W. 759. Beyond the requirement that the work must be completed within such time, the ordinance does not make time essential, nor is there anything in the contract made by the parties indicative of an intention to depart in any respect from the ordinance. The stipulations of the contract are similar in effect to those considered by the Supreme Court in Allen v. Labsap, Heman v. Gilliam, and Curtice v. Schmidt, supra. In the first of these cases it is said: "In the absence of a city ordinance requiring the work to be completed within a definite time and in the presence, as here, of a contract provision specifying a definite time for the completion of the work, followed by other provisions, to which effect must be given, providing for deductions from the money due the contractor on a failure to complete the work within that time, the views of this court on full consideration have come to be that, if the work is completed within a reasonable time, the tax bills are not void—[citing cases]. No sufficient reason is suggested why the reasoning of these cases is unsound, nor why the doctrine should not be regarded as settled under the rule of stare decisis, and we accordingly hold the question no longer an open one in this state."

As in that case, the contract in the present instance contemplates and makes provision for the contingency of excusable delay in the completion of the improvement, and we must hold that under both ordinance and contract plaintiff had a reasonable time in which to do the work; and, further, that the question of whether he completed the improvement within a reasonable time is one of fact to be solved by the trier of fact in the light of the surrounding circumstances. Hilgert v. Paving Co., supra; Lapsley v. Howard, 119 Mo. 489, 24 S. W. 1020; State v. Harrison, 53

Mo. App. 346. The parties themselves stipulated in the contract that a period of three months from the reception by plaintiff from the engineer of notice to proceed would afford a reasonable time. The trial court found this estimate to be approximately correct, and the finding, we think, is supported by evidence. In the absence of any showing that the delays, occasioned by the failure of the engineer to set grade stakes and of the street railway company to replace the rails of its tracks, were the result of a collusive understanding or agreement to which the contractor was a party, the time consumed by such delays should not be computed as time wasted by the contractor. Curtice v. Schmidt, supra. It clearly appears that he was ready and willing to proceed with the work immediately on the ratification of the contract, and would have been able to complete it in the time specified but for the fault of the city. It would be extremely unjust to punish him, not for any breach on his part of any contractual obligation or duty, but for the neglect of the other party to the contract.

What we have said necessarily leads to the conclusion that the tax bills should not be held invalid on the ground that the contract attempted to delegate to the city engineer the exercise of the legislative power of prescribing a time for the completion of the work. In Allen v. Labsap, supra, the contract contained the stipulation: "The work embraced in this contract shall be begun within one week after written notice so to do shall have been given to the contractor by the street commissioner." A similar stipulation appears in the contract considered in Heman v. Gilliam, supra. In neither case did the Supreme Court consider such provision as an attempt to delegate a legislative duty, and we are of opinion that it should not be construed as an attempt to delegate authority to the engineer to delay the initiation and completion of the improvement beyond a reasonable time from the approval of the ordinance. Obviously its purpose was to invest the engineer with sufficient supervisory authority to enable him to expedite the prosecution of the work in order that its completion might not be retarded beyond the time contemplated by the ordinance. It did not give him the right to postpone the giving of notice arbitrarily, fraudulently, or without reasonable cause. In this view, the stipulation under consideration cannot be said to evince an effort to invest a city officer with the right to exercise a legislative power. We do not find in the record that the provisions of this stipulation (No. 10, under head of "Duties and Responsibilities") appeared anywhere in the specifications on file to which the ordinance authorizing the improvement referred, and therefore, as we have shown, the ordinance did not by reference to the specifications either make time of the essence of the contract or attempt to delegate a legislative function to the city engineer. The trial court properly held the tax bills valid.

Point is made that it was improper to include in the assessment the cost of the work performed under the ordinance and contract on the sidewalks, curbing, and guttering, for the reason that such work was in the nature of repairs, and, as such, was chargeable to the city. We had this precise question before us in the case of Rackliffe v. Duncan 180 Mo. App. 695, 108 S. W. 1110, and, for the reasons stated in the opinion in that case, must rule the point against defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. SALES (§ 201*)—TRANSFER OF TITLE—DELIVERY—DELIVERY TO CARRIER—"CONSTRUCTIVE DELIVERY."

Where there are no specific instructions as to shipment, a delivery by the seller to the usual carrier for the buyer, with proper directions, is a "constructive delivery" to the buyer and the goods immediately become his property, subject only to the right of stoppage in transitu.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 535; Dec. Dig. § 201.*

2. SALES (§ 150*)—LOSS OF GOODS—DELIVERY TO CARRIER—DUTIES OF SELLER.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, a seller shipping the goods to the buyer must make such a contract with the carrier as will afford the buyer a remedy against the carrier for the full value of the goods in case of their loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 355; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 101*)—POWER TO CONTRACT—CUSTOM OR COURSE OF BUSINESS.

Where the seller of goods acts as the agent of the buyer in shipping the goods to such buyer, his authority to enter into a limited liability contract with the carrier may be implied from the course of dealing between the parties, or from a known custom to ship in that manner.

4. SALES (§ 150*)—LOSS OF GOODS—DELIVERY TO CARRIER—DUTIES OF SELLER.

A seller who, without receiving specific instructions as to shipment, ships the goods by express addressed to the buyer must show either express or implied authority to enter into a contract with the carrier, limiting its liability in case of loss, and such authority is not implied from the mere direction of a new customer to ship by express.

Action by Alfred Lewis against A. and B. Imhof. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Allen, Gabbert & Mitchell, for appellant. Vinton Pike, for respondents.

JOHNSON, J. Action on an account for goods sold and delivered by plaintiff, a wholesale merchant in New York, to defendants, retail merchants in St. Joseph. The defense is that the goods were not delivered. The case was tried to the court on an agreed statement of facts, and judgment was entered for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

The agreed statement of facts is as follows:

"(1) The plaintiffs are merchants doing business in the city of New York, and the defendants are partners engaged in business in the city of St. Joseph, Mo., and both parties were so engaged in business at all times herein mentioned. (2) On May 1, 1907, defendants gave the plaintiff's traveling salesman at St. Joseph, Mo., a verbal order for the goods sued for in this case, and said salesman of plaintiff's transmitted to the plaintiffs at New York a written order, of which a true copy is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A.' (3) On receipt of the order of plaintiffs, they in New York City, on May 4, 1907, packed the goods for transportation, and delivered the same to the American Express Company in said city of New York for transportation to St. Joseph, Mo., said express company limiting its undertaking, and not being further bound than by executing and delivering to plaintiff a receipt, of which the following is a copy: [Not necessary to be here set out.] (4) The American Express Company is a common carrier, whose line extended from New York City in state of New York to Chicago in the state of Illinois, said Chicago being the nearest point to destination (in this case St. Joseph, Mo.) reached by said carrier, and where it delivered the goods aforesaid to the Wells-Fargo Express Company (an independent connecting carrier), for carriage to St. Joseph, but said goods were never delivered by the latter express company, but were lost or destroyed by reason of its negligence while in its possession. (5) At all times herein mentioned there were express companies engaged in business as common carriers whose lines extended from New York City to St. Joseph, Mo., to any of which the goods in question could have been delivered for carriage to St. Joseph. (6) Said Wells-Fargo Express Company received said goods from the American Express Company at Chicago, and then and there undertook to carry said goods from Chicago to St. Joseph. (7) When the goods sued for were ordered by defendants of plaintiff's salesman at St. Joseph, the former directed that the said goods be shipped to them by express, without specifying any company or line, or terms of shipment, and the American Express Company was one of the carriers usually employed by plaintiff and other New York shippers for transportation of merchandise to St. Joseph, Mo. (8) It was customary with the manufacturers and wholesalers of the class of goods sued for in New York City to ship goods to purchasers by express, selecting any one of the various carriers whose contracts of shipment contained stipulations such as are found in the blank forms hereto attached. Exhibits B, C, and D. (9) The price of the goods sued for was $162 at New York City, and they were to be shipped by express to St. Joseph—freight to be paid by defendants at destination. (10) Further, fuller, or better pleading is waived, and if upon the foregoing facts defendants are liable, plaintiffs may have judgment for $162, with interest from December 15, 1907; if not, judgment shall be entered for defendants. The foregoing stipulation of facts is for all purposes of the case, and upon it alone the cause shall be submitted in the above court, and in any other court to which said cause may be appealed." The receipt or shipping contract issued by the American Express Company to plaintiff was made out on a printed form, which, among other stipulations, contained the following: "It is further agreed that this company is not to be held liable or responsible for any loss of, or damage to, said property or any part thereof, from any cause whatever, unless in every case the said loss or damage be proved to have occurred from the fraud or gross negligence of said company or its servants; nor in any event shall this company be held liable or responsible, nor shall any demand be made upon it beyond the sum of fifty dollars, unless the just and true value thereof is stated herein, and an extra charge is paid or agreed to be paid therefor, based upon such higher value." Across the bottom of the face of the contract in bold type is the further agreement that "the liability of this company is limited to $50, unless the just and true value is stated in this receipt and an extra charge is paid or agreed to be paid therefor, based upon such higher value." A column for the insertion of the value of the property appears in the blank space provided for the description of the particular shipment. For the purposes of our inquiry there is no material difference between the blank form of receipt issued by the American Express Company and those used by other express companies, which are attached as exhibits to the agreed statement of facts. Plaintiff failed to have the value of the goods stated in the receipt, and shipped them on a valuation of $50, and on a rate based on such valuation.

Recently, in an action brought against an express company by the consignee of goods shipped from New York to St. Joseph and lost in transportation, we said, speaking through Broadus, P. J.: "We believe it is entirely competent for a carrier to limit the amount of its liability for negligence, where the shipper fixes a valuation upon the goods shipped, and agrees that the carrier's liability should not be in excess of such value, when it is shown that on goods of greater value a higher rate is exacted. In such cases a carrier may make reasonable regulations, graduating its compensation, and providing, in case of failure of the shipper to declare the value as required, it shall be deemed not to exceed a certain sum. Ellott on Railroads, § 1510." Dry Goods Co. v. Express Co., 133 Mo. App. 683, 113 S. W. 1161. Under the doctrine of this decision, of the soundness of which we have no doubt, it is clear that, if the delivery of the goods by plaintiff to the express company constituted a constructive delivery to defendants, the recovery which defendants might enforce against the express company would be limited by the express terms of the shipping contract to $50 for goods costing the defendants $162. The rule is well established "that when goods are ordered and no specific instructions are given in regard to their shipment, * * * a delivery to the usual carrier for the purchaser, with proper directions, is a constructive delivery to the purchaser, and the goods, immediately upon such delivery, become the property of the purchaser, subject only to the right of stoppage in transitu." Bloom's Son Co. v. Haas, 130 Mo. App. 122, 108 S. W. 1073; Graff v. Foster, 67 Mo., loc. cit. 520; Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. McMahan, 50 Mo. App. 18; Milling Co. v. Stanley, 132 Mo. App. 308, 111 S. W. 869. This rule is based on the legal fiction that in ordering goods to be transported by common carrier the vendee, by implication, appoints the vendor his agent to select a carrier usually employed in such shipments, and to contract with such carrier in the usual manner for the transportation. Where the vendor performs these duties of his agency, the carrier then becomes by implication the agent of the vendee to receive delivery of the goods. In the absence of proof to the contrary we must begin with the presumption that the usual and ordinary way requires the vendor, in the performance of his duties as agent of the vendee, to ship the goods under a contract that will afford the vendee a remedy against the carrier for their full value, if they be negligently lost by the carrier. This was the rule of the common law, and we perceive no reason in the changed conditions of modern commerce and means of transportation for departing from it. Lord Ellenborough said in Clarke v. Hutchings, 14 East, 475, a case where the carrier had a well-known regulation not to be answerable for goods above a certain value, unless entered and paid for as such, and the seller delivered goods of greater value without so entering them: "The plaintiff cannot be said to have deposited the goods in the usual and ordinary way, for the purpose of forwarding them to the defendant, unless he took the usual and ordinary precaution, which the notoriety of the carrier's general undertaking required, with respect to the goods of this value, to insure them a safe conveyance; that is by making a special entry of them. He had an implied authority, and it was his duty to do whatever was necessary to secure the responsibility of the carrier for the safe delivery of the goods, and to put them in such a course of conveyance as that, in case of a loss, the defendant might have his indemnity against the carrier." 2 Mechem on Sales, § 1183, and note.

Arguendo, we agree with counsel for plaintiff that authority in the vendor to enter into a limited liability contract such as that under consideration need not be expressly conferred by the vendee, but may be implied, either from a course of dealing between the parties or from a known practice and custom of the merchants of New York to ship goods by express without declaring their value, unless otherwise directed by the customer. But this concession does not benefit plaintiff, for the reason that the sale in question was the first business transaction between the parties, and therefore no course of dealing existed between them, and the existence of a custom among the New York merchants not to state the value of goods shipped by express is not disclosed by the agreed statement. We cannot assume without proof that there was a custom of that kind. The eighth paragraph of the agreed statement goes no further than to say it was customary for New York merchants to ship by express on the forms of receipt attached, but it does not say that it was customary for them to fail to insert the value of the goods in the blank place provided for such statement. In other words the stipulation does not say that New York merchants were in the habit of sending out goods by express under shipping contracts which, in effect, greatly understated the value of the goods.

We conclude that the burden was on plaintiff to show either express or implied authority to ship the goods in the manner he did, and that such authority should not be implied from the mere direction of a new customer to ship "by express."

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

A recital in a deed that the purchase price had been paid is as between the parties in the nature of a receipt and subject to explanation.

5. ESTOPPEL (§ 25*)—RECITALS IN CONVEYANCE—PAYMENT OF CONSIDERATION.

Defendant's son was the owner in fee of 26 acres of land. He conveyed nine acres to defendant, reciting in the deed a consideration of $1,000 paid in full. The land was not paid for, and subsequently it was orally agreed that defendant should reconvey the land, and thereafter the land was treated as belonging to the son. The land was later sold by an agent for part cash and the balance in a draft. Plaintiff, a creditor of defendant, garnished the draft held by the agent. Held, that the defendant's son was not estopped to deny the truth of the receipt in the deed, as to plaintiff, since plaintiff, not having paid out anything on the strength of the recital, was not a purchaser, and was not prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

6. GARNISHMENT (§ 206*)—JURISDICTION OF GARNISHEE—NOTICE TO CLAIMANT—FAILURE OF.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3459 (Ann. St. 1900, p. 1985), provides that if the garnishee disclose in his answer, and declare his belief, that the debt owing by him to defendant, or the supposed property in his hands, has been sold or assigned to a third person, and the plaintiff contests or disputes the existence, force, or validity of such sale or assignment, the court shall make an order upon the supposed vendee or assignee to appear at a designated time and sustain his claim to the property or debt. Defendant's son was the owner of 26 acres of land in fee. He conveyed 9 acres of the land to defendant. The land was later orally reconveyed to the son. Subsequently the land was sold by an agent, and the draft for the purchase price was garnished while in the agent's hands. The son was not notified nor made a party to the proceedings. Held, that the court had jurisdiction of the garnishee notwithstanding the failure to notify the son and to make him a party to the proceedings, since section 3459 is directory only, and the court had the right under the pleading to pronounce upon them in the son's absence, as neither party had demanded that he should be brought before the court.

7. GARNISHMENT (§ 52*) — POSSESSION OF AGENT AS POSSESSION OF PRINCIPAL—RULE NOT APPLICABLE.

The rule that the possession of the agent is the possession of the principal does not apply to garnishment proceedings, as the object there is to seize or detain the res, which is the subject-matter of the litigation.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Grundy County; G. W. Wannamaker, Judge.

Action by Frank B. Shelton, as administrator of David B. Shelton, deceased, against Vincent Cooksey, defendant, and Mary A. Cooksey, as administrator of the estate of John S. Cooksey, deceased, garnishee. Judgment for plaintiff, and the garnishee appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Hall & Hall, for appellant. Harber & Knight, for respondent.

BROADBUSH, P. J. The controversy grows out of a garnishment proceeding. The plaintiff instituted suit in the circuit court of Grundy county and sued out attachment in aid thereof, by means of which a certain fund in the hands of John S. Cooksey was garnished. The garnishee answered that the fund did not belong to the defendant Vincent Cooksey, but that it was the property of George Cooksey. The cause was tried on the issues raised by the answer of the garnishee; the alleged claimant George Cooksey not having been made a party to the cause. For a long time prior to this suit defendant, Vincent Cooksey, was a resident of Mercer county, engaged in farming and dealing in stock. The plaintiff became surety for him to the extent of several thousand dollars, of which amount plaintiff was compelled as such surety to pay about $600. Defendant then removed to Grundy county, and afterwards to the state of Arkansas, where the claimant, George, now resides. At the time George Cooksey removed from Missouri, where he had previously resided, to Arkansas in company with his father, the defendant, Vincent, he was the owner in fee of 26 acres of land in Grundy county. On August 19, 1903, he conveyed 9 acres of this tract to the defendant, in the deed to which there is a recited consideration of $1,000 paid in full. The testimony went to show that it was worth about $1,300. There was testimony given to show that the purchase price for the land had not been paid, and it is claimed that a short time after the date of said deed defendant proposed to reconvey the land to George in payment of the unpaid purchase price; that George agreed to the proposition, and thereafter, according to the evidence of both parties, the land was treated as belonging to George. For the purpose of sustaining his theory of the case, the garnishee introduced evidence tending to prove that, after his financial failure in Mercer county, the defendant had not been able to retrieve his losses, and therefore he could not have, and did not, pay the purchase price of the land. The defendant moved back to Missouri, and took charge of the land, rented it, received the money, paid the taxes, and it is alleged sent the rent mostly to George; but it was shown in the evidence that he informed the tenant that he was the owner of the land, and he made witness by the name of Lickey his agent to sell the entire 26 acres, but told him only 9 acres of it was in his name. The garnishee contracted a sale of the entire 26 acres to a Mr. Robinson for the agreed sum of $1,800, and defendant and George and wife joined in a deed to the purchaser, who paid $100 at the time the contract was entered into, and the remainder in a draft to the garnishee, which was garnisheed in his hands under the attachment herein. Other matters arising on the trial will be noticed hereafter. The finding and judgment were for the plaintiff, from which the garnishee appealed.

We will dispose of the first contention of the appellant, that the court erred in excluding certain evidence offered by him, by the statement generally that much of it was wholly incompetent and the residue immaterial. We do not understand that it is our duty to take up such matters in detail in order to show their competency or incompetency, their relevancy, or irrelevancy. The case was tried by the court upon the theory contained in instruction 1, given at the instance of plaintiff, which is as follows: "By the deed read in evidence of August 19, 1903, from George to Vincent Cooksey, for the nine acres mentioned by the witness, George Cooksey acknowledged to have received the full purchase price of said lands. And, even though the same may not in fact have been paid, and even though months thereafter the said Vincent may have verbally agreed to convey said lands to said George, or agreed that, when it was sold, the said George might receive payment of said purchase price, yet this did not operate to transfer any right, title, or interest in said premises to said George, or give him in this proceeding any rights as against plaintiff to the purchase price paid therefor by witness (Cooksey) Robinson, nor did it give to the garnishee, John S. Cooksey, any right whatever to hold the proceeds of said sale of said nine acres as against the plaintiff and proceedings of garnishment had herein. But said George having conveyed said premises to said Vincent, and there never having been any reconveyance thereof, the said Vincent had the right to sell and convey the same, and the proceeds thereof under the circumstances aforesaid were subject to attachment and garnishment herein; and, if the jury find from the evidence that after the proceeds of said sale of nine acres to said Robinson came into the hands of said John S. Cooksey, garnishee herein, he, the said John S. Cooksey, was garnisheed, and this prior to remitting said proceeds to the said George Cooksey, the jury will find for the plaintiff as against said garnishee, and determine the value of the interest of the said Vincent Cooksey in said draft as in other instruction herein specified." The instruction was in the nature of a direction to the jury to find for the plaintiff. The question is therefore one of law; as the instruction is predicated upon the theory that, the title being in defendant, his agreement to reconvey the land to George Cooksey, the consideration being the unpaid purchase price, the agreement not being in writing and signed by the parties, is void under the statute. Section 3416, Rev. St. 1890 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1949). The theory of the court was right in so far as such verbal agreement was concerned, but it is insisted, and correctly, that, notwithstanding said oral agreement of Vincent Cooksey to reconvey the land to George, the latter had a lien on the land and its proceeds for the amount of said purchase money unpaid; and such lien was enforceable both in law and equity. Johnson v. Burks, 103 Mo. App. 221, 77 S. W. 133. We do not understand that respondent seriously takes issue with appellant on that question, but denies it has any application by reason of the recitals in the deed that the purchase price of land had been paid. As between the parties, such a recital was, in effect, in the nature of a receipt, subject to explanation. Wheeler v. Land Co., 193 Mo. 279, 91 S. W. 1050.

But it is insisted that such recitals acted upon by third parties in good faith without knowledge of the facts and to their prejudice operates as an estoppel, and parties making such recitals are precluded from denying their purport. It is said: "Where the vendor of property gives to the purchaser's agent, through whom the purchase was made, a receipt in full for the purchase money, and the purchaser, in good faith, relying on the truth and validity of the receipt, pay the amount to the agent, the vendor is estopped as between him and the purchaser from denying the truth of the receipt. * * *"
Miller v. Sullivan & Co., 26 Ohio St. 639. And a like holding is announced in Bunton v. Palm (Tex.) 9 S. W. 182; Atkins v. Payne, 190 Pa. 5, 42 Atl. 378; San Luis Obispo County v. Pettit, 100 Cal. 442, 34 Pac. 1082; Turner v. Flinn, 72 Ala. 532. While the law as thus stated has our unqualified approval, we are of the opinion that plaintiff has not brought himself within the scope of its protection. He was not a purchaser. He paid out nothing on the strength of the recital. It is true he has incurred costs in his effort to subject the proceeds of the sale of the land to the payment of his judgment; but that fact alone will not suffice. He has not been prejudiced in the sense meant by the use of that word. The instruction should not have been given.

The garnishee denies that the court had jurisdiction of the garnishee because of failure to give notice and make the claimant, George Cooksey, a party. Section 3459, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1985), provides: "If the garnishee disclose in his answer, and declare his belief, that the debt owing by him to the defendant, or the supposed property of the defendant in his hands, has been sold or assigned to a third person, and the plaintiff contests or disputes the existence, force or validity of such sale or assignment, the court shall make an order upon the supposed vendee or assignee to appear at a designated time and sustain his claim to the property or debt." This statute is held to be directory only, and the court had "the right under the pleadings to pronounce upon them, in the absence of the claimant, as neither party had demanded that he should be brought before the court." McKittrick v. Clemens, 52 Mo., loc. cit. 163; Swartz v. Riner, 66 Mo. App. 476; Lindsay v. Brooks, 82 Mo. App. 801.

There is a further contention by appellant that, as the garnishee was the claimant's agent, his possession at the time of the service of the garnishment was the possession of such claimant; and that, therefore, the judgment against him was wholly unauthorized. It is true that possession of the agent as a fiction of law is often treated as the possession of the principal, but this rule does not apply in cases like this, where the object is to seize or detain the res which is the subject-matter of litigation.

There was only one issue in the case, viz.: Was Vincent Cooksey indebted to George Cooksey for the purchase price of the land at the time of service of garnishment? And the case should be tried on that issue alone.

Reversed and remanded. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; L. J. Eastin, Judge.

Action by Mary F. Murphy against the St. Joseph Railway, Light, Heat & Power Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Mytton & Parkinson, for appellant. R. A. Brown, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff seeks damages from defendant, a street railway company in St. Joseph, for personal injuries inflicted by one of its cars. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence given for plaintiff.

The evidence in plaintiff's behalf tended to prove that she was a woman 68 years of age and was returning to her home with some provisions she had purchased from a nearby grocery. She was wearing a sunbonnet, and in consequence her vision to either side was greatly obstructed. When she came on the street near the place where she was injured, a car had just passed going south on the west track and stopped on the south side of the street. The car was standing there when plaintiff left the sidewalk to cross the street in which were the defendant's tracks. She did not look for a northbound car on the east track, but continued towards the tracks. She crossed the west track, and had just put her foot on the west rail of the east track, when she was struck by the northbound car. She walked slowly, and gave no evidence of knowledge of approaching danger. It is conceded she was guilty of negligence in not looking out for the car and avoiding a collision; but it is claimed that defendant's motorman saw her dangerous position, or should have seen it, in time to have stopped the car, and that therefore she made out a case within the humanitarian rule. We think the claim well made. There is no reasonable ground upon which to distinguish the case from that of Waddell v. Ry. Co., 213 Mo. 8, 111 S. W. 542.

Defendant in argument endeavored to show that plaintiff's action in stopping a moment between the tracks was evidence to the motorman that she would not get into danger; but in point of fact there was evidence which tended to prove she was then in danger, unless the car stopped. If the testimony in plaintiff's behalf is to be accepted as true, the motorman should have seen her dangerous position, and could have stopped the car in time to have avoided striking her.

A case was made for the opinion of a jury, and the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 635*)—RECORD—FACTS—ABSTRACT.

The failure of an abstract of the record to show the taking of an appeal justifies a dismissal of the appeal for want of jurisdiction.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by Ethel N. Claver and another against the Woodmen of the World. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Casteel & Bennett, for appellant. Brewster, Farrell & Mayer, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This suit is founded on a death benefit certificate issued by defendant, a fraternal beneficiary society. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. After the submission of the cause, respondent filed a motion to dismiss the appeal on the grounds that the abstract of record filed by appellant fails to show the filing of an affidavit for appeal, motion for a new trial, motion in arrest, or bill of exceptions, and fails to show any ruling on motions for a new trial or in arrest, or that time was granted in which to file bill of exceptions.

We find the abstract to be deficient as charged in this motion. Respondent in answer to the motion confesses the insufficiency, and asks leave to file a supplemental abstract.

The failure of the appellant to show in his abstract the record entries relating to the bill of exceptions would not justify us in dismissing the appeal, since the cause would still be before us on the record proper; but the failure of the abstract to show the taking of an appeal is fatal to our jurisdiction over the cause and compels us to sustain the motion to dismiss. We do not think the appellant has disclosed a good reason for leave to file a supplemental abstract (Harding v. Bedoll, 202 Mo. 625, 100 S. W. 638; Redd v. Railroad, 122 Mo. App. 93, 98 S. W. 89), and the application for such leave is denied.

The order of submission is set aside, and the appeal dismissed. All concur.

DAWSON v. QUINOY, O. & K. C. R. CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 229*) — CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK — NEGLIGENT DELAY — MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

A shipper of cattle is entitled to recover compensation for the actual loss he suffers on account of the negligent delay of the carrier, which loss may consist of depreciation in market value, of loss in weight, and of loss on account of the stale appearance of the animals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 963, 964; Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 228*) — CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—NEGLIGENT DELAY—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a carrier for negligent delay in shipping cattle, a finding for plaintiff for the loss occasioned by the decline in the market between the time his cattle should have arrived and did arrive could not be sustained, where plaintiff did not show at what price he sold the cattle, but only proved the highest market price on the two dates, as neither the court or jury have the right to indulge in speculation or inference to supply an indispensable fact in the chain of proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 960; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 909*)—PRESUMPTIONS—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—NEGLIGENT DELAY—ASSUMPTION AS TO PRICE OBTAINED.

Nor could it be assumed on appeal that he sold for the highest market price on the day of the sale, as the court cannot say as a matter of law that he did not obtain a higher price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3675; Dec. Dig. § 909.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 228*) — CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—NEGLIGENT DELAY—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Nor could plaintiff recover for loss occasioned by the stale appearance of the cattle caused by such negligent delay, where it was not shown that the cattle were rendered stale by the delay, or that plaintiff on that account was compelled to sell them for a less price than otherwise should have been received.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 960; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Clinton County; A. D. Burnes, Judge.

Action by J. Lee Dawson against the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

H. T. Herndon and J. G. Trimble, for appellant. Pross T. Cross, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. Plaintiff shipped two car loads of fat cattle over defendant's railroad from Trimble, Mo., to the Union stockyards at Chicago. The shipment left Trimble in the afternoon of October 5, 1903, and did not arrive at its destination until the afternoon of October 7th—too late for the market of that day. Plaintiff alleges that in the ordinary course of transportation the cattle should have reached the stockyards in time for sale on the market of October 7th, and that the delay was caused by the negligence of defendant. The evidence introduced by plaintiff tends to prove these allegations. A trial to a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $200.67, and the cause is here on the appeal of defendant.

No point is made that the petition does not state a cause of action, or that the evidence of plaintiff is not sufficient to take the case to the jury on the issue of negligence; but it is argued by defendant that the evidence of plaintiff fails completely to show that plaintiff suffered any damage on account of the delay, and therefore that he should not have been permitted to recover more than nominal damages. The petition alleges that plaintiff was damaged $74.67 on account of depreciation in the market value of cattle, $76.22 on account of loss in weight suffered by the cattle from the negligent delay, $49.78 on account of the stale condition and appearance of the cattle caused by the delay, and $5 on account of extra feed. The last item appears to have been abandoned at the trial. On the measure of damages the court, at the request of plaintiff, instructed the jury "that, if they find for the plaintiff, they will assess his damages at such sum as they may believe from the evidence he has sustained, by reason of the negligent delay in shipping, as follows: First. For any loss to plaintiff occasioned by any decline in the market at Chicago, if any, between the time plaintiff's cattle should have arrived and the time they did arrive, provided you find from the evidence said cattle did not arrive within a reasonable time, not to exceed the amount sued for on that account, $74.67. Second. For any shrink in the weight of said cattle, over and above the ordinary and usual shrinkage of like cattle, from being shipped from the said station of Quincy to Chicago, if any, over the road of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, not to exceed the sum of $76.22. Third. For any loss to plaintiff occasioned by the stale appearance of said cattle, if any, caused by such negligent delay, if any, on the part of and while on the road of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company in shipping, not to exceed the sum of $49.78. The whole amount of your verdict not to exceed the sum of $200.67."

It will be observed that the verdict of the jury was for the full amount of damages claimed by plaintiff. The rule for the measurement of damages in such cases is as stated in this instruction. The shipper is entitled to recover compensation for the actual loss he suffers on account of the negligent delay of the carrier. Such loss may consist of depreciation in market value, of loss in weight, and of loss on account of the stale appearance of the animals. But the trouble with the plaintiff's case is that he has failed to adduce any evidence to support the first and third of the items claimed. Relative to the first, he testified: "Q. Mr. Dawson, you say you sold your cattle on the 8th? A. The 7th. No; I sold them on the 8th: yes, sir. Q. State whether or not you are acquainted with the best market prices for cattle of the kind and character yours was in the Chicago market on the 8th day of October, 1903, the day on which you sold them? A. Well, there was a decline in the market. Q. I asked you if you were acquainted with the best price on the day you sold them? A. $5.15. Q. You are acquainted with the prices? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was it? A. $5.15. Q. Were you acquainted with the best market price for cattle of this kind and class on the 7th, the day before you sold them? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was it then? A. $5.30." But he does not state, nor does the record show, at what price he sold his cattle. We are asked by counsel for plaintiff to assume that he sold them at the highest market price on the day of the sale. We cannot do this for the reason that we cannot say as a matter of law that he did not obtain a higher price. It devolved on him to prove his damages, and neither court nor jury have the right to indulge in speculation or inference to supply an indispensable fact in the chain of proof; and, further, should we assume that plaintiff sold at the highest market price for the class of cattle to which his belonged, then on what theory can the award of damages for the stale appearance of the animals be sustained? If the highest market value was realized, it is obvious no loss was incurred on account of their stale appearance, and that part of the verdict clearly was erroneous.

With reference to the third item plaintiff testified: "Q. Are you acquainted with the effect it had on cattle, if any, such as these were, to keep them in cars for a long period of time and hold them over on the market? A. Yes, sir; it gives them a stale appearance. Their hair looks bad, and it makes a difference in price." It is not shown that the cattle in question were rendered stale by the delay, or that plaintiff on such account was compelled to sell them for a less price than otherwise should have been received.

Thus it appears that with reference to the first and third items of damage the verdict, being wholly unsustained by evidence, is the mere product of conjecture, and it follows that the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

KEINSTRA v. KING.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 17, 1909.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 207*)—RENT—LIABILITY.

An owner leased premises to individuals, who formed a corporation, and assigned the lease to the corporation. The property of the corporation was sold by a receiver, and a new corporation was organized, and was recognized as tenant. The president of the new corporation paid the rent by his individual check. The new corporation, while the president so paid the rent, carried on its business on the premises. Held, that the new corporation occupied the premises, and was the tenant, and the president was not liable for future rent, in the absence of evidence that he used the corporation which he controlled to evade personal liability.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Chas. Claffin Allen, Judge.

Action by Anton Keinstra against John C. King. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

This action was instituted before a justice of the peace, whence it proceeded to the circuit court. It is an action for three months' rent, to wit, from October 1, 1906, to January 1, 1907, at $8.33½ a month for part of lot No. 1 of Ashland, a subdivision of part of the January farm in the city of Ferguson, county of St. Louis, and state of Missouri, being the same property described in the lease of said Keinstra to George W. Downs and others, dated June 1, 1895, so the complaint says. The written lease shows plaintiff had let the premises to George W. Downs, John M. Ashbrook, and Olive P. Downs on June 1, 1895, for a term commencing that day and to end June 1, 1912, at an annual rental of $100, payable in monthly installments of $8.33½. Those lessees formed a corporation known as the "Olive Branch Electric Company," in which the lessees owned the stock, and with the consent of plaintiff, the lessor, they assigned the lease to said company. That company erected an electric plant on the ground, and operated the plant until some time in 1898, we understand, when a receiver was appointed for it, and afterwards the property was sold by the receiver under an order of court and purchased by Ida A. King, defendant's wife. She conveyed the property to the King Electric Company, a corporation, and that corporation executed a deed of trust to her to secure the purchase money of $10,000. The King Electric Company, of which defendant was president, operated the plant until 1901, or about three years, when it established a new plant at De Hodiamont and Bartmer avenues in St. Louis. The machinery of the plant on the leased property was moved out, but the buildings, a shed, and some poles were left on the leased property. While the King Electric Company was in possession, some time after it abandoned possession and up to the maturity of the installment in suit, King, the president, paid the rent with his own checks most of the time, but he testified he paid out of the funds of the company, as he did other debts of the company. In every instance, save one, plaintiff gave receipts for the rent to King. Mrs. King paid the rent for a while with her personal checks plaintiff testified. King refused to pay the rent in controversy, saying he had nothing more to do with the property; that he had sold out his interest. It does not appear the lease, which had previously been assigned to the Olive Branch Electric Company, had ever been assigned to Mrs. King or the King Electric Company. The King Electric Company is still in existence operating a plant at De Hodiamont. Defendant and his wife each owned 49 shares of the King Electric stock and their son owned two shares. After the death of Mrs. King defendant owned 98 shares, and, the son having died also, two men named Herman and Grossman each owned a share. At the request of defendant, the court gave the following declarations of law: "The court declares the law to be that the defendant is not liable for the rent here sued for under or by reason of the lease read in evidence. The court declares the law to be that if the court finds from the evidence that the only acts of control which the defendant exercised over the premises involved in this suit were as president of the King Electric Company, and that said company was a corporation, then plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and the finding must be in favor of the defendant. The court instructs that the mere fact that Mr. King's personal check was used in paying the rent of the premises in question does not entitle plaintiff to recover in this suit. The court declares the law to be that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that at the time of the institution of this suit the relation of landlord and tenant existed between plaintiff and defendant as to the premises involved in this suit. The court declares the law to be that if the court finds from the evidence that when this suit was instituted the King Electric Company was in possession of the premises here in question, and that the rent of said premises was paid by defendant King as president of said company or in its behalf, then plaintiff cannot recover in this action. The court declares the law to be that, if the court finds from the evidence that the defendant John C. King was never individually or by agent in possession of the premises here in question, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and the finding must be in favor of the defendant." No declarations were given at plaintiff's request, but the court found a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

Kinealy & Kinealy, for appellant. Jas. W. Settle, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The way the court declared the law leaves but one ground on which defendant can be held personally liable for the rent; i. e., that the relation of landlord and tenant had become established between plaintiff and defendant by the latter's use and occupation of the premises. The court declared defendant was not liable by virtue of the written lease, or if the only acts of control he exercised over the premises were as president of the company; that the relation of landlord and tenant between him and plaintiff must have existed to lay him liable; that if the King Electric Company was in possession of the premises and defendant paid rent as president of said company, plaintiff could not recover, and, if defendant never was as an individual, or by agent, in possession of the premises, plaintiff could not recover. We can conceive of no possible theory under which defendant can be made liable in view of those declarations, unless he was found to have been personally in the use and occupation of the premises and the tenant of plaintiff. Cohen v. Kyler, 27 Mo. 123; Hynes v. Ecker, 34 Mo. App. 650, 658. The difficulty with this theory is there is no testimony to show defendant was ever as an individual in occupation of the premises or tenant of plaintiff. Plaintiff's own testimony shows he let to other individuals, permitted them to assign the lease to the Olive Branch Company, and, after that company had sold out under a receiver, and Mrs. King had purchased, and a new company, the King Electric, had been organized, recognized the latter as tenant and in possession, and had accepted rent first from Mrs. King and then from King. It is true he testified they paid by personal checks, but we regard this as an immaterial circumstance; for he swore the King Electric Company carried on business in the plant for five or six years, then moved the machinery away, and left the buildings there. Plainly under all the testimony it was the King Electric Company, and not defendant, who used and occupied the premises, and was the tenant of plaintiff. The point has not been made that defendant is liable for the rent as owner of practically the entire stock of the corporation, and, as far as the evidence shows, there were at least two other stockholders when this rent accrued who were not even members of defendant's family. Sometimes when an individual attempts to use a corporation which he substantially owns and controls as a cloak to evade personal liability, a court will disregard the corporate existence. Cook, Corporations (6th Ed.) §§ 6, 663. Nothing had been advanced to show this case ought to be determined on that proposition.

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

WARNER et al. v. MICHEL et al.
(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 156*)—OVERRULING DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

Overruling a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence means only that as a matter of law there is some evidence to be weighed; so that there is no incongruity in doing so, and then finding for defendant on an equity count, and setting aside the verdict for plaintiff on a count at law, and granting a new trial thereon, this meaning that the evidence, when weighed by the court, was unsatisfactory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 354; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 72*)—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence being conflicting, the trial court, considering the verdict contrary to the weight of evidence, could set it aside, and grant a new trial.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; O'Neill Ryan, Judge.

Action by Franceska Warner and another against Frank H. Michel and others. From an adverse judgment and orders, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

The petition in this case contains two counts, the first asking the cancellation of the record of a certain deed of trust given by plaintiffs, it being averred that the debt secured thereby had been paid and discharged in full, and that the plaintiffs had tendered the necessary fee fixed by law to entitle them to have the satisfaction of the deed of trust indorsed on the record thereof. In the second count, averring the payment of the debt secured by the deed of trust in full and the tender of the legal fee for the release thereof on the margin of the record, along with a demand that the release be indorsed, and averring the refusal of the defendants to release the deed of trust of record, plaintiffs demand the statutory penalty of 10 per cent. of the debt as damages for failure so to do. The answer admitted the execution of the notes and deed of trust, but denied all other allegations in the petition. The petition embracing legal and equitable causes of action in separate counts, by stipulation of parties and consent of the court both counts were tried at one and the same time, a jury being impaneled to try the issue involved in the second count of the petition, the court hearing the evidence as chancellor, so far as it related to the first count. At the conclusion of the trial, the court found, in favor of defendants on the first count, thus holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have the deed of trust released of record.
